Is our image slipping?

Some people may have us wrong. It's possible.

For instance, we Paulists are known for the printed and the spoken word. Books, radio, and TV. The glamorous world.

But there is another, bigger world in which the Paulist moves . . .

A dusty corner in Utah where Paulists offer material and spiritual relief to migrant workers.

An area known as East Village and a Paulist who understands the meaning of "taking a trip."

A Newman Center on a troubled college campus and a priest who is not a judge but an understanding ear and a mediator.

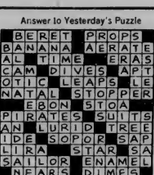
Frosh Host B&S, Vie For Sixth Win

By STEVE FERBER
Staff Reporter

Sporting a 5-0 record, the Little Redmen hoopsters face Bryant & Stratton tonight at 6 p.m. The fourth home contest for the freshmen will feature a 2-3 Bryant & Stratton squad with two outstanding performers.

Ted Hathaway and Tommy Smith will lead the visitors into the Cage tonight, and Hathaway, a guard, has to his credit a 42 point performance this season to establish a school high.



In its five contests Bryant & Stratton has faced Leicester, St. Anselm's, Becker Junior College, Dean Junior College, and Stonehill, and have emerged victorious over St. Anselm's, 67-46, and Dean Junior College. As the sole means of comparison, the UMass frosh defeated St. Anselm's by a mark of 85-69, in their first game of the year.

Averaging over 84 points a game, the Bryant & Stratton squad has broken the 100-point mark twice this season. The Little Redmen have averaged 83 points a game, but have yielded only 60, while their opponents have given up 80 points per fray.

The Liddle Redmen hope to reproduce the 50% field goal shooting that they have displayed thus far, and smoother play in the way of turnovers and fast breaks will also be key factors for the frosh in stopping Hathaway and Smith.

Harriers Narrowly Defeated By Brown, 58-51

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

Keeping a considerable number of UMass students from taking an early exit home for the traditional holiday festivities is an 8 p.m. basketball game at the Cage tonight and one that could be a good one as the undefeated Redman cagers tussle with a 5-2 Hofstra University squad.

Although each of UMass' three home contests thus far this year have been runaways for the Redmen (with UMass defeating St. Anselm's 98-63, New Hampshire 89-53 and American International College 93-40---for a lopsided overall count of 280 points for and only 156 points against at the Cage), words of caution have preceeded tonight's appearance of the Flying Dutchmen.

Most of the concern has arisen from the knowledge that Hofstra owns a big win over Temple University on the latter's home court, an overtime affair whose final count was 74-72. The significance surrounding this victory comes from the fact that it was Temple's first home-floor loss in 18 years. There is a qualifier to this point, and that is that the Owls play a lot of their home games at the University of Pennsylvania's Palestra, these tilts not being included on the 18-year record.

Outside of the Temple topple, Hoftra's other four wins have come against lesser knowns. The Flying Dutchmen have outpointed Wilkes College, 89-75, Southampton, 60-57, Sacred Heart, 91-88, and Drexel University, 74-61. Not many of these decisions are impressive, especially the ones over Southampton and Sacred Heart.

Hoftra's losses have come to Rider College, 79-73, and Akron, 75-67. Hofstra is a Middle Atlantic Conference team and currently leads the eastern division of this league with a 2-0 record.

The most interesting of the Flying Dutchman starters is one Quinas Brower, a 6'6 junior forward from a familiar place, Roosevelt, N.Y., home town of the Redmen's Julius Erving. Brower went to Roosevelt High School just like Erving, and went out for the school hoop squad just like Erving. Unlike Erving, Brower didn't make the team, getting cut by Ray Wilson, now one of UMass' assistant basketball coaches.

Anyway, Brower has reversed his basketball fortunes, has made the Hofstra team, and is one of its starters, currently averaging 11.9 points and 12.1 rebounds a game. This guy is a good jumper and has worked a lot with weights to build up his strength. He will probably perform the center taps for the Dutchmen tonight.

The big pointmen for Hofstra are Rich Link, a 6'6 senior forward, and Dave Bell, a 6'8 junior center. Link has had high-scoring nights of 29 and 27 against Rider and Temple this winter. His average overall is 15.4. He is mostly noted for his prowess on defense.

Bell is the number one Flying Dutchman scorer. He averaged 20.5 points last season and is going at a 18 ppg clip so far this year. His best games have been 24 and 22 versus Rider and Drexel. A great shooter, his field goal percentage of .584 was eighth best in the land last year.

In the backcourt are juniors Bob McKillop at 6'1, and Jim Pugh at 5'11. McKillop is an excellent ballhandler who is averaging an even 11 points thus far. Pugh is a carbon copy of McKillop, except he doesn't score as much. Rated Hofstra's best dribbler in many years, his scoring average is only 5.6.

A couple of other Flying Dutchmen who will see action are Al Wolfson, a 6'3 sophomore guard, and Tom Kelleher, a 6'4 junior guard. Both are averaging about six points this campaign.

In countering Hofstra, UMass will go with the starters that have brought it this far along the unbeaten path, that being frontcourters Chris Coffin, Ken Mathias and Erving, and backcourters John Betancourt and Mike Pagliara.

Redmen Tussle With Hofstra Tonight

PROVIDENCE, R.I. - A split second decision in the 50 yard dash kept the UMass track team out of the winners column for the second straight week as the Redmen were defeated, 58-51, by Brown University here on Saturday.

The decision in question happened in the finals of the dash when it appeared that a Brown sprinter had false started for his second time, which should have resulted in his disqualification. However, it went unnoticed by the Brown officials, who were the only ones at the meet who didn't notice the false start, and it resulted in a ten-point difference that would have given the Redmen a three-point victory.

Barring this, coach Ken O'Brien was very pleased with the performances of his trackmen. They showed improvement over last week's performances and stayed in the meet all the way until the next to last event, the mile relay, where it took the heptagonal quarter mile champ to overcome a Brown deficit on the final leg to bring about a Bruin victory.

Individually Ron Wayne, Rick Barry, Larry Paulson, and Eddie Arcaro turned in yeoman performances for the Redmen.

Wayne turned in a gutsy triple, winning the mile and two mile in times of 4:23 and 9:29 and then came back after the two-mile with only a half hour's rest and ran a 1:57 half mile on the third leg of the victorious two-mile relay team.

Barry ran a difficult double, coming in second in the two-mile in 9:32 and also coming back only a half hour later to run a 2:01 half on the second leg of the two-mile relay.

Paulson finished second in the mile in 4:24 and finished up the meet anchoring the two-mile relay team with a two minute flat half, holding off a strong bid by his Brown rival with a powerful stretch run over the last quarter mile.

Arcaro got the Redmen off to a good start with a victory in the 35-pound weight throw, and then came back to take a second in the shot with a toss of 49' 6".

Other winners for the Redmen were Jim Graves in the hurdles, Ed Shaughnessey in the high jump and Dick Dyer in the long jump.

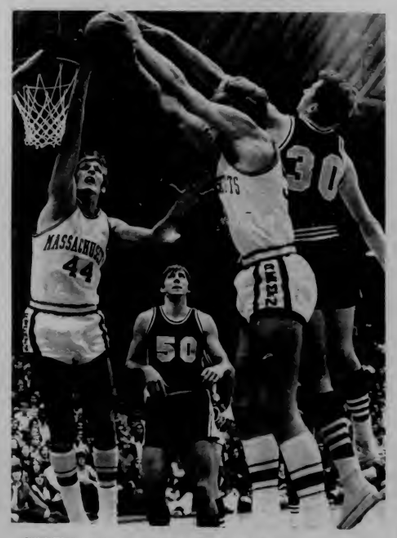
Graves defeated two Brown hurdlers, who has previously not been beaten by the opposition, in posting his winning time of 5.9 seconds.

Shaughnessey jumped a personal best of 6'6" in his winning performance, and Dyer leaped 21'4" in his first competition since recovering from a leg injury.

Those who performed well although not winning were Emerson Hiller who took third in the pole vault, Bill Hackler, also third in his event, the high jump, and the three sprinters, Tony Pendleton, Ron Harris, and Kevin Filley, who came within a split second of sweeping the dash.

First places were fairly evenly split between UMass and Brown as the Redmen took seven firsts and the Bruins six. The bulk of the UMass points came in the distances, the sprint, the jumps, and the weight throws.

In freshman competition the UMass frosh took Brown to the final event, the two-mile relay, before bowing, 56-52,to the Bruin frosh.



The freshmen showed a tremendous improvement over last week's performance at Yale and O'Brien was very happy with this.

Donald Hartford and Steve Crimmins were double winners for the frosh, Hartford taking the long jump and pole vault and the latter winning the hurdles and high jump.

Doug O'Connell and Rich Sevigny finished one-two in the mile. Mike Teasdale and Gene Costello finished one-three in the 600, an d Roger Nasatka and Joe Frontiero took two-three in the two-mile.

Teasdale and Costello also ran legs in the victorious mile, relay team.

Both the varsity and the freshmen have over a month off before their next scheduled dual meet against Dartmouth on February 10, at Hanover. In between these tracksters will be competing in some of the major track meets in the East, including the BAA in Boston and the K of C meet in New York City.

POSITION COUNTS—UMass hoopsters Charlie Peters (50) and Rick Vogeley (44) outposition their AIC opponents George Kastrinakis (50) and John O'Hara (30) for a rebound in last Friday night's romp over the Yellow Jackets. Peters, in a substitute role, scored seven points and collected six rebounds. Vogeley has become the Redmen's sixth man and has come in some crucial situations this season, most notably Vermont, and collected some key hoops and rebounds in the Redman's undefeated campaign. Tonight, UMass plays host to the Flying Dutchmen of Hofstra in quest of its seventh straight victory. The Redmen have won sixteen consecutive regular season tilts and will set a new UMass record with a victory tonight. (MDC photo by Gary Slickman)

Frosh Pucksters Drop Fourth, Fall To Harvard In OT, 4-3

UMass' freshman hockey team lost its fourth game last Saturday, but it came at the hands of a tough Harvard frosh squad and in overtime, 4-3. The loss gave the Little Redmen a mark of 1-4.

Harvard's record moved up to 6-0 as this freshman squad is considered to be among the best of its kind in New England. In drawing Harvard into overtime, UMass played an excellent game.

At the end of the first period the score was knotted at 1-1, the Little Redman goal being scored by Jim Lynch. In the second period, the Harvard frosh pushed ahead by two, 3-1. UMass had one answer in this stanza, a Tony Lyons score on assists by John Knox and Jim Coleman.

Holding the strong Harvards scoreless for the rest of regulation play, UMass was able to tie things up in the third period as Gene Sullivan tipped in a Lynch slap shot, and the contest was destined for OT.

The overtime segment is ten minutes long, and Harvard needed nine minutes and six seconds of it before it could notch the victory.

UMass coach Russell Kidd was extremely pleased with his team's performance and feels the team will show definite improvement the rest of the season as it has most of its toughest opponents behind it. About Saturday's Little Redman performance, he commented, "They played a real gutsy game, the whole bunch of them."

Chick Rheault, UMass' goalie, made 32 saves in this tilt, a very good night. His rival, the Harvard goalie, had 23 saves.

The undefeated Redman basketball squad will be playing in the Hall of Fame tournament in Springfield beginning December 28. A preview of UMass possible opponents will appear in tomorrow's MDC. Also appearing will be brief looks at UMass' intersession foes, Boston U. and Providence.

Angela Davis Moved To Calif. For Trial

SAN RAFAEL, Calif. (AP) - Angela Davis, militant black intellectual charged with murder and kidnaping, was taken toward California Tuesday in a secrecy shrouded extradition flight from New York in a California Air National Guard plane.

Her destination, the heavily guarded Marin County Jail, is on the third floor of the same rambling building where a Superior Court judge, two convicts and an accomplice were shot dead last Aug. 7during an escape attempt.

The state charges that Miss Davis, 26 year old former UCLA philosophy instructor and avowed Communist, conspired in the plot and furnished all four of the guns used in the break.

Arrested in a New York motel Oct. 13 with a male companion, she lost her fight against extradition Monday when U.S. Supreme Court Justice John Harlan refused to intervene. Her return was arranged swiftly and with extreme security precautions.

She was removed from the Women's House of Detention in New York's Greenwich Village at 3:05 a.m., EST and placed in one of a fleet of cars containing law officers.

The cars drove off in different directions, apparently to confuse possible pursuers. The car containing the prisoner went through the Holland Tunnel under the Hudson River, where all westbound traffic has been stopped.

It sped to McGuire Air Force Base, 12 miles from Trenton, N.J.

There the party boarded a four engine propeller plane of the California Air National Guard, which took off at 5:30 a.m., for the slow flight back to California.

Alerted long before dawn, the Marin County Sheriff's office set up elaborate precautions for her arrival.

A National Guard information officer in Sacramento said the flight was made at the request of the Marin County district attorney's office but was logged as a training flight.

Miss Davis and Ruchell Magee, 31, a San Quentin convict who was wounded in the Aug. 7 gun battle, are under indictment for murder, kidnaping and conspiracy.

Superior Court Judge Harold J. Haley, 65; convicts James D. McClain, 37, and William Christmas, 27, were killed in the attempted break from Haley's courtroom, along with Jonathan Jackson, 17, who brought the guns into the court. Under California law, Miss Davis can be charged even though not present at the scene.

Problems Predicted For 18-Year-Old Vote Law

By the Associated Press

Election officials in state after state said Monday they foresee problems in the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling that 18 year olds may vote in federal elections but that Congress has no power to order states to lower the voting age, too.

One official predicted that separate elections would have to be held for state and federal officials. Others said separate ballots would be issued to the 18 year olds. Still others said action would be stepped up to bring states in line with the federal law and thereby enable 18 year olds to vote in all elections.

Many voter registrars said they would have to revise their records so as to keep separate lists, one of voters eligible to vote in presidential and congressional elections and the other list to be of voters eligible to vote in state and local elections.

The Oregon Atty. Gen. Lee Johnson, who had argued before the U.S. Supreme Court against lowering the voting age to 18, said: "Congress has an obligation to rectify the imposition of an intolerable administrative burden upon the states. As result of the court's decision, states will now have to hold separate elections for national officials and state and local officials...This will be administratively difficult and will result in considerable cost to the taxpayers."

The high court upheld the provision of the 1970 Federal Voting Rights Law giving the vote to 18 year olds in presidential and congressional elections. But it said, too, that Congress has no power to order the states to allow 18 year olds to vote in state and local elections.

However, Oregon is one of the states that will try to bring its law into conformity with the federal regulations. Secretary of State Clay Myers said he will ask the legislature to ask for constitutional change to permit 18 year olds to vote in all elections.

Manson Women Ousted From Court

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Charles Manson's three women codefendants at the Sharon Tate murder trial were dragged from court Tuesday, shouting and resisting bailiffs, after interrupting closing arguments. The prosecutor swore and swung at one.

The second ejection of the day for the three long haired young women came at a session marked by strengthened security measures, and searching of spectators and newsmen. Sheriff's desputies declined comment on reports the judge had received a telephoned threat.

The three women had been readmitted for the afternoon session after being bounced for disruptive conduct in the morning.

Defendant Leslie Van Houten arose as Deputy Dist. Atty. Vincent Bugliosi for the second day reviewed testimony and evidence for the jury. Facing jurors, the 20 year old brunette said: "Ladies and gentlemen of the jury I have a defense to put on."

"Wait a while, Wait a while. Wait a while," Bugliosi shouted. "Take the stand if you want to testify."

The judge ordered her out and as she left she shouted at the prosecutor, "I've been trying to do that take the stand and you know it." The defense rested its case without calling any witnesses.

When Bugliosi resumed, discussing testimony by Barbara Hoyt, a former member of Manson's hippie style family, defendant Susan Atkins, 22 arose and cried, "Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, Barbara Hoyt is supposed to have had LSD."

The judge ordered her out, but she fought and kicked deputies, flailing her arms. As she passed Bugliosi's podium she reached for his notes.

He swung his arm at her, not connecting, and said: "You bitch."

After Bugliosi resumed for a third time, defendant Patricia Krenwinkel, 22, screamed at spectators, "You people and your greed have tried to make us a product." As she was dragged out by two bailiffs she yelled, "You people are going to be eaten up by your own lies."

Manson, 36, ejected during the morning session, did not return to court in the afternoon.

The judge called attorneys to the bench for a conference, then Bugliosi resumed his argument with the defendants listening via loudspeaker in adjoining rooms.

Nixon Decision Due On Pollution

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon is expected to disclose soon whether he will sign the toughest air pollution bill ever passed by Congress, a measure so sweeping it could affect the life style of every American.

The betting on Capitol Hill seems to be that Nixon will approve the far reaching and politically significant measure even though he does not approve all of its many provisions.

The protection of public health is the guiding philosophy behind the final version of the bill, finally cleared by Congress last week.

The economic and technological feasibility of achieving that goal purposely has been given second place at best.

Largely inspired by Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D Maine, with many provisions requested by Nixon, the bill has a set of legal teeth that could cause the closing of polluting factories, shut down auto production lines, cause the banning of cars from congested big city areas and send willful polluters of the air to jail.

It might even result in clean or cleaner air-someday-hopefully in this decade. The bill that is now at the White House awaiting the President's signature is the compromise product of a three month long House Senate conference.

It goes further than the President wanted in several respects. The most significant of these is the bill's most disputed aspect: The setting of an absolute five year or else deadline for the production of the first clean cars, automobiles that would emit 90 per cent less noxious pollutants than present new cars.

The bill allows a one year, once only extension of the deadline to Jan. 1, 1976 and orders that it be granted only if the auto industry is able to prove that after a good faith effort, it has not been able to produce the needed technology.

Most political observers believe a presidential veto is unlikely on legislation concerning so volatile a political issue. Such a course would result also in an explosive confrontation between the President and Muskie, the Democrat who is now the frontrunner to capture his party's 1972 presidential nomination.

The bill calls for spending about $3 billion over three years to finance the government's antipollution drive and lend impetus to state and local efforts. And it gives weight to the effort to quell a new kind of pollution of the air: Noise.

Fire Forces Evacuation

An overheated cable leading to a heating unit caused a smoldering fire in the horse barn late last night forcing the evacuation of all the University horses kept there.

UMass police and Amherst Fire Trucks responded to the minor blaze at approximately 10:40 p.m. Amherst sent three engines.

The horses were lead to the adjacent Grinnell building during the evacuation. Some of the horses were tied to the fence, where they stood nervously with cold feet.

The fire was located in the crawl-cellar of the barn. Several rubber buckets were utilized by three of the thinner firemen to douse the smoldering hay and timbers.

The quick response of the police and fire units apparently prevented the flame from bursting into a major blaze.

Donahue Named To Two UMass Posts

State Senator President Maurice A. Donahue has accepted two positions at UMass--Director of the new Institute for Governmental Service, and Commonwealth Professor of Practical Politics-President Robert C. Wood announced today in Boston.

The appointment as Commonwealth Professor was made on the recommendation of Chancellor Oswald Tippo, and Professor Glen Gordon, chairman of the Department of Government on behalf of the Department. The Institute directorship is a University-wide appointment.

They become effective January 15, 1971, after the Holyoke Democrat's term as Massachusetts Senate President expires.

The University's Institute for Governmental Service--unique in the Commonwealth--has been established to study and help solve the problems of municipal governments throughout the State.

"Senate President Donahue will bring to both positions a lifetime of effective service and practical experience in public affairs," President Wood stated.

"More important in my judgment, however, are his demonstrated interests in changing and improving public services, and his keen analytical ability in making public policy work. These qualities assure an effective marriage between academic knowledge and practical application that will benefit the State and its citizens," he said.

In announcing the creation of the Institute, Dr. Wood, who was named 17th President of the University May 13, 1970, and inaugurated earlier this month, said, "Its principal purpose is to help public officials in the Commonwealth solve pressing problems that now confront them."

He emphasized that "Along with its teaching and research obligations, the University, supported by state funds, must make an effort to provide services to the citizens of the state.

"The knowledge of the University can be of great benefit in aiding government agencies in the development of programs for better health, welfare, transportation, and environment," President Wood said.

Plans for the Institute were undertaken last year by a Working Committee of the Trustees, chaired by Robert Gordon, with representatives from the campuses. The proposal of the Committee was approved by the UMass Board of Trustees in August, 1970.

It will operate on a University-wide basis. Apart from a core staff, it will draw participants from all three campuses in Amherst, Boston and Worcester.

"I believe the Institute can focus the activities and interest of members of the University in serving the public," President Wood said.

During his 20 years in the Senate, Senator Donahue has sponsored many major bills in support of education that were enacted. Among these: Willis-Harrington Commission on Education, establishment of the UMass Boston campus and Worcester Medical School, State scholarships for needy students, Commission to improve vocational education, study programs of urban school systems, and extend educational facilities in Massachusetts.

He holds an A.B. from Holy Cross College, and a Masters in Education from Springfield College. He has taught in the Holyoke school system, and has lectured extensively in high schools, colleges and universities, and at educational and governmental seminars.

Howland Leads Campus Criticism Of Board's Housing Decision

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Asst. News Editor

"One may contemplate whether the federal government should continue to provide supportive funds to a state institution which practices discrimination according to sex and class (without relationship to age)", said Atty. Richard M. Howland yesterday in reaction to the Board of Trustees' decision not to allow freshmen in Co-Ed dorms.

The Trustee action has caused considerable reaction within the Amherst community, most of which will be held in strict confidence. One top administrator did point out however, that the Trustees Subcommittee on Student Life, chaired by Mrs. Rowland, did approve the freshmen co-ed proposal unanimously, and that Mrs. Rowland stated publicly after the vote last Monday, that she was "distressed" about the Board's rejection. She is expected to bring the motion to the Board again at a later date.

One administration source observed that the meeting was well attended, giving the conservative side of the Board a slight edge. "The two trustees not present at the meeting were liberals", the source said.

The Student Senate hired Howland found himself "troubled" with the decision because of the "legal implications of such segregation practiced by a duly constituted State authority."

Howland questioned whether the Board is not in violation of the "equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment."

"The action of the Board of Trustees does not appear to me to be justifiable by any (legal) standard or rigorous test, but rather seems to be motivated by anachronistic and puritanical fears which are consistent with neither the times, the culture nor the present state of the law," Howland said, emphasizing that the principles involved in the 14th amendment mean "that each and every man and woman is entitled to being treated absolutely evenly with every other person."

"It makes you wonder about the quality of an educational institution that practices 18th century moralistic segregation." Howland mused.

A usually reliable authority, said that the Board may be a little inaccurate in their use of the term "freshmen" in co-ed dorms. "The convention of using the term freshmen for the entire first two semesters is just a convention," he argued, "A student entering the second semester of his college career is, should be designated a "former".

This, he pointed out, would allow students who have been in the University one semester to live in a co-ed dorm.

Student reaction to the vote was mixed but was mostly unfavorable. "Not allowing freshmen in Co-ed dorms is about the stupidest thing the trustees have ever done" blasted one student who wished to remain unidentified.

A head of residence in one of the Co-ed dorms offered "the Trustees don't really understand the problems facing a freshmen when he comes to the University." The freshmen have to be allowed to "develop" freely at the University.

600 Foreign Students Face UMass Holiday

There are 600 students at UMass who, unlike almosteverybody else on campus, will not be traveling home to celebrate the holidays.

They are the 525 graduate and 75 undergraduate foreign student who attend UMass from 60 different countries around the world.

Because many will be lonesome away from family and relatives, the UMass foreign student office has suggested that local families may want to invite a foreign student to their home to share holiday companionship or a festive meal.

"If some family or church or other group would like to invite one of our students to their home, they can contact the foreign student office at UMass. I know they would be delighted to accept," said Mrs. Ann Silva, community relations coordinator for the foreign student office.

Prince House, which accomodates about 100 foreign students on the campus, is a quiet and sometimes lonely place on Christmas Day, she added.

The majority of foreign students at the university live off campus in Amherst or in communities throughout Hampshire and Franklin counties, according to Arthur Beatin, the UMass foreign student adviser.

Host Program

A host family program, where foreign students visit socially with about 150 families in the area, recently staged a holiday party for student but no other formal celebrations are planned, Mrs. Silba said.

For some of the students Christmas Day will be spent quietly in a dormitory room reading a textbook or preparing for a final exam, she added.

There is no international center at UMass and most facilities on the campus are closed up tight during the vacation period until after the first of the year.

The foreign student office also runs a "loan close" where foreign students can borrow small appliances.

A number of foreign students have agreed to speak or present slide shows about their native countries and even perform traditional music of their land before club groups and schools, Mrs. Silva said. A foreign students speakers bureau handles arrangements.

Mrs. Silva said many of the students would welcome the opportunity to visit at an American home away from home during the holidays.

New North Vietnam Prisoner List Released To Senate Committee

WASHINGTON (AP)—The North Vietnamese government released Tuesday the closest thing so far to an official accounting of all American prisoners held captive in their country.

The list, which Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D Mass., said was given to his representative by North Vietnamese diplomats in Paris, contained 368 names of Americans captive, dead or previously released.

The list was supplied also to a staff member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, making it the first time such information was given directly to official representatives of the United States government.

In the past, such lists have been released through antiwar groups in this country, and the government has refused to accept them as official.

Pentagon sources indicated the latest listing, if authenticated upon receipt here, might be considered official.

The list, given to Washington lawyer John E. Nolan Jr., who flew to Paris for Kennedy, and to James G. Lowenstein, a staff member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee sent by Chairman J. W. Fulbright, D Ark., apparently contained no new names.

Cora Weiss, the America pacifist through whom the earlier lists have been released, said in New York the new list contained the same names as those given to her last summer and in a supplement last Nov. 13.

"The heavy news is that it's final," said Mrs. Weiss, who said she received a copy of the same list given Nolan and Lowenstein.

Three and a half years of listening to the stupid accent. Three and a half years of puking every day. Three and a half years of listening to the supercilious psuedo-sophisticates from Hatfield, Pittsfield, and Goshen. Three and a half years of Western Massachusetts diarrhea.

The shack in Palmer is on the wrong side of the tracks. Inside the hero squats, gazing away from the light boards and dreaming of the hour when Margaret will have typed her last and Henry takes the pages to offset upstairs.

This is the true American, the unpretentious family man putting in his eight and then some. Master of the unseen art, he works while others sleep. Pretension and make-believe is not his style; he's honest and happy and proud. Western Massachusetts is not worthy of him.

The intellectuals among them come to the bucolic campus in Amherst. They go out from the tobacco farms, the Caldor sales desks, and the construction sites, to learn the trade in their new-found professions: poultry management, fashion design, and general business. They are the cream of the boondocks crop. They grew up listening to Harry Robator and John Quill and their culture came from Frank Friedman. They laugh at the cynical liberals from the big cities, sneering at the fact that they can write as well as print.

They laugh at us, the cultured eltis from inside the 128 belt, the saviours of Mother Massachusetts. They laugh. They, who live so close to New York that they can't even pronounce "car" correctly. Kevin White would laugh them out of his office. Ted Kennedy refused to acknowledge their existence.

And so they will sit this Christmas, eating a home-grown turkey while the snow gets deeper and deeper around the house.

They are so stupid they eat yellow snow.

I get a strange feeling whenever I hear "Ohio" in the Hatch. The song, concerning the slaying of four students at Kent, is about last May, the Strike, most of which I spent in the Union. I had never spent much time in the Union before the Strike, so for a long while the two, Union and Strike, were one in my mind. It was as if, while sitting in the Hatch, someone had taken amoment,immortalized it, and slipped it in as background for the future. The Strike is over, that seems clear; America has succeeded in quashing the enthusiasm generated last May. A lot of people retain the spirit, though, and the song gets played all the time. With the buildings sandblasted, the Strike T-shirts tucked away under sweaters and winter coats in the cold weather, the fall semester ending without a single major disruption, "Ohio" in the Hatch is the last major reminder on the campus of those glorious days when the campus came alive as it never had before. If they take "Ohio" out of the jukebox, I hope it's after June, 1972. I want it here at least as long as I am.

And any time you feel the pain, Hey Jude, refrain
Don't carry the world upon your shoulders
For well you know that it's a fool, who plays it cool
By making his world a little colder

—Paul McCartney

One problem we all encounter that I've tried to deal with this semester has been the lack of good feelings passing among people. Whether on the level of ludicrous example, like the war in Vietnam, or the very real, persistent level of people walking around the campus in their own particular shells, I have tried in whatever way I am able to encourage everyone to get together with people. I've had some feedback this semester that has been encouraging, at least on a personal level. But what I try to say, Paul McCartney said much better in his song, which just happens to be my one favorite song. Listen to it again sometime soon, and try to understand. Without love and understanding we can progress no further in the development of human relations. The twentieth century may be a wealth of technological progress, but in terms of human progress, we are trailing sorely behind. When everyone is willing to accept, to salute, every other person's humanity, then we can as a race feel proud. Until then, listen to the song, and see if it doesn't say something to you.

To my friends, a thank you song, for being kind to me

—Livingston Taylor

Sunday night I found out that two of my good friends were leaving school next semester. This did not shock me too much, as I've grown used to seeing my friends pack up and leave to look elsewhere for whatever they may be seeking. I'm sad at their loss, however, for the selfish reason that I will miss them being around. I hope they find whatever is missing here when they go. As for myself, I remain here, sometimes feeling in control of my own search, sometimes feelings lost, unanchored, sustained only by a belief, or a rage against the possibility of disbelief.

So long, Kindly Old Doc' Maloof. So long, Cindy Frankenfield. I hope you'll come back to see me, and more than that, I hope it's good wherever you go.

Peace.

We All Hide In Different Places

This semester has resounded with all the enthusiasm of a charnel house . I'll say it again. This semester has resounded with all the enthusiasm of a charnel house.

I'm well aware of the fact that nostalgia turns to fantasy in a matter of minutes, and that very few people are interested in fantasy unless, of course, it is their own. But in spite of the bad name of nostalgia lately, I would like to publicly thank a few real people who have made this semester, if not genuinely nutrious, at least digestible.

First I'd like to thank Peter for not stepping on my toes and for lending me five dollars, thus making it unnecessary for me to steal five dollars and spend ten thousand dollars getting a contract on him. And next, Mark for continually yet subtlely reminding me that I have, pound for pound, the looniest staff on the newspaper, and for restoring my faith in mankind by deciding to become a rummy after graduation. And also I'd like to thank Mark for not writing his column tonight so I have to fill in fourteen column inches of this garbage. A thank you goes out to Tony Granite for his consistency and Art Buchwald for always writing his own headlines, even though they suck. Thanks to Dave Williams for driving me back from Bradley Field after spending four days in Minniapolis, although I'd like to kill him for driving to the airport so I had to go to Minneapolis for four days. Also thanks to Matt Tackeff and Carbuncle for giving me two people I could fire. Thanks to Arthur Musgrave for allowing me to work more than two hours on the Collegian. Thanks to Rick Hansen for being there when I needed someone to hit.

Thanks to Don Glickstein for providing me with the means of getting rid of a bad lunch, namely Monday's editorial pages. And thanks to Larry for giving me something to wrap the remains of the lunch in, namely Monday's editorial pages.

Thanks to Carolyn for the Leamington Motel and Maggie for her all night sauna. Thanks to Jim Gold for doing to Thursday's breakfast what Don Glickstein does to Monday's lunch. Thanks to Cathie Perkins for good advice and for not reading my play. Thanks to Dr. Dick for smoking all of my cigarettes, neglecting the poetry page, bumbing me out in the Drug Drop In Center, and for being a really mellow friend. Thanks to Don B. for insulting me and driving me out of his condemned house, Mike K. for forcing me to go to Mexico, Jim C. and Jeff K. for sanity in times of stress, Larry Trillo for convincing me that one man's madness is another man's newspaper, Lance for listening, Prof. O. for really teaching French well, a rare occurrence in the French department, Prof. A. for Kubal Kahn, Prof. R. for an excellent job on King Lear, to Len and Joyce for a chance to relax and for introducing me to Constant Comment.

I used to think these things were unimportant and I still think this things are unimportant, but they help pass the time. And I've learned that time is a human plot to hijack our one and only primal sympathy.

ODE To The Collegian

Every morn at nine-oh-five
I shake my tired frame alive
And to some quiet post I strive

I read each line with baited breath
Pleasantly awaiting death
Chewing on my crystal meth
As I read todays Collegian.

It isn't that I hate the news
Or disagree with others views
I shudder that I'd dare refuse
To read the days Collegian.

I save the last page to the end
You see, the crossword is my friend
My senses I will try to mend
After reading the Collegian.

You really do a "bang-up" job
I guess I'm just "an effete snob"
As I burst into a aching sob
From reading the Collegian.

There's but one thing that I could wish
To take the Dining Commons dish
Of rotten meat and smelly fish
And wrap it up in the Collegian.

Spears And Arrows Flying

To the Editor:

As one of the persons involved in urging an inquiry into the scandal at WFCR, I would appreciate an opportunity to reply to Mr. Pascarelli's sneering attack against us.

Before launching his attack, Mr. Pascarelli might usefully have followed the elementary journalistic practice of interviewing both parties to the dispute and not just one. He might then have learned that the only hatchet wielded was by Mr. Keenan in firing Fred and Diana Calland, winners of national awards for their work at WFCR. He might also have learned that the hundreds upon hundreds of people who asked for a reconsideration of the firing represented a cross-section of the community, not the few "snobs" and "intellectual elitists" he fancies, echoing the benighted rhetoric of Spiro Agnew.

These people included students, teachers and administrators, workers, businessmen and housewives, scientists, hippies and newspapermen, doctors and ministers. All shared a concern for justice and an appreciation of the high quality programming of WFCR, created over the past four years largely by the dedicated work of the Callands and an earlier station manager Al Hulsen.

Failing to check his facts, Mr. Pascarelli was apparently deceived by Mr. Keenan or some of his employees into taking credit away from the Callands for their accomplishments and transferring the laurels to Mr. Keenan. Thus the editorialist implies that with Mr. Keenan's arrival about a year ago, wonderful changes were introduced (over the objections of the Callands) which greatly increased the variety of the station's programs and appealed to hitherto neglected sections of the community. During the past year, we are told, "the station has offered jazz programs, serious rock programs, children's shows, in depth news programming." Indeed it did—but all were introduced before Mr. Keenan arrived.

Permit me to correct the deception practiced on our editor by citing some facts from which he was discreetly protected. In jazz programming, the Callands supplied us with the Real New Orleans series, Marc Hanrez series, Bill Hasson's and Jim Bourne's. In Rock, the Callands supplied us with Cabbages & Kings and the Hunti-Pauli series. The Callands also brought to the station the series entitled Popular Music of the Sixties. In children's programs, they offered the weekly Children's Hour. For in-depth news, Fred Calland initiated the evening News Hour, expanded the 10:30 news program, brought in the Foreign Press Review and the Louis Lyons Newscast. Moreover, as Director of Programming, Fred Calland arranged for the nightly Jean Shepherd show, the BBC World Theater, the satiric Goon Show. He obtained the weekly program The Drum, a series especially directed towards the black community. He also enabled listeners to hear the concert by the Society of Black Composers.

Diana Calland, as Production Manager, had among her varied duties the production of the weekly program Five-College Forum, which included relevant information on public and cultural affairs. She was also responsible for the program on Human Sexuality, which is now being distributed nationally.

An impartial outsider (or a reporter who had not had the facts kept from him) might conclude that the Callands were indeed energetically engaged in trying to serve the diverse interests of the community. All they happened to insist on, out of respect for the public and the ideals of public radio broadcasting, was that the programs be of high quality. For this they would seem to deserve commendation rather than censure.

As for the "Que Tal Amigos" series for Spanish speaking listeners, Mr. Pascarelli was again apparently misinformed by Mr. Keenan or some of his employees that it was going off the air, and, by implication, being driven off by the Callands. The contrary is true: Fred Calland labored manfully to get the program funded initially and then to keep it funded.

Both the Callands, as part of their duties, and as the only professional broadcasters at the station, helped to train students and other personnel in the demanding techniques of high-quality broadcasting. They helped to train, for example, Arthur Cohen who now, after less than a year and a half of experience at the station, is replacing Mr. Calland in the major post of Director of Programming. For Mr. Cohen ' to allow a reporter to receive misinformation about the Callands, besmirching their reputations, makes one wonder (to say the least) about his sense of gratitude. of Programming. For Mr. Cohen to allow a reporter to receive misinformation about the Callands, besmirching their reputations, makes one wonder (to say the least) about his sense of gratitude.

Indeed the bedrock issue is not the firing of the Callands, nor the heartless way in which that firing was effected.

Nor is the issue the fact that Mr. Keenan had no experience in public radio and had never managed a radio station before. Nor is the issue the strange compulsion which Mr. Keenan or some of his staff apparently have to discredit the Callands and spread ugly rumors about them. The bedrock issue is the fate of a station which had been one of the best in the country and had reflected credit on the University. In the few months since the Callands were relieved of their duties, the quality of the station's broadcasting has declined in a variety of specific ways.

I doubt that Mr. Pascarelli was shown any of the letters complaining of this rapid decline into mediocrity. But if he doubts that such a deterioration has occurred, then I challenge Mr. Keenan to poll the listeners on the matter. The Committee for Fair Play at WFCR will gladly pay all mailing expenses for such a questionnaire, which could be prepared impartially by the Faculty Senate Committee currently investigating the situation. I trust that the editor will support this effort to discover the public's real opinion.

Respectfully,
Arnold Silver

Rejoice, Rejoice

To The Editor:

On Thursday evening I received a phone call from my academic advisor informing me that the faculty had voted me out of the clinical psychology graduate program. I respect their position to the same extent that I respect the boorishness of a pig, the whiteness of chalkdust, and the divinity of a spiritual master, and wish to utilize this forum as an avenue of clarification to my friends and students who are daily analyzing the psychic impact of ivory tower scholasticism upon their holy life styles of loving.

The reason given me was a "fundamental disagreement between my conception and style of clinical intervention and those of the faculty." In making their decision, as I was informed, the faculty reaffirmed their favorable evaluation of my skill at completing research, my performance at a level of professional intellectual adequacy, and my intuitive sensitivity to clinical problems and what is really happening between people behind all the bullshit.

Two examples of this disagreement were cited me over the phone: 1. last year I invited a model who was paid to serve as a patient in a training session to picture the ghost of his dead father in an empty chair, and 2. this year I invited the clinical faculty to themselves experience a mode of therapy under discussion at a clinical case conference by actively assuming the roles of therapist and patient.

At issue is not my professional adequacy but rather how I interact with people. I am very direct. So much so that people who have encountered me know that I don't take any bullshit and therefore frighten a lot of people who come to me with the intent of mutual ego masturbation. If I weren't so up front in all my relations I would not be so successful in the Gestalt therapy sessions that I lead at my commune and at school under the auspices of the Integral Yoga Institute, whose faculty advisor and Hatha Yoga instructor I have been appointed.

Ergo, Q.E.D., if you are an up-front Yogic Gestalt therapist ready to confront anybody and everybody including your teachers then you are assuming a modus vivendi which is not only "in fundamental disagreement" with the graduate program in clinical psychology but which probably also scares the shit out of it because it reflects to them the perfectly paradoxical reality that they are unable to themselves lead the lives of liberation which they have through their societal roles of healers nominally assumed to guide others in how to lead. My dismissal from the program is a constipated excuse put forward by the faculty in lieu of talking with me directly and facing themselves squarely by meeting the demands I have placed upon them to be real when with me. They did not accept my invitation to be personally present to discuss my evaluation, and the only power with which they can manipulate students, viz., the bestowal of the Ph.D. of fame and power to shit on other people's heads, has been null and void with me ever since I tasted the honey of Enlightenment from Swami Satchidananda and other great living saints this summer.

Once I realized that liberation was more together and worthy than a Ph.D. I realized that I had no external enemy in the entire universe except my own potential for evil. I am eternally thankful for this lesson in Being, and hope that others who learn of my story, without any crappy pretenses at martyrdom, may in some way learn how to better deal with the crisis of conforming their life styles to harmonize with the power of love and truth which the hallucinary idols of preposterously powerless mis-educational institutions have farted on our heads. In Gestalt therapy, as soon as you work through a crucial split in awareness, you open up to the beautiful vision that your "problem" is an illusion. Would that all the poor students getting diarrhea over finals could realize that we are living in the most spiritually advanced moment in the history of man. If you have eyes and ears you will easily see that in two years the University will not be functioning, society will not be functioning, the weather and the polar ice caps and the axis-tilt of our planet will not be functioning. The political crisis in our nation and the ecological crisis of our planet are all blessings in disguse to warn us of the insolubility of Truth. How can I worry about losing the Ph.D. when the grace of infinite Truth and Love is showering upon us all right here and now?

I rejoice, I rejoice, for I have no choice.

Give Yourself A Lift

To The Editor:

There is one great disadvantage to living in one of the Southwest towers - the elevators. One or more of the elevators in Coolidge breakdown at least once a week. When they are all operating they often operate poorly, stopping between floors or not stopping at the floors at all. For a few days one week, one of the elevators was stopping halfway between the lobby and the second floor, causing its occupants to jump four feet to the floor.

Not only are the elevators an inconvenience, but are also sometimes a hazard. Two Saturdays ago, as one of the elevators approached the ground, we all heard a hissing sound and looked around to find flames shooting out of the control box. Luckily the doors opened, but what would have happened if they had not opened, and the flames did not stop? If I had been standing back a few inches, I would have gotten burnt.

Three elevators for about 648 residents is bad enough, but when the elevators do not work or are not even safe to be in, it is a lot worse.

All the elevators in the towers get a great deal of use and therefore should constantly be checked out. A good time to start is during Christmas vacation when noone will be in the towers. We should not have to think twice before stepping into an elevator.

You Lose Some, You Win Some

To The Editor:

Do you suppose that, through your columns, a word of appreciation might be given to at least two students - one, "Sandy" by name - who last Thursday night, December 10, came to the rescue of an accident victim in the garage area of the Murray-Lincoln Center.

These two young people offered very prompt and knowledgeable assistance to a person who had fallen in the garage. They alerted the right people, provided an escort to the Infirmary, and generally brought order out of confusion.

It was the feeling of the visiting group of professional people from Northampton that these young people are perhaps truly representative of the majority of students at the University who never get any publicity, either good or poor.

UMass Researcher Heads UMass Pollution Team

Prof. Bernard B. Berger, director of the UMass Water Resources Research Center, is serving as moderator of the Connecticut River Basin Citizens Review Committee.

The committee's job is to conduct an independent citizens review of the massive Report of the Coordinating Committee for the Connecticut River Basin, a nine-volume comprehensive study of the 11,250 square mile basin, together with a plan of development for the water and related land resources.

Six years in the doing, the study is a product of federal, state and regional representatives working cooperatively under the broad supervision of the coordinating committee. Establishment of a citizens committee to review the huge study was first proposed by Congressman Silvio Conte of Pittsfield.

The group includes 28 men and women representing a cross-section of interests in the four-state river basin. The group and its subcommittees are now holding periodic review meetings which are open to the public. Target date for completion of the review is Feb. 1, 1971.

Allen Heads White House Panel

Dean of the School of Education, Dwight Allen, has been a participant in the White House Conference on Children this past week, and was chairman of the forum, "Confronting Myths of Education"

As the Conference ended, Time magazine ran a profile on the Dean and the UMass-Amherst School of Education.

The Conference on Education has been held every 10 years since the administration of Theodore Roosevelt.

This year, major discussions centered around the establishment of day care centers and a "child advocate" to act as a protection-type agency for children. Allen's own forum discussed the creation of "alternative", innovative schools in every American school system.

"Frenzy at UMass.", the title of Time's article, appeared in the December 21 issue in the Education section. It gave a brief background of Dr. Allen's life and a history of the changes that he brought to the ed school in Amherst.

Generally favorable, Time does however say that the School of Ed is currently showing "signs of tripping into some of the intellectual vacuity that marked its pre-Allen days." The story also mentions that this past summer, the State Auditor's Office found discrepancies in the School's bookkeeping. The article ends by quoting an anonymous professor: "Dwight Allen promises more than he can deliver...but he always delivers more than you expect."

Amherst-Northampton Joint Planner Urged

Sharing a city planner with Northampton and-or having UMass of pay half the cost of a planner were two possibilities discussed this week at an Amherst Planning Board meeting.

Ted Bacon, member of the Board, said that because of the rapidly growing population in the area, it would be appropriate for the University to exert some responsibility for the funding of planning in the town.

He said the University was partly responsible for the large growth in the Amherst population. The University should pay about 50 per cent of the cost of hiring planners for the area, he stated.

Should Cooperate

"The University should cooperate with the towns and not necessarily tell them what to do," Bacon said.

Mrs. Nancy Eddy agreed, saying that any planner regardless of who paid him, ultimately should be responsible to the town.

Regarding a $10,000 allocation for the services of a part-time professional planner, Bacon said Amherst probably would be better off it it shared its planner with Northampton.

He stated that if the Board followed this suggestion, it would be able to hire a more competent planner. He also reminded the board that it should keep the door open for consultations with the University as to how that institution might be able to help pay the cost of hiring a planner.

The $10,000 allocation for the services of a professional planner on a part-time basis was one of two charges from the original 1971 departmental budget.

The first change was $4,000 to $2,000 for professional consulting services. Some members of the board argued that more professional services were needed since the board has lost some of its staff.

Create Committee

Bacon suggested to the board that it should create a regional planning committee.

He stated that the Connecticut Valley region is already approaching such regional planning, and cited the example of the Mill Valley sewage project, which includes Amherst, Hadley and Pelham.

Whitney, chairman of the Planning Board, stated that the 1970 final budget had called for expenditures totaling $8,310.

Since the estimated final expenditures for 1970 total only $7,543.75, this leaves the board with about $800 as yet not spent.

Whitney proposed that this $800 surplus be spent for the services of Charles Downe, who has informed the Planning Board that he will be pleased to work on subdivision control regulations.

Charles Downe was hired by the board to do the master plan in 1969.

Downe is planning tentatively on doing the proposed assignment, and will require a fee of $800 to $1,000.

Bacon made a motion that the board use its remaining funds for 1970 to hire Charles Downe to revise the subdivision control regulations as necessary.

No Opposition

The motion was approved with no opposing votes. Whitney stated that he would write to Downe about this assignment.

Also present at the meeting were Edward T. Waskiewicz and Miss Catherine Pylypetz, who requested rezoning of their properties on the northeast corner of University Drive and Northampton Rd. from neighborhood residence to limited business. Waskiewicz and Miss Pylypetz complained that the planned extension of University Drive to Snell St. will isolate their respective properties and will deny them easy access to Northampton Rd. and University Drive.

Waskiewicz remarked that, after the traffic lights and traffic island were established at the intersection of University Drive and Northampton Rd., he would have only 10 to 12 feet of property left in front of his home.

Waskiewicz said that the Department of Public Works had informed him that the agency wanted to insure that people would enter traffic streams only according to traffic patterns, and not from across the corner.

This regulation will make access to the main thoroughfares very difficult for Waskiewicz and Miss Pylypetz.

Whitney moved that the board look into the matter of drawing up a petition to ameliorate the situation facing the two residents. The motion was approved.

Students Sign Pact With Hanoi

PARIS (AP)-An American student delegation just returned from Hanoi said yesterday it had signed a joint declaration of peace and solidarity with student organizations in North Vietnam and South Vietnam. The students hope to use it for antiwar sentiment in the United States.

The delegation included 15 from Washington, Oregon and New Hampshire. It traveled under the auspices of the United States National Student Association.

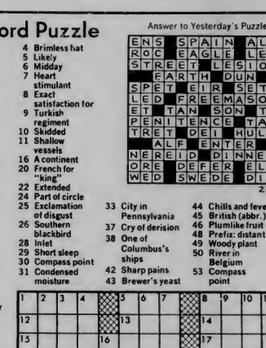
David Ifshin, former student body president at Syracuse University, said the delegation was organized to carry out a mandate from the August congress of the organization to explore the possibilities of a "peace treaty" with Vietnamese students.

The students arrived in Hanoi Dec. 4 and returned to Paris Monday. One of them, Douglas Hostetter of the New School for Social Research in New York City, went to Saigon for eight days and later joined the other students in Hanoi. Out of the total, there have returned to the United States. Ten of the students appeared at the news conference to explain what they had accomplished.

Ifshin said in a statement: "As a result of our discussions we have reached agreement on the terms for peace in Vietnam and we have declared that we are not at war.

"Although precise contents of the declaration will not be released until a national youth conference in the first weekend in February, we would like to announce now that all parties agreed that the most basic preconditions for peace are a commitment to the complete withdrawal of all U.S. forces, and withdrawal of support from the illegitimate Thieu Ky Khiem regime.

These conditions must be met before peace, independence, self-determination and sovereign neutrality can be restored to the people of South Vietnam."



These conditions are the same as the demands of the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong delegations at the Paris peace talks to get negotiations started. They refuse to deal with President Nguyen Van Thieu, Vice President Nguyen Cao Ky and Premier Tran Thien Khiem.

The students said they did not go to the sites of recent American rocket attacks in the Hanoi area and did not ask to visit any prisoners of war.

Ifshin said they "felt the prisoner issue had been raised by the United States as a diversionary issue...We went to Vietnam to end the war so the prisoners can come home."

Redman Cagers Are 7-0 After Topping Hofsta, 87-60

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

Overcoming a listless first half, UMass romped to its seventh consecutive basketball victory, at the Cage last night, over Hofstra, 87-60, in an unusual game played before 4000 onlookers. The Redmen are unbeaten while Hoftstra now stands at 5-3.

Unusual it was, too, in many ways. Hofstra, in its trip from New York lost a few ball players on the way, among them starters Rich Link and Quinas Brower. These two forwards didn't appear until 12 minutes had elapsed in the game and didn't see any action until the second half. As it turned out, they should have stayed home.

Under these circumstances, the Flying Dutchmen had only three regular starters on the court at gametime. Despite this disadvantage, Hofstra played a tough, slow game and kept UMass somewhat under control. When Link and Brower finally entered the lineup, the Redmen heated up and turned a low scoring nail-biter into a Redman breeze.

Much of the credit for this one must go to the fine UMass backcourt of Mike Pagliara and John Betancourt. The junior aces combined for 36 points, 28 of which came in the crucial second half. They ran the offense extremely well, leading the Redman fast break and setting up their teammates numerous times for easy hoops underneath.

Up front for UMass, Julius Erving and Ken Mathias were outstanding. Erving had another excellent night garnering 27 points and 17 rebounds, while Mathias scored seven points and dominated the boards for a period in the second half, finally finishing with 12 rebounds.

The first half was tight all the way. Despite lacking height and experience up front, the Flying Dutchmen played a calm cool first stanza, simply biding their time. They opened up a five-point bulge early, 10-5, behind the inside work of center Dave Bell and Tom Kelliher.

The Redmen began to liven up as Erving made his presence felt with five straight points to knot the count at 12:42, but the spirited Dutchmen kept plugging away. Kelliher connected on two more hoops, and field general Jim Pugh added a 15-footer as Hofstratried to pull away once more . But once again, UMass' junior co-captain took control and the Redmen took the lead for good, 19-18, on two Erving charity tosses.

But it wasn't that easy. Although the Redmen held onto the lead, they were unable to extend it as Kelliher annoyingly continued his inside scoring. By halftime, Hofstra trailed by only six, 34-28.

With Link and Brower moving in the second half, things looked bad for UMass. Betancourt and Pagliara got hot hands and Mathias controlled the boards and the Redmen just ran away with it. By the 12:11 mark, UMass led by sixteen, 55-39, and it just kept building. The fast break was working to perfection as the Redmen picked up layup after layup against the hapless Dutchmen press.

With substitutes playing the final five minutes, the lead continued to build, and at the final buzzer the undefeated Redmen were victorious again, 87-60.

LAYUP LINES - In yet another oddity, Hofstra, the visiting team, was dressed in white, the customary color for the home club. This was due to a loss of equipment...Once again, the Redmen shot well from the floor as they hit for 58.3% to a poor 38.9% for Hofstra. UMass dominated the boards again too, this time winning the battle 44-26....Erving had nine assists to go with his other stats...It was the 500th win in Redman basketball history and the seventeenth straight regular season victory.

Freshman Hoopsters Edge B&S, 57-56

By FRED ROSENTHAL
Staff Reporter

For 28 seconds the UMass fresh man basketball team played fantastic defense to hold on to a slim 57-56 edge and come away with a victory over Bryant and Stratton in the Cage last night. The win boosted UMass' record to 6-0 while Bryant and Stratton dropped to 2-4.

With 2:37 left in the game Rick Pitino hit a 20-foot jump shot to put the UMass frosh in the lead 56-55. Both teams then traded free throws to make the score 57-56 with a little over a minute left in the game. UMass then went into a four corner offense, but with 28 seconds left a pass went astray, and Bryant and Stratton had the ball with a chance to pull out a victory.

After a time out, UMass came out with a full court press and played real tight defense for the final 28 seconds, forcing Bryant and Stratton into a desperation shot that bounced off the rim and into the corner. There was a scramble for the ball as the buzzer sounded. The referee, standing over the play, waved his arms indicating that no foul had been committed. And the game was over.

In the first four minutes of the game Bryant and Stratton raced out to an 11-2 lead paced by 6'3 forward Ted Hathaway and 6' guard Tony Smith. All UMass could muster during this stretch was a corner shot by Pitino.

Led by Pete Trow and Art Levine the Little Redmen fought their way back into the game and tied it up 21-21 with 6:21 to go in the half. But the key play during this span came with 14:07 left. UMass was down by six points. Al Skinner grabbed a defensive rebound and dribbled up the court to his right. He then threw a jump pass to Pitino at the top of key who slapped the ball underneath to Art Levine. Levine put in a beautiful reverse layup and was fouled. The 6'5 forward converted the three-point play to pull the Little Redmen within three points, 10-13.

High scorer for the game was Hathaway for Bryant and Stratton with 28 points. Levine led UMass with 19 points; Pitino had 14. John Olson led all rebounders with 14. The real highlight of the game though was the Bryant and Stratton cheerleading corps, which reminded one of one's high school days.

Some Big Games In Store For UMass: Tourney, BU And PC

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

Although most UMass intercollegiate teams will be inactive for the next five weeks or so, the Redman basketball squad will play either four or five games, one of which looms very important.

The UMass cagers will be one of the eight entrees in the First Annual Hall of Fame Holiday Basketball Tournament to be held in Springfield next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday (Dec. 28th, 29th and 30th).

In the first round, or day, they will face Fairfield University. Should UMass defeat the Stags, it will play at least two more games in the tourney, moving into the semi-final round on day two, and the championship round or the consolation round (to decide the third and fourth place teams) on the 30th., or third day.

TOURNEY TABLE—Above is the three-day diagram of the Hall of Fame Tournament, as concerns how the winners can progress from the first round (Dec. 28) to the title game (Dec. 30). On Dec. 28, the Valparaiso- L.I.U. game will start at 1 p.m., the A.I.C.—Colgate game will start at 3 p.m., the St. Michael's-Springfield game will start at 7 p.m. and the UMass-Fairfield game will start at 9 p.m. On Dec. 9, the game represented by the lower box will start at 7 p.m., while the game represented by the upper box will start at 9 p.m. On Dec. 30 the title game will start at 9 p.m.

If the Redmen lose to Fairfield, they'll play again, against one of the other three first-round losers. Should they lose again here, they will be eliminated. However, should they win, they will be given a shot at fifth place in the final tourney standings.

This is a double elimination tourney. The champion will have to have won all three of its games, the runnerup will be 2-1, the third place team will also be 2-1, the fourth place team will be 1-2, the fifth place team 2-1, the sixth place team 1-2, and the seventh and eighth place teams both 0-2. The latter two teams will be the only ones to play just two games. A tourney table on how the winners can progress to the title game can be found elsewhere on this page.

After the Hall of Fame affair, the Redmen take time off for exams, but during intercession they have a tough contest against Boston University away on Jan. 21 and what could be a super game (the one that looms very important) versus Providence College at Providence on Jan. 23.

Provided UMass plays in three tournament tilts, it will have had five more games under its belt before returning to the Cage, and its home fandom, for a tussle with Fordham on Jan. 2.

The following is a round-up of the teams UMass will have to encounter in the next few weeks, including Fairfield, BU and PC.

FAIRFIELD UNIVERSITY: The Redmen's opening round opponent in the Springfield classic, the Stags have a 1-3 record which they will take with them when they face UMass. The three Fairfield losses have been to strong opponents Boston College 59-56, Providence 84-54, and St. Joseph's College 89-67. Top Stags include 6'6 senior Mark Frazer, the captain, and 6'2 sophomore George Groom. The coach of Fairfield is Fred Barakat, in his first year.

THE OTHER SEVEN TEAMS IN THE HALL OF FAME TOURNEY: Colgate University, Long Island University, Springfield College (which UMass defeated last year 82-76, and one which the Redmen play on Feb. 16), St. Michael's College, Valparaiso University and American International College (which UMass has already beaten this season, 93-40, on Dec. 18).

BOSTON UNIVERSITY: Here is a team the Redmen really outpointed last winter, 103-68, at the Cage. BU's record is presently 1-3 as it has really missed the play of graduates Jim Hayes and Marty Schoepfer. All of the Terrier returnees are non-double-figure scorers, they being Bob McNamara, Rich Taylor and Tom Taylor. BU has a couple of fine sophs in Jim Garvin, a 6'7 guy who averaged 20 rebounds as a freshman, and Vic Gathers, a 5'10 guard. Boston U. was expected to get off to a slow start, but its talent should push it towards improvement over the second half. The Terriers will be tough on their home floor. BU is coached by Charles Luce, in his fifth year.

PROVIDENCE COLLEGE: Here's the big game, against the team that may hold the number one ranking in New England when the Redmen arrive at Alumni Hall to face these potent Friars. Still the number one basketball name in N.E., PC hit bad times for a couple of years, but the Friars appear to be back to their old form, one that saw them consistently win over 20 games a year and receive invitations to post-season tournaments. Back from last campaign's 14-11 PC unit are these names, Jim Larranaga, Ray Johnson, Vic Collucci, Don Lewis and Gary Wilkins. Each of these five averaged in double figures a year ago, with Larranaga's 16.3 leading the pack. Add to these veterans a group of promising sophomores up from a 21-3 frosh squad. They are Ernie DiGregorio, Fran Costello, Nehru King and Charlie Crawford. Currently PC's mark is 5-1. DiGregorio is currently the top Friar scorer with a 16.8 average. Providence is coached by Dave Gavitt, in his second year.

To say the least, these four or five games represent an important segment of the season for the 7-0 Redmen as they look to repeat last year's rise to the top of the N.E.college basketball circle. Out of all the games though, that Providence tilt should be really something.

William M. Cashin Hall, the first of three towers to comprise the new Northeast residence halls, opened its doors to 468 students this week, according to H. J. Littlefield, Director of Planning.

"This is the first step in creating a different type of residence hall," he said. "It is part of a planning program to enlarge the number of options available to students."

The three towers collectively will house 1,404 students, Littlefield said. He added that construction would be completed on the remaining dorms prior to the Fall 1971 semester.

Architect John Carl Warnecke designed the complex in collaboration with the building committee, appointed from the University community, Littlefield explained.

The total cost will amount to over ten million dollars, he continued. He added that the construction was funded by the UMass Building Authority.

Dedication ceremonies, in honor of the late William M. Cashin, will be held at an as yet unspecified date, he said. Cashin, who died in 1969, was a former trustee and member of the UMass Building Authority, according to Richard Shanor of the UMass News Office.

Basically, the dorm differs from the present dormitories in the physical components of its set-up, Littlefield explained. He said the clusters of single and double rooms are a radical change from the usual double room pattern, as is the student/lounge ratio.

"By design kitchen facilities were not included in the suites," Littlefield continued. He said the buildings were located to allow students to use the North Commons.

North Commons did not have a sufficient number of residents to use the service to its fullest capacity previously, it was explained. Littlefield added that it is not mandatory for students in the new dorm to buy meal tickets, however.

He commented that plans for future dorms to be built in the same style but with a kitchen in place of one of the bedrooms in the suite were set aside because of inflationary costs.

No parking facilities are available at the new dorm, according to students.

"It was anticipated that parking plans would have to wait until the completion of the North Pleasant-East Pleasant connection road," Littlefield answered.

He added that parking would probably be expanded behind the School of Education, but said that he didn't know when.

Declining to comment on what he would have done differently in the dorm, Littlefield preferred to wait for the students' reactions. He did say that he felt the suites were a fundamentally good arrangement.

In planning there were certain aspects to keep under consideration once the building committee placed the suite arrangement as number one priority, Littlefield explained.

The total area had to be limited, he said. He outlined the problems concerned with student versus overall square footage.

He mentioned that bedroom space had to be reduced to allow for the living and bathroom areas. Priority trade offs in which the floor lounges were eliminated account for the major differences in the programmed areas of the dorm as compared to the present dorms, he added.

Another consideration was to keep costs in line, Littlefield continued. He said the plumbing for the bathrooms ran high in costs.

Getting the bathrooms in each of the suites was another important aspect, said Littlefield.

"In the future we must find even more alternatives," Littlefield projected. He said that more "different" dorms should and would be built to offer a greater choice to the students.

He offered smaller dorms, apartments, or house like fraternities or sororities as examples of possibilities.

"We can also take existing residence halls and develope different life styles in them," Littlefield continued. "We can take and change options within the dorms we have."

"Getting the bathrooms into the suites was a problem," said planning director Jack Littlefield, but everything is set now as the dorm's first residents have moved in. (MDC photo by Gib Fullerton)

Black Quits Georgia Post Because of Tokenism

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP)-An educator who took a $10,000 per year salary cut to become the highest ranking Negro in Georgia state government says he once quit a state job because it was "just tokenism."

"In those days in the North," said Dr. Tom Jenkins, 45, "they had a few of these little token jobs to pass around. That was in Massachusetts.

"I got one and didn't like the feeling. I quit after six months. I think they called me deputy research commissioner."

Jenkins, vice president of Georgia State University, was sworn in Monday as a $22,500 per year member of the Pardons and Paroles Board for a seven year term.

He was appointed by Gov. Jimmy Carter, who has promised to wipe out discrimination in Georgia. Carter succeeded Lester Maddox as governor earlier this month.

"I hope to help the governor break ground," said Jenkins in an interview Tuesday. "I may be wrong but I believe we deliberate too long on things." He said he is aggressive and believes "in moving."

Jenkins' mother is a retired elevator operator and his father is a waiter. He was raised in Huntington, W. Va. and Boston and worked as a railroad redcap while attending Boston University Law School.

Jenkins-dean of the law school of Florida A&M at the age of 28, President of Albany State College in Georgia at 39-says appointment of a Negro to the paroles board was long overdue.

Of the 8,448 inmates in Georgia prisons, 5,174 of them are black.

The board on which Jenkins will sit paroled 1,342 persons during the last fiscal year and 759 of them were black. Georgia's black population exceeds two million.

Bus Service Boosted

The Five College Co-ordinating Board has announced increased weekend bus service in the Five College area for second semester on a trial basis, beginning Friday January 29, 1971.

Additional runs have been scheduled to alleviate the overcrowding on the first and last runs that developed on Friday and Saturday of first semester, according to Cheryl Winter, Vice-chairman of the co-ordinating board.

Buses will leave Smith College and Mt. Holyoke at 7, 8, 10, 12 pm and 1 am on Fridays, and at 2, 5, 7, 8, 10, 12 pm and 1 am on Saturdays.

Arrival at UMass will be at twenty minutes past the hour and departure from the Waiting Station across from Morrill Science Center will be at twenty five minutes past.

The additional service is being funded by $3600, collectively contributed by four of the five schools involved, said Miss Winter. Hampshire College was not approached for funds, she explained.

"What students don't realize is that money from their student activities fees pays for the bus service, and they should take advantage of it," stressed Miss Winter.

LaPorte Murder Defendant Acts As Own Lawyer

MONTREAL (AP)- Paul Rose, on trial for murder in Canada's first political kidnap-killing, chose Tuesday to act as his own lawyer and argue in support of a motion to quash the charges against him.

It contends that a fair trial is impossible because of news coverage of events surrounding October's political kidnaping crisis, particularly the coroner's inquest on the strangling Oct. 17 of Pierre Laporte, the Quebec labor minister.

Representatives of Montreal news media were sent subpoenas ordering them to appear with copies of their newspaperts or tape recordings of broadcasts made in the first week of January.

The motion, drafted for Rose by jailed lawyer Robert Lemieux, contends that widespread publicity had made it "absolutely impossible" to select an impartial jury to give the accused a fair trial.

At the morning session Tuesday, Rose decided to act in his own defense, but with lawyer Pierre Cloutier as an adviser "to teach me the language and the rules of the game."

Cloutier, a bearded and longhaired young lawyer who wore sunglasses in court, agreed to act as Rose's adviser and immediately asked permission to sit beside him in the prisoner's dock.

Permission was refused, but Justice Marcel Nichols said he could sit in a chair beside the dock. Prosecutor Jacques Ducros added office space would be made available so the two men could consult privately.

Rose picked his legal adviser after another fruitless attempt to get Lemieux to represent him.

Justice Nichols ruled Monday that the detention of Lemieux, who awaits trial Feb. 1 on charges of seditious conspiracy and membership in the outlawed Quebec Liberation Front, renders him unavailable as a lawyer.

The judge explained the ruling again, and at one point asked Rose not to try his patience.

"Don't you think you're trying mine?" Rose retored. "I've been held incommunicado for two weeks. Your patience is short."

Nichols then pressed Rose to choose a lawyer or proceed alone, and Rose singled out Cloutier.

Rose and three other men are charged with non-capital murder and kidnaping-both punishable by life imprisonment-in the Laporte strangling. The Crown is proceeding first with the murder charge against Rose, a 210 pound former teacher.

Being held for trial Feb. 8 are Jacques Rose, 23, brother of Paul; Francis Simard, 23, and Bernard Lortie, 19.

Admin. CC Move Stalled

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Asst. News Editor

An administration attempt to acquire office space on the 9th floor of the Campus Center for the President and the Secretary of the University was stalled by the Student Union Governing Board, after administration spokesman David Clay tried to initiate the acquisition during Christmas vacation.

Originally, Clay had been attempting to find the space to house the office of new system's wide Treasurer, Kenneth Johnson. The Executive Committee of the SUG Board (Student Union Governing Board) decided in a specal meeting on January 6th to reject "any plan which would have the Treasurer's office move to the Campus Center."

The Exec Committee, in a letter to Chancellor Tippo, dated January eighth, said that the decision not to welcome Johnson to the CC was due, in part, to the space limitations of the CC, moreover, the Committee found "particularly objectionable" the proposed "presence of Mr. Johnson", because of what they characterized as "strained relations with the student body over a number of issues."

"...there are other administrative officers whose presence in the Campus Center is more desirable, i.e. Dean of Student's Office," the Committee added.

The full Governing Board was called to an "emergency meeting" by President Betty Pugh on January 10. At that meeting Clay, who is special assistant to the Chancellor, told the Board that the administration wanted to place President Wood's Amherst office and the Secretary's office in the Campus Center, instead of the Treasurer.

At the January 10 meeting, Clay explained the administration's position and pointed out to the Board that "legally, the Governing Board can only act as an "advisory" body and that its decisions could be "overruled by the Chancellor, by the President and by the Board of Trustees."

This attitude, on the part of Clay, concerned the members of the Governing Board deeply. Betty Pugh told the MDC that Clay's referral to the Board as an "advisory" group raised questions about "what power the Board has."

SUG BOARD PRESIDENT Betty Pugh called the controversy a "communications breakdown," and said she hoped the whole situation would be cleared up soon. (MDC photo by Steve Schmidt)

Miss Pugh claimed that the Administration had known that they needed the additional office space since "last July." She called the whole controversy "just a matter of communication." (One section of the transcript from the January 10 meeting with Clay tells why the administration didn't bring up the matter to the Governing Board directly, before students had gone home for vacation. Clay, who allegedly contacted the manager of the Campus Center before the students of the Board were back from Christmas vacation, explained that he "had considered calling Betty (Pugh) during the vacation to tell her that these discussions were underway.")

As it was the members of the SUG Board only heard rumors of the Treasurer's proposed move.

At the January 10 meeting the Board went "on record" by rejecting the use of the Campus Center "for Administrative offices" and claimed opposition to the use of any "student funded space for University Administrative functions."

The Board "informed" Clay that "should the University Administration desire to furthur request space in the Campus Center, the proper channel of approach is the Space Allocation Committee of the Student Union/Campus Center Governing Board."

The administration took the Board's advice and on January 15, Clay met with members of the Space Allocation Committee in the Whitmore Coffee Shop at which time the Committee passed a motion which would "table administrative requests for ninth floor office space until such time as eligibility ...for such space is clarified." This motion will be presented to the next full Governing Board meeting to be held this Thursday night, January 28.

The Administration is not expected to succeed in their attempts to find space in the Campus Center because of what Governing Board member Larry Woods claimed was the low priority for "outside groups", which the administration qualifies as.

"Student groups have number one priority", explained Woods, "the administration would fit into the number four priority group."

A Governing Board Finance Committee meeting, which had been scheduled for last night in Whitmore to decide how much the Administration would pay if they were to use the Campus Center office space, was cancelled for undisclosed reasons.

Job Market Is Down, But Openings Still Exist

"No one is hiring anybody" "Unless you're a 3.5 or better forget the idea of getting a good job" "Employment recruiters are just going through the motions" "The Placement Service is interested in helping only engineers and scientists". These and other like comments can be heard from those near graduation who aspire to positions they feel are warranted from their university education. All of these statements are false.

However the present year does present a much different job market from the past decade, according to the placement office. There is no question but that employment is down, the demand for college graduates is not what it has been, but jobs are available, even though in less numbers (i.e. one large firm who interviewed about 10,000 students to hire 886 graduates in 1969, about 10,500 to hire 541 in 1970, hopes to interview only about 6,500 this year to obtain 425 graduates).

The same firm stated "bright new college graduates does not necessarily mean only those with high grade point averages-we employ graduates from the full range".

In 1969 and 1970 about 535 employers scheduled recruiting dates at UMass and about 80 of these cancelled their dates for a variety of reasons. This year to date only 338 employers scheduled recruiting dates at the University and 61 of these have cancelled, most of whom cited poor economic conditions and low need for new employees as the reasons. Included in the above figures are 67 school systems who have scheduled recruiting visits to the University of Massachusetts for this year versus 146 the previous year indicating that the market for new teachers has fallen considerably also.

Yet employers are hiring people in all ranges of academic endeavor albeit not in the quantites of yesteryear. What does all this mean for the student completing his or her studies in 1971? It means that while job opportunities will not be a plentiful, they will be there for those who work at the job of getting a job, for those who have been counseled concerning career plans, for those who read the voluminous career literature available in the Placement Reading Room as well as in the University Library and department libraries, and for those who know what they want to do within the range of what is available, and for those who take advantage of the on-campus interview.

Seniors and graduate students who plan to complete their studies should make sure that credentials are on file in the placement office regardless of future plans, be it marriage, military service, graduate school, job, or whatever. We cannot help you if you have not made the effort to talk with the placement staff, discuss your career plans, and generally take advantage of our services.

Undergraduates, too, are encouraged to visit the placement office to discuss future plans and possibilities, to read about careers, to learn what jobs have been attained by previous graduates in their discipline.

While guaranteeing positions for no one, the placement office can provide you with career literature, career counsel, career requirements, current job market information, teacher certification, actual referrals to employers, on-campus employment interviews, plus a complete file of graduate school catalogues and graduate school requirements, and also information concerning certain prerequisite examinations such as the Federal Service Entrance Examination, and other Federal, state and local requirements.

In National Ratings

Grad School Fares Well

The UMass Graduate School fared extremely well in nation-wide ratings of graduate programs conducted by the American Council on Education, according to a report released in Washington by Arnold Curn.

Seventeen of the University's Ph. D programs were listed among the best in the country, two being judged to be among the top twenty departments in their respective fields. These were the Ph. D program in German, offered cooperatively with Amherst, Mt. Holyoke, and Smith Colleges, and the program in botany, one of the oldest in the University.

Also listed as superior Ph. D. programs, and the year they were established were: English and history, 1963; government, 1960; psychology, 1953; sociology, 1961; human development, 1956; entomology, 1902; microbiology and molecular biology, 1914; physiology and chemistry, 1915; population biology and zoology, 1956; geology, 1961; and mathematics, 1965.

The report, based on a survey of 130 institutions offering graduate studies leading to the doctorate, was written by Kenneth D. Roose, Vice President of the ACE and former dean at the University of Pennsylvania, and Charles J. Anderson.

According to Graduate Dean Mortimer H. Appley, when the last such survey was made five years ago, only four of the University's doctoral programs were included. These were in bacteriology-microbiology, entomology, psychology, and zoology. Each of these programs received a higher rating in this year's survey.

"Much of the improvement reflected in the report is attributable to the recruiting of highly-qualified faculty, particularly in the last few years. The University has grown in reputation as well as in size as scholars have been attracted to the faculty from all over the world," Dean Appley said.

Although pleased with the high ratings obtained by the University of Massachusetts, Dean Appley expressed some concern that the ratings are not sufficiently current to reflect the rapid, recent improvements at the University. In the 18 months that it took to prepare the report, the University's programs have improved to a point where many other departments might well have received higher ratings.

The UMass Graduate School was permanently established in 1892, when it was still Massachusetts Agricultural College, but the first Ph. D was not granted until 1902.

"Its astounding metamorphosis in recent years is well exemplified by the fact that in 1960, only three Ph. D's were granted by the University whereas 204 doctorates were granted in 1970," according to Dean Appley.

In 1966, when the earlier report was published, there were 2231 graduate students at the University. In the intervening five years, that number has more than doubled to 4464 students at present. Despite this increase, the graduate school still receives three times as many applications as it has places available.

UMass Denies Charges Of Not Helping Draft

UMass was named in a list released by Selective Service director Curtis W. Tarr as one of three schools in Massachusetts which refuse to cooperate with local draft boards seeking information on students.

In a statement he submitted to a special Congressional subcommittee on the draft, Tarr complained that UMass, MIT and Harvard report changes in a student' status only at the student's request. He lamented "the increased reluctance of colleges and universities to cooperate with us in these matters."

A University spokesman said last night concerning the allegations made by Tarr "He's way off base. We're very cooperative. But we won't become part of their office."

He went on to say that the law does not require the University to notify the draft when someone enrolls or when they leave school. The responsibility is on the student to contact the board.

However, UMass will tell a draft board if a student is registered or not if the board calls up and asks.

Cambodia Gets More U.S. Aide

WASHINGTON (AP) - The United States will speed the delivery of planes and helicopters to Cambodia to replace equipment destroyed in last week's Communist attack on Phnom Penh airport, the Defense Department reported Tuesday.

Pentagon spokesman Jerry W. Friedheim said this is part of the $255 million in aid provided for under the military Assistant Program approved by Congress last year.

Friedheim said the aircraft would include Huey and Chinook helicopters, C47 transports and single engine T28s, propeller driven planes used in close air support for ground troops. The Hueys can be used as gunships or as utility helicopters while the larger Chinooks are generally used to haul troops and supplies.

"We are expediting the delivery of some aircraft already programmed, and these aircraft will be of a capability similar to those destroyed and are a part of the congressionally approved Cambodian military assistance program," Friedheim told newsmen.

Act On Leftover Bills, Nixon Tells Congress

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon asked Congress Tuesday to enact quickly 40 administration bills that languished in 1970. But he deferred explicit appeals for action on two of his main targets: increased Social Security payments and welfare reform.

In his first special message of the new year, Nixon acknowleged some of the 40 measures have been revised this year "to meet legitimate concerns expressed by members of the Congress."

One of the major proposals in the package would provide $1.5 billion by mid 1972 to school districts facing racial desegregation problems.

Another would raise taxes on airline passenger tickets to help finance anti-hijacking efforts.

"I believe," said Nixon, "that the items of unfinished business I propose today merit the prompt and careful consideration of the Congress. I believe they are good measures."

The presidential message did not encompass all the items he failed to get from the 1970 Congress.

The President said he will submit separate messages later to cover strikes creating national emergencies; Social Security amendments; bail reform; aid for higher education; reform of the draft; and steps toward creating all volunteer armed forces.

Nixon cited also-but did not list among his 40 submissions-"one expecially urgent item of unfinished business which I proposed to the 91st Congress: welfare reform." He said:

"In fairness to the taxpayers, to the communities, and also to the children, we can afford to delay no longer in discarding the present system and replacing it with a new one."

House Republican Leader Gerald R. Ford of Michigan said all the Nixon proposals are meritorious and Congress should move swiftly on them.

But House Speaker Carl Albert, D Okla., seemed to be given somewhat different priority, saying he has assigned to a combined Social Security welfare reform bill the No. 1 position among more than 2,000 measures already introduced.

The anti-hijacking finance measure would add one half of one per cent to the current 8 per cent federal tax on airline tickets. The present $3 departure tax on international flights would go to $5.

Mills Scores Nixon's Revenue Sharing Plan

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon's plan for sharing federal revenues with local governments is wasteful, unfair to areas most in need and likely to force a general tax increase, Rep. Wilbur D. Mills, D. Ark., told the House Tuesday.

Mills, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee which will consider the $16 billion tax sharing program, reserved an hour of House time for a detailed criticism of the plan.

It amounted to his reply to Nixon's State of the Union address, much of which was devoted to promoting the idea.

In an obvious effort to counteract pressure on congressmen by governors and local officials, Mills listed states he said would gain and those he expects to lose under various possible ways of implementing the program.

His conclusion:

"If the purpose of revenue sharing is to meet the needs of our economy today, then revenue sharing is a poor and wasteful means of attaining these ends.

"Under any of the formulas that have been developed so far, substantial funds are given to states and localities where there is little or no need, as well as to those where there is need."

The most likely effect of sharing revenue, he said, would be to raise federal taxes. If this were done, he said, available information "suggests that the distributional effects of revenue sharing would hurt most the urban states where we hear most about the need for revenue sharing."

Illinois, Ohio, Pennsyivania and New York would be among those hit, he said.

One of the strongest campaigners for revenue sharing is Gov. Nelson Rockefeller of New York.

Mills criticized mainly the portion of the Nixon proposal calling for distribution of $5 billion a year with no strings tied.

Nixon suggested also that $11 billion more be shared with the stipulation that the states use it in specified general areas like education. They would develop their own programs. All but $1 billion of this $10 billion would be diverted from present specific categorical federal aid programs.

Mills indicated some sympathy with the block grant approach. But he also said the likelihood of $15 billion federal deficits "at least should flash a caution light for us to go slow with these proposals for giving away federal revenues."

Health Lottery Urged By N.H. Congressman

WASHINGTON (AP) - Rep. Louis C. Wyman, R. N.H., proposed Tuesday a national lottery, with monthly drawings and distribution of tax exempt prizes, to raise money to fight crime and pay for health, education and welfare programs.

Wyman, whose state was the modern pioneer in government backed sweepstakes programs, entered legislation to create a national lottery commission to "keep national drawings honest and produce hundreds of millions of dollars of additional revenues each year to help finance federal and state governments."

The bill would outlaw numbers betting except in a national lottery, and would require at least 40 per cent of the money received in the lottery to be distributed to the public in prizes.

"Not only would such national drawings go a long way in reducing public financing of organized crime in the numbers racket, because they can get a better break with the government drawings, but the proceeds will themselves help fight crime, fund health, education and welfare programs and produce revenue to fight inflation," Wyman told his colleagues as he introduced the bill.

States which permit lottery stamps to be sold at post offices within their borders would share from 5 to 15 per cent of the gross proceeds on a formula weighted between population and the income from sales in that state, Wyman said.

Diplomats Worry Over Mid-East Ceasefire

By The Associated Press - Western diplomatic sources at the United Nations expressed concern Tuesday that chances of extending the Middle East cease fire beyond Feb. 5 may be in jeopardy.

They pointed to the lack of progress in the peace talks between Israel and its Arab neighbors.

This was underscored by Israeli government sources in Jerusalem, who called Jordan's peace plan a watered version of Egypt's plan. Israel finds both unacceptable. Officials reported Israel had sent its reply to Egypt's proposals to the United Nations.

The Israeli sources scoffed at Jordan's pledge to guarantee "free access to all religious and historical places in the Arab sector of Jerusalem to all concerned."

They said Jordan consistently barred Jews from visiting holy sites in Old Jerusalem before the 1967 war that drove out the Arabs. And they said the pledge was part of the 1948 armistice agreement.

Jordan also demanded that Israel withdraw from all Arab territory and proposed the Big Four of the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain and France help to guarantee the peace.

Israel wants the boundary question bound up in the peace agreement and it opposes any Big Four intervention in the Middle East dispute.

Jordan presented its plan to the U.N. Security Council in New York on Monday. Israel's Cabinet is considering its reply.

Death Seen For Manson

LOS ANGELES (AP) - The prosecution, seeking the death penalty for Charles Manson and three women followers convicted in the Sharon Tate murders, said Tuesday it will seek to show at the sentencing trial that Manson and Susan Atkins committed other crimes.

The defense, which rested its case in the seven month trial without calling witnesses or presenting evidence, said the defendants will testify if they wish to.

The defendants were convicted of murder conspiracy Monday. At the penalty trial starting Thursday the state under California law is allowed to present evidence about other charges or trials in which defendants have been involved. The same jury that returned convictions after the seven month trial will decide between a death penalty and life imprisonment.

Coprosecutor Stephen Kay told a newsman the state will present evidence that defendant Susan Atkins, 22, helped kill a musician a few weeks before the August 1969 slayings of Miss Tate and six others.

Kay said the state will offer evidence that Manson shot and wounded another musician a few days before the Tate killings, using the same gun used on some of the Tate victims.

"The jury is entitled to know the background of the defendants to help them make the very hard decision on whether to send them to the gas chamber," Kay said.

Chief defense attorney Paul Fitzgerald said he will try to introduce confessions to the Tate killings by others, seek to show that the state suborned perjury by prosecution witnesses, and call friends and relatives of the defendants to testify to their character.

The defense may call as a witness Linda Kasabian, he said. Mrs. Kasabian, a one time member of Manson's hippie style family, was the state's star trial witness, telling of seeing two killings and hearing screams of other victims. She was granted immunity for her testimony.

HAULING THEM AWAY - Numerous complaints about treatment by Anderson's towing service over the years has prompted the Senate into investigating creating its own Tow Service. (MDC photo by John R. Kelly III)

Senate Tow Truck Seen Answer To Anderson's

By ANNE STADNICKI
Staff Reporter

A bill for a student owned and operated tow truck, to come before the Student Senate on February 10th, could lower the rate for towing cars illegally parked on campus, according to Senate Treasurer Richard Verrochi.

Co-sponsors of the bill are Senators MacNutt, Woods, Verrochi and Elters.

The bill outlines a policy for use of parking fees and fines to subsidize the on-campus transit system and to purchase and operate a tow truck, Verrochi explained.

Anderson's Texaco, a towing and road service, presently does all the towing for the University police, said Verrochi. He added that Anderson charges the maximum rate for towing allowed by state law, twelve dollars during the day.

The twelve dollars plus the $2 per day "storage" fee plus the fine for the ticket amounts to a very high bill for the student whose vehicle has been towed, Verrochi said.

A student owned and operated tow truck could tow for less than the maximum rate, since it is not a profit making organization, Verrochi explained. Storage in the Campus Center garage at the usual rates would decrease the cost also, he added.

Purchase price of the tow truck would amount to about $12,000, Verrochi estimated. The fees would gradually pay for this and maintenance and the student drivers, he said.

An amendment to the bill provides for negotiations with the Campus Center Governing Board about the garage, he continued.

"If we can do this we can put a stop to Anderson." Verrochi declared.

Town Residency Snafus Shown

The Amherst Board of Registrars have announced that students must be self-supporting and live here all year in order to register to vote in local elections.

"Being here all year round is the first question-in addition to age, of course," said Esther Dimock the Amherst Town Clerk, adding that even if students live here most of the year, he or she will not qualify if the student spends his summer vacation at home.

"We have to determine legal residence and I don't feel students who hate to go home for vacations who don't pay rent all year round-qualify," emphasized Dimock. "The Board (of Registrars) feels the same way."

A student may qualify to vote if he or she can prove self support. Anyone who is "dependent" upon their parents for over half of all living expenses or whose parents declare as an income tax deduction cannot register.

"I have talked with clerks at Worcester and Cambridge and their policies are the same as ours," said the Amherst Town Clerk.

Governor Sargent has declared January as Massachusetts' "Youth Voter Registration Month", urging "all citizens of the Commonwealth to take cognizance of this event and participate fittingly in its observance."

Sargent made his proclamation on Beacon Hill January 11 saying that "the functioning of a democratic society is dependent upon the active participation of its citizens."

Sargent noted that citizens 19 years or older are eligible to vote in state and local elections.

The State maintains that a student can register in the community where attending schools if he maintains his "legal residence" in that community. A leaflet headed "Your Voting Rights in Massachusetts" states that an individual must "prove his residence to the satisfaction of the local Board of Registrars.

Robert Weiner, chairman of the Hampshire County New Voters Committee, disagrees with the town's standards, saying "school is as legal an occupation as any other. Any student who's here nine months a year has the right to claim it as his legal residence." Weiner, a graduate student at UMass, is heading the committee in an attempt to register newly-qualified voters in the area.

"Traditionally, one-third of the youngest eligible voters register, and only one-third of those registered vote," said Weiner. "A massive voter registration drive is our first priority." Anyone who want to help in the drive can call Weiner at 253-2835, or write to him at 59 Rolling Green.

Robert Coldwell Wood had just been installed in the Ballroom of the Statler Hilton in Boston. The crowd, dotted with important politicians, educators and newsmen, moved to a smaller reception hall to greet and wish the new president the best of luck. The champagne was being dished out by elderly waiters wearing starched jackets.

Near the serving table, one of the top administrators from the Amherst campus found himself standing next to a student.

"And what do you think of all this, today?", he asked conversationally.

The student, drink in hand, puzzled a minute and then confided: "I think its a pile of crap!"

* * * * *

Last semester, if given proper consideration, will soon fade into oblivion and be looked back upon only to add fire to some scholar analysis of the present day campus scene.

However, last semester was recorded, as it was, by one class of UMass students who examined the campus by jotting down what others were saying. The idea was to give a subjective living history of the people who are more or less the University community.

The preliminary results, not yet thoroughly analyzed, portray the campus as "a bloody dreary place to live."

This semester will begin to show the extent to which a change in administration will affect a University. Wood has had experience in the "public" arena of legislative moods and monies and will probably work the University's future goals into politically sound areas like "public service" and "community" responsibility. His inauguration speech did little to encourage those who set the University up as a tower amidst the dregs of society.

What will concern those most involved with public higher education in Massachusetts this year is the possibility of raising tuition far beyond the present token sum. The new Senate President Harrington (D-Salem) seems determined to push a bill which would add about another thousand dollars to the tuition.

Chairman of the Board of Trustees, Joseph P. Healey says that the University will fight any tuition hike, but others on the board and in the legislature will be relieved if the inevitable hike can be kept to a minimum in these economy conscious times.

Most educated guesses put the future raise at about $2-300 but a state that is in a virtual crisis over money, should not be counted on to place education before anything. Evidence, the way a Republican Federal government would like to trim its budgets.

The signs of expansion will continue to flood the University with new dorms entering the planning stage to take care of a "ceiling" for the Amherst Campus which will probably set at 25,000 students.

Plans for new dorms, which will be announced sometime next week, will be different than those built over the last 15 years. Indications are that they will be small, probably around fifty students per unit and, if costs don't run too high, might have their own dining facilities.

The dorms being opened in the Northeast area of campus will be condemned by students in the coming year. The single rooms are about as cramped as the triples in Southwest. There is one public area large enough to hold about fifty people for each dorm which holds 450. There is only one three burner stove and compact refrigerator for the whole dorm.

What might really bother some of the residents is the fact that there will not be any additional parking lot facilities until North Pleasant St. is closed down and "M" lot is expanded. Compound this with the Amherst snow removal regulations which ban overnight parking on Eastman Lane which runs in front of the new nine story dorms.

The issue which will probably place the University into its most awkward position will be exclusion of freshmen from co-ed dorms. When the Board voted 7-6 against allowing freshmen to live in dorms, they destroyed the hopes of not a few administrators and literally thousands of students who had been convinced that the Trustees would find the wisdom to overcome what must be called a fit of morality based upon political caution.

The most crushing aspect of the board's decision to some on campus was the delay last December's negative vote places on the possibility of all decisions concerning the dormitories emanating from Amherst and not the Statler Hilton meeting room of the Trustees.

Cops "Guilty" In New Bedford

BOSTON (AP)-Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn said Tuesday that a "small number of police officers" were guilty of "excessive and abusive treatment" of members of the black and Spanish community during racial disturbances in New Bedford last summer.

Quinn, in a report following a five month investigation into the disturbances, cited a "distinct pattern" of abusive treatment.

"Moreover," the report said "it is clear that the policemen who engage in this misconduct are virtually in every instance being protected from accountability."

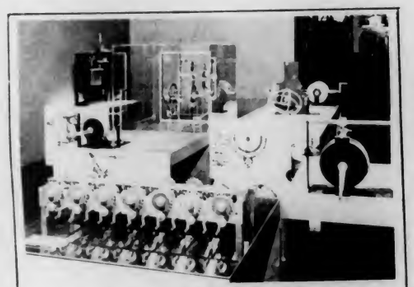
Deferred Admittants

New Frosh Program

By DON GLICKSTEIN
Staff Reporter



People who usually come back early from intersession are confident and busy. Perhaps they live off campus, perhaps they just had to get away from home. Some have jobs, some like the peace and quiet that a near-deserted campus provides. For 140 new freshmen, admitted under the "deferred admissions" plan, UMass-Amherst last Sunday evening was a place for initial confusion and hopeful enlightenment. For the first time in more than 15 years, new students entering in mid-year attended a freshman orientation program.

After registration and a general meeting, the freshmen were assigned counselors and met in small groups to have some of their questions answered. The next day, Monday, the students ate with their counselors at the Top of the Campus and the Campus Center Cafeteria. For dinner, fifteen faculty and administrators joined them, including Dean of Students William Field and Vice-Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery. Earlier in the day, the freshmen participated in a question and answer period with various administrators from the Dean of Students' Office, the Student Activities Office, the Counseling Center, and the Health Services.

For entertainment on Monday night, the Orientation Program provided a free movie. The Session ended on Tuesday with presentations by Goodell Library and a tour of Campus.

Salle Hamilton, director of New Student Programs and a member of the Counseling Center staff was encouraged by the response to the Program:

"This program was a beginning in helping Spring-entering students to become integrated into the University community. We were especially pleased that faculty and administrative staff participated informally with the new students, and we hope they will be interested and involved in the 1971 Summer Counceling Program."

One of the da Vinci models which will be exhibited at the University of Massachusetts from January 14 to February 5 is shown here at an earlier exhibit. Diagram accompanying the model is a copy of an original manuscript page found in Spain in 1965 by UMass Professor Jules Piccus.

Cont. Ed. Has Courses From Computers to Writing

Criminology, computers, chemistry, creative writing and the culture of Africa are a few of the areas to be covered in the spring courses of the University of Massachusetts Division of Continuing Education.

There are 58 credit and non-credit courses in all, and they will be given evenings starting Feb. 8 in Amherst, Greenfield, Pittsfield and Springfield. A brochure listing all courses, schedules, fees and other information is available from the Division of Continuing Education, 920 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst 01002, 545-0965.

"The wide range of courses is designed not only for those who need credit courses to further their educational goals but also for those with specific interests," explained Dr. William C. Venman, continuing education director.

The department of history, for instance, is offering two short programs of three meetings each. The first will be a discussion of the emerging nationalism of the Arab peoples and their confrontation with Israel, with meetings three Wednesday evenings in March. A second special course, on East Asia Today, will meet for three Wednesday evenings in April.

The department of anthropology is offering five courses in Amherst and one each in Springfield and Greenfield. The Springfield course, Problems in Anthropology, is specially designed for classroom teachers and is available for graduate credit. Of special interest on the Amherst campus is a course in the Cultures of Africa.

The popular course in Educational Psychology will be repeated this semester. A new course is Group Leadership, stressing methods and foundations for leadership of groups. The department of English offers two courses in poetry, one on contemporary poetry and one on creative writing. There is a new course in Literature and Film. The geography department offers three undergraduate courses in Anglo-American, Southeast Asian and Urban Geography.

The department of speech offers a variety of courses ranging from Introduction to the Theater through a course in television to Mass Media in Society. In sociology, besides an introductory course, students may take courses in Urban Sociology, Criminology and the Sociology of Religion. A new course this semester is the elementary course in Statistics, which is used as a base for most other statistical courses in the University.

New this semester are two courses in Spanish, Oral Spanish on Wednesdays and Thursdays, and Spanish Masterpieces in Translation on Tuesdays.

UMass continuing education courses are open to high school graduates and those with General Educational Development (GED) certificates. The classes meet evenings from 7 to 9:45 p.m. unless otherwise noted, at the University campus in Amherst and in Community College buildings at the other three locations. Registration ends Feb. 2.

Conductor, Muscian Brieff Tabbed WFCR Music Chief

WFCR, the Five College FM radio station at the University of Massachusetts, has appointed a new music director. Frank Brieff, who brings a distinguished background in music to WFCR.

He is the host and producer of "Music in the Afternoon," to be heard Monday through Friday from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. This is a network program broadcast through WGBH in Boston and WAMC in Albany. It will begin Monday, Jan. 4.

In addition to being the host and producer of the afternoon music program, Mr. Brieff will advise WFCR on its classical music programming in general. He will also do interview programs with musicians.

At 88.5 FM, WFCR is a non-commercial public radio station which broadcasts to a six-state area. It is a cooperative effort of Amherst, Hampshire and Mount Holyoke Colleges and the University of Massachusetts.

Mr. Brieff is a 1933 graduate of New York University who spent the summers of 1931 and 1932 in Paris studying composition under Boulanger and Hewitt.

In 1934, Mr. Brieff did postgraduate work in French and German at Columbia University, and in 1935 studied conducting and violin at the Juilliard School of Music.

His professional experience began with the New York City Symphony Orchestra in 1938. By 1939 he was conducting the City Orchestra in addition to playing the viola and conducting programs in the series "Invitation to Music" for the Columbia Broadcasting System.

From 1943 to 1948, Mr. Brieff played viola with the Guilett String Quartet which he himself formed. With Danielle Guilett. The quartet performed in many cities across the United States and overseas, and made recordings for the Vox and Concert Hall labels.

Mr. Brieff also played with the NBC Orchestra in New York City under Arturo Toscanini from 1948 to 1952.

He is presently the conductor of the New Haven Symphony Orchestra, and has been with the orchestra since 1952. This orchestra has recorded for the Odyssey label of Columbia records and premiered Gustav Mahler's "Lumia" in the United States. Mr. Brieff is also responsible for the discovery and the first performance of the missing "Blumine Movement" of Mahler's Symphony No. 1.

While conducting the New Haven Symphony Orchestra, he concurrently conducted the Bach Aria Group in New York City, a group that has recorded for both RCA and Decca records.

Mr. Brieff has been the guest conductor of the Symphony Orchestras of Rochester and Buffalo, N.Y.; San Antonio, Texas; and Fountainbleau, France. He has also been guest conductor of the NBC Orchestra, the CBS Symphony, the WOR Sinfonietta, and the Naumburg Sinfonietta.

Mr. Brieff is married and has three children. He speaks French and German in addition to some Italian and Spanish.

2 SBA Profs Chosen Best

A student group at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst has given the "best professor" designation to two School of Business Administration faculty members in an effort to stress the importance of college teaching.

The Graduate Business Club polled students in the master of business administration and master of science programs at the school to determine the two faculty members who demonstrated outstanding classroom performance. Most often mentioned were George W. Sheldon, instructor of general business and finance, and Arhtur Elliott Carlisle, associate professor of management.

According to spokesmen for the club, the project to honor teachers was begun because of a "strong and sincere feeling that professors should be compensated more for their performance and rapport with the students they instruct than the traditional rewards for research and publishing." Students were asked to name as "best professor" someone they thought motivated students, projected an interest in teaching and students, and showed clarity in his presentation.

The poll in no way implied faculty research and publishing are unimportant, the pollsters said, but was an attempt to weigh "each aspect of education properly so the student will derive the most benefit."

In addition to the winners, special mention was given to: Parker M. Worthing, assistant professor of marketing; Wynn A. Abranovic, professor of general business and finance; and Milton K. Deets, assistant professor of general business and finance.

Nun Charges Wiretapping In Kissinger Kidnap Case

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP)-A nun charged Tuesday that the federal government tapped telephone calls within the Roman Catholic Church in the United States and in Rome.

Sister Jogues Egan claimed in a preparedstatement that the calls were the basis of her being named as a coconspirator in the case against six persons charged with plotting to kidnap presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger and blow up underground tunnels in Washington.

Sister Jogues, 52, New York City, did not say what made her believe that calls had been bugged. However, she was before a grand jury investigating the alleged plot for an hour on Jan. 15, and it is possible that telephone calls were mentioned in the questioning.

She has refused to testify before the grand jury even though she was granted immunity from prosecution Monday by U.S. District Court Judge R. Dixon Herman.

Sister Jogues was recalled before the grand jury in midafternoon Tuesday. She told newsmen she intended to decline to answer most of the questions she would be asked.

Joseph M. Joynt of Silver Springs, Md., reportedly an elevator operator in Washington, D.C.,who had access to keys to the underground tunnels, made a brief appearance before the grand jury.

Sister Jogues' lawyer distributed a written statement to newsmen Tuesday morning with six reasons why she would refuse to answer most questions asked by the grand jury. One was:

"The evidence on the basis of which I have been named as an unindicted coconspirator, subpoenaed to testify and asked questions was secured by illegal wiretaps.

"In addition, all or some of the telephone communications monitored by the U.S. government involved communications within the Roman Catholic Church of America and, specifically, between my provincial headquarters and the offices of the church in New York, Rome, and throughout the United States."

She would not answer questions about the statement. Her lawyer, Jack Levine, said the phone tap in Rome was a continuing one at the headquarters of the order to which Sister Jogues belongs. It was not a Vatican phone, Levine said. He did not say how long the tap was operated, nor by whom.

The six defendants in the case will be arraigned in U.S. District Court here on Feb. 8. They are Rev. Philip Berrigan, 47, now serving a sentence at Danbury, Conn., for destroying draft records; Eqbal Ahmadn, 40, a Pakistani graduate student; the Revs. Neil McLaughlin, 30, and Joseph Wonderoth, 35, both Catholic priests, and Anthony Soblick, 30, a former priest, all from Baltimore, and Sister Elizabeth McAlister, 31, South Orange, N.J.

Politella Aims to Please

The Ides of March heralds the appearance of a unique volume subtitled An Exegesis On the Funny Games Students Play With Words and Pictures, by Dr. Dario Politella, associate professor of English and journalistic studies here.

The Illustrated Anatomy of Campus Humor, its main title, is a collection of 120 pages of text, cartoons and photographs supporting the author's contention that humor on today's campus results more from innocence than inspiration.

"With the demise of the racoon coat and the debut of the microskirt; and ever since swallowing goldfish became passe' and chasing coeds into their dormitory rooms has become the new life style of Joe College and Betty Coed; the only real hint of true humor on the campus, these days, reveals itself in the pages of your favorite campus newspaper," Dr. Politella says.

Published by the Commission on the Freedoms and Responsibilities of the College Student Press in America (CFRCSPA), the book will appear on local book dealers' shelves March 15. Proceeds from sales will support publication of a series of handbooks by CFRCSPA for college editors, to be called The Anatomy of Campus Journalism Series."

Dr. Politella has been collecting humorous headlines, typographic errors, double-meaning phrases and art work from the campus press for more than 15 years. As founder and editor of The Collegiate Journalist, he shared his findings of humor for eight years in a column called "Double Takes." And as founder editor of a new quarterly journal, Syllabus, covering the campus journalism scene, he reads some 250 college papers a month to find the stuff of humor.

A total of 139 campuses are represented in The Illustrated Anatomy of Campus Humor."

Dr. Politella has gained national recognition in the campus press field as a writer, editor and lecturer. He has won awards from the National Council of College Publications Advisers, the Associated Collegiate Press and the Southeastern United States Student Government Association.

Nixon To Trade Aid For Support

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Nixon administration is dangling the promise of 80 per cent more federal aid for elementary and secondary schools to win support for the educational component of the President's revenue sharing plan.

Instead of the current $2.9 billion flowing from 100 different aid programs, there would be $5.1 billion under general revenuesharing and under five consolidated school assistance categories, administration officials said Tuesday.

Sone $2 billion of the $2.2 billion increase, the officials conceded, represents that portion-40 per cent-of the President's proposed $5 billion general revenue sharing pool which states and local governments would use mainly for public school aid.

The remaining $200 million would be new money added to the present $2.9 billion education aid ticketed for the restricted use, $11 billion revenue sharing pot.

As outlined by administration education officials, the states would share the $5.1 billion on the basis of population alone. Thus the big states would get the largest share.

Rather than the present 100 sometimes overlapping, special purpose aid programs under 75 legislative titles, the President wants five broad categories of elementary and secondary education spending: compensatory; impact aid to districts with large numbers of federal employes; vocational; handicapped, and equipment and facilities.

"Federal bureaucrats would no longer approve specific projects," one official said. "They would be freed to provide technical assistance to states and cities.

"We're framing guidelines to assure that spending decisions will not just be transferred to state bureaucrats," he continued.

"We want citizens in open forums to decide the spending priorities-true participatory democracy and citizen power."

Introductory Music Courses To Be Offered This Spring

The department of music at UMass has announced three new courses to be offered to the public through the Division of Continuing Education this spring.

"Introduction to the Recorder" will be offered on Monday nights by Mrs. Joanne Tanner. This popular baroque wind instrument is enjoying a revival of interest and is easy to learn to play.

Prof. John D'Armand will teach "Introduction to the Voice" on Monday nights. This course is designed to teach the fundamentals of singing, including tone production and breath control.

The University's new electronic piano studio will be used on Tuesday evenings for "Introduction to the Piano" taught by Mr. William Harry.

The new courses are designed to meet the needs of anyone interested in acquiring the basic essentials necessary to self-expression in music. Prior experience in these areas is not required, nor is the ability to read music a prerequisite. Each course will include elementary music fundamentals. Class sizes are limited to twelve in order that attention to individual problems may be maximized.

Each course meets fifteen times for one hour a week at 7 p.m. beginning the week of Feb. 8. Cost of one course is $35, plus between $5 and $10 for materials.

Registration information is available through the Division of Continuing Education, 920 Campus Center.

Frustration At End

Malawi Program Over

The University has ended a six-year educational project in agriculture in Malawi, Central Africa, on a note of frustration.

"According to reports from the Malawi and U.S. government officials, our University has done highly commendable work in Malawi but unfortunately, the job is far from finished," explained Gilbert E. Mottla, campus coordinator of the Malawi Project for the University's College of Agriculture.

From village farmers to the university level, UMass people have been working in Malawi since 1964 helping to develop the country's great agricultural potnetical under a contract with the U.S. State Department's Agency for International Development.

The contract officially terminated last Nov. 30 and has not been renewed despite urging from the Government of Malawi and UMass. Main reasons are the drastic across-the-board cutbacks in the U.S. foreign aid budget and shifts in U.S. technical assistance priorities in Africa along political lines, according to Mottla.

This leaves the five million people of Malawi with many areas of need. The country has almost no natural resources and minimal industry. It is therefore dependent almost entirely on agriculture as a source of national income. Yet much of Malawi's agriculture is still in a primitive and unscientific stage.

Scientific plant breeding is all but unknown. Fertilizer, at $6 per bag, is too expensive for the average farmer to buy. Hand methods still predominate and plant diseases flourish.

"Malawi is a plant pathologist's dream - every disease you can think of can be found there," said Joseph Keohan, the last UMass staff member to serve in Malawi. He ended a two-year tour of duty this past fall as a senior lecturer in biology at Bunda College.

UMass people helped develop Bunda as the agricultural college unit of the University of Malawi.

Keohan is one of seven from UMass who taught at Bunda College, which was established in 1966 and graduated its first diploma class three years later. In 1971, Bunda expects to have 50 in the graduating class. This is remarkable progress in four short years, but, as Mottla puts it, "it takes at least 10 years to develop a viable college specializing in the moder agricultural sciences. Those of us who know Malawi and her needs are, therefore, frustrated because UMass was not furnished sufficient funds to complete the job."

Roister Doisters Ready For Chronicles of Hell

A play of bizzare realism, will be presented by Roister Doisters on February 3,4,5,6 in Bowker auditorium at 8:15.

"Chronicles of Hell," by the twentieth century Flemish playwright Michel de Ghelderode, sets out to display the corruption and carnality of the fourteenth century Roman Catholic Church, but soon it is evident that the author has more in mind.

The play deals with the machinations of the deceased Bishop Jan en Eremo's grotesque priests and household staff. They are gathered in the evening at the Episcopal Palace preparing to offer the last rites for the Bishop, who lies in state before them. Relieved to see him dead, the grasping and depraved household can hardly wait to bury their "shepherd." But the city's populace surging outside the palace and the spirit of the prelate present complications that result in a bizzare conclusion.

The production, under the direction of Robert L. Rotenburg, emphasizes a mixture of fantasy, realism, and Artaudian imagery, yet retains the poetic language so characteristic of Ghelderode's style. There are many elements of "performance theatre" evident in the production. Yet those in the audience, who prefer the safety of the proscenium arch will not be disappointed.

Scene designer is Douglas Cox, with costumes by Paula Cox. Tickets may be purchased at the Bowker Auditorium box office. Reservations may be made by calling 545-2043 or 545-2149. Admission is $1.50.

The Board And Co-Ed Freshmen

When the Board of Trustees met on Dec. 21, they broke what in the past had been an understood measure of Trustee protocol--they overturned one of their own sub-committee's recommendations and refused to allow Freshmen to live in Co-Ed dorms. The Board will get a chance to reconsider the proposal at its next meeting Friday.

The Student Life sub-committee, chaired by Mrs. George R. Rowland, voted unanimously in favor of letting Freshmen in Co-Ed dorms at its meeting at the S.W.A.P. conference in December, on the basis of glowing recommendations from Vice-Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery and several students and administrators.

At that meeting, it was pointed out that the most important single experience a UMass student has is living in a dormitory. The student's academic life is centered around his living quarters; and the student's attitudes and outlook towards the University are shaped by the environment in which he or she lives.

Co-Ed dorms at UMass have changed the campus profoundly. Dormitory damage is less than in the traditional unisex dorms. The same dormitories which were once merely "a place to sleep" are now called "home;" the dreary isolation of on-campus living for students outside of the Co-Ed experience is thus broken.

Consider what the exclusion from Co-Ed dorms means to Freshmen who are adjusting to the rigors of campus life; they are segregated in Freshmen ghettos where there is little contact with upperclassmen; the best life-style on campus is denyed them, despite the fact that they want to live in Co-Ed dorms and their parents do not mind.

The Board twisted Logic in an arbitrary fashion when it argued that a Freshman who is, perhaps, a 24 year-old army veteran, should not be allowed the same living experience grated to a 19 year-old sophomore.

When the Board defeated the Co-Ed plan by a 7-6 vote, Trustee Lamb-son called the Freshman plan a "liberal trend." This quasi-moral rationalization is supported only by over-reactive political caution on the Board's part.

It is hoped that the Trustees will reverse their stand and accept the Freshman Co-Ed proposal this Friday in Boston, and thereby allow all students the right to choose whatever living conditions they wish. The Co-Ed plan is not a question of "liberal trends;" it is a reasonable means by which the University can humanize itself a bit and help Freshmen adjust to living at a most critical time in their lives.

Peter Pascarelli

It Ain't Worth It Anyway

Rumblings from our leaders in the legislature and some of our leaders on the Board of Trustees indicate there is a strong possibility of a tuition increase for next year. The main reasons for this sentiment can be considered under any one of the following.

1. The state university should do its part to help ease the state's financial burden.
2. The state university is becoming the haven for snotty, rich kids who go here to save money.
3. Stick it to those academic snobs and long-haired perverts.

The reasoning of all this tends to escape me. For taking the reasons in order, they are lacking in logic. Not that some trustees and some legislators could ever be accused of being illogical.

The statement that the state university should help a state, that ranks 19th nationally in per capita state aid to higher education, relieve its financial burden seems a bit ludicrous. The state university has done its part for years in taking severed budgets, depleted programs, and meager handouts.

This plus the fact that a wholesale rise in tuition would raise around $35 million which is a drop in the old bucket compared to what the state needs to balance the budget all makes the first reason pretty flimsy.

Number two assumes that UMass is a cheap place to go. Yes, the in state tuition is but a mere $200. But the cost of going to UMass/Amherst is approximately $1610 which makes UMass 19th highest nationally among the country's 89 land grant institutions in total cost per student. And the UMass living costs are the fifth highest in the country among the same 89 land grant institutions. And the UMass tuition is approximately at the national median for in state students. And finally, wasn't the whole, original purpose of state universities and colleges to give low cost quality education to its state residents who could not afford private schools?

Finally the third. It may be the most plausible. College students and faculty are not held in high esteem by the minds that rule. Witness the rape of California's proud state system. Legislators, always with an eye to the ballot box, will want to pacify the local yokels screaming for scalps, and use the tuition hike as one means.

The trustees are harder to figure. Maybe they have an eye to their boss, the Governor. But it doesn't seem to figure that they who always remind us over and over and over that they have the best wishes of the university at heart, wish to hike tuition and thus insure that their university will exclude everyone who can't afford to pay private school costs. And have the university pay for the state's financial blunders.

For the university doesn't get a cent from tuition; it all goes to the state. Meanwhile we will have a state university which prides itself in being a cross-section of the state and will be made up of only the affluent 10%.

But just worry about the 10%. They pay the campaign contributions, don't they, esteemed and august general court?

Soft Parameters Win Again

Every time they start digging up the campus, they cite some obscure study that, they claim, allows them to do it.

But we know better.

It all started about a couple of years ago when they were all sitting around bored with nothing to do. Jack the Builder was sitting in a corner playing with an Erector set and muttering to himself, "No, that'll never do. It'd sink within a month when all of a sudden he had a blinding, inspiring thought.

"Hey gang! Want to play Monopoly?"

A cloud of smoke on the other side of the room emitted a cough and then a jolly voice said, "Humph. That's a terrific idea, Jack. I'll get Bill to get the board, Mort, you get the junk off the table, Alice, call Jerry up and see if he wants to play, and David, you run out and see if all the pawns can come over."

That's how it started.

The players, clockwise around the table, included Jack the Builder, David the Bookworm, Randolph the Rock, Oz, Ken P., Mike W., Mort, John H. from the Trustees and, representing the real money on campus, someone named Brand.

Jerry refused to play and nobody bothered to ask Dean Field.

"OK" said Oz, "who rolls first? David, you're the youngest. Why don't you go?"

David picked up the dice and threw a nine.

"1,2,3,4,5,6,7,8,9," he counted off. "Take a chance."

The card read: There is already too much grass on campus. You get to dig some up.

David leaped out of his chair, kissing the little card. "At last, at last," he said.

Jack the Builder reached up and pulled him back into the chair and said, "Don't get so excited. I haven't rolled yet."

Jack picked up the dice and cupped them in his hands. "Come on baby. Give me a break" and flung them onto the board.

"Big eleven" he screamed and counted off eleven spaces. He landed on the space marked "Park Avenue". He rubbed his hands with glee and said "First chance I get I'm building a hotel and making you guys pay through the nose."

It was supposed to be Randolph the Rock's turn next but Oz sent him off on an errand so he picked up the dice.

He leaned back in his swivel chair and blew a smoke ring which floated across the room and landed in John H's face. John H. began to sneeze and his eyes began to water.

Oz threw the dice with a whip-like motion of his arm.

"Hmmph. Preposterous," he snorted. "Bill, on the way in, pick up those dice in the desk, will you!" he shouted into the other office.

Randolph the Rock slid back into his chair and took his turn. It came up four and four was Whitmore. Randolph sat back contentedly, knowing full well what that meant.

All of a sudden a fight broke out between Mort and Ken. Oz jumped up and shouted, "If you don't cut it out, I'll put my cigar out in the palm of your hand" and the two quieted down.

Ken P. was next. He rolled an eight which he counted off and found himself on Marvin Gardens.

David sighed and said, "Nuts."

Mort shouted at Ken, "You back-stabber. I wanted to build there."

Oz told him to be quiet or to get out of the room.

The game dragged on far into the night. The room filled with cigar smoke, they loosened their ties and finally took them off. They rolled up their shirt-sleeves and took off their shoes.

When the sun came up there were only two people left in the room who were conscious: Oz and Jack the Builder.

"Well," said Jack, "looks like we've beaten them."

"Sure does," grunted Oz. "What do you think we ought to do with the place now that we own it?"

Jack began to laugh, a deep, satisfying, contagious, belly-laugh.

Wiping the tears from his eyes, he chuckled and said, "What do you mean 'we'?"

PLANNING'EM GOOD is our business. Notice the way in which the damn students can't walk in this area. Sticking the building in there does the trick. Then ram in some mud, heavy trucks, get the feasibility study going, get the money and get out. They never knew what was coming. We shipped that one right by 'em. (photo courtesy UMass news bureau)

Howland Explains Legal Matters

To The Editor:

As your readers return to the exigencies of life off-campus at Amherst, some new legal matters merit their attention.

Any person paying a security deposit after January 1, 1971 is entitled to its return, less deductions authorized by law, within thirty days after the lawful termination of the tenancy. Failure to make return within the time specified subjects the landlord to liability for twice the amount wrongfully withheld, i.e. all of the deposit or the lawful balance. Incidentally, such amount is subject to five percent interest under certain circumstances which should not be of great concern to students in most cases. The law is found as Chapter 666 of the Laws of 1970 and is cited as Section 15B of Chapter 186 of the General Laws of Massachusetts.

Debits for most ordinary purposes must be collected only by methods and practices that are "fair and reasonable". Communication of a threat to take action that the creditor does not intend to take or does not take in the usual course of business is an unfair practice. An unfair practice makes the Attorney General legally angry and a great many potential penalties may result. The law is found as Chapter 883 of the Laws of 1970 and appears as Section 49 of Chapter 93 and Chapter 93A generally of the General Laws of Massachusetts.

There are some students that may be interested in a Nebraska case Thompson v. Board of Regents of the University of Nebraska. Docket No. 260 Page 154 (District Court of Lancaster County, November 25, 1970) which declared a Nebraska statute unconstitutional in part. The unconstitutional portion provided that no person shall be deemed to have established residence in Nebraska during the time of attendance at a state institution of higher learning, no matter how genuine and long-continued the actual residence in the state may be. The issue was over payment of non-resident tuition. The plaintiff registered to vote in Nebraska, registered his car there, paid income and sales taxes there and owned a home there. The plaintiff was required to pay out-of-state tuition for his first semester but was refunded $1374.50 because he should not have been required to pay non-resident tuition for any subsequent semester.

Very truly yours,
RICHARD M. HOWLAND

Monsanto In Self-Defense

To the Editor:

We have learned that a letter dated Nov. 11, 1970, from an organization called "Responsible Environmental Action Program" of Gonzalez, Fla., was published in your newspaper. And we feel your readers should know Monsanto Company's position on this matter.

It is apparent that the writer did not have a complete understanding of the present state of pollution control at our Pensacola, Fla., plant. For example, as of last September less than 2 per cent of the BOD generated by plant operations was discharged into the Escambia River. This represents a reduction of over 98 per cent in total BOD generated by the plant -- the equivalent of tertiary treatment. Tertiary treatment is a third stage waste treatment system practiced in only a very few places in the United States today. The other categories of pollutants noted in the letter were similarly reduced.

The figures quoted in the letter were those which appeared in a report of a federal hearing held Jan. 21 and 22, 1970, at Gulf Breeze, Fla. We objected to these figures at the time principally because they did not take into account the condition of the waters in the river prior to use by our plant. In effect, the pollution statistics quoted from this report were not limited to the portions actually contributed by our plant.

It is surprising to us that a plant that has done so much and spent so many millions of dollars to abate pollution since its completion 17 years ago has been the target of so much ill-considered, uninformed and unfair criticism.

The plant had a full-time pollution control technical staff prior to the advent of this general practice in industry. The plant built one of the first secondary waste treatment systems in the nation devoted exclusively to industrial waste. When we felt that this method of abatement might be inadequate, the plant inproved its waste removal techniques through more and better technology, and today produces an effluent that has more than 98 per cent of the oxygen-challenging BOD removed.

Those who would criticize our treatment of wastes should familiarize themselves with the facts.

The letter mentions AstroTurf. This product does not contribute to environmental problems because scientists say the supply of oxygen is so vast as to be virtually inexhaustible. The fact is that this kind of artificial turf eliminates the need for lawn and garden chemicals.

In summary, we feel the people involved in writing the letter, although possibly well-meaning, were misguided.

Western Mass. Defended

To the Editors:

Thank Heaven for the little blessings bestowed upon us poor Western Mass. folk! Imagine the esteemed Daily Collegian editors from Near Boston (It is true that any town or city in The East is adequately described by the phrase Near Boston, is it not?) using us as the subject of one of their editorials in their December 23rd issue.

Now, a month later, I am still amazed at this objectivity shown by the Eastern Massachusetts residents. But one thing does puzzle me. How is it that this elite class of Near Boston can give up the perfect conditions of that Cradle of Civilization to come to the University of Massachusetts in the Western Wilderness? Surely, all of these people were accepted at schools in "The East, weren't they?

Bromery Welcomes Semester, Looks Forward To Changes

(Ed. Note: The following is a message from Dr. Randolph W. Bromery, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, to the student body, upon the beginning of the new semester.)

I would like to take this opportunity to wish the senate officers, Senators and all students a very happy, prosperous, and productive New Year. I look forward with great anticipation to working closely with you in the reorganization of the Office of Student Affairs, the development of a new and innovative dining commons programs, and a more diverse, meaningful, and responsive dormitory living experience.

To effect the above changes in the life styles of students on this campus, I will need the advice, cooperation, and support of all of the members of the Student Senate, the Southwest Assembly, the student body and other members of the campus community. If we are successful, I can envision a real and complete decentralization of authority within the Office of Student Affairs in order to be more rapidly responsive to the needs of students. I also envision non-compulsory varied dining common programs and a wide variety of dormitory life styles designed specifically to fit the varied needs and desires of individual students and student groups. Many options in dining accommodations will be explored within open and clearly defined budgetary and physical limitations. We should consider dining options ranging from slightly higher cost table service - a la carte restaurant type facilities to relatively inexpensive meal plan cafeterias with a menu that includes regular, diet, soul-food, Spanish-American and other varied food choices. In addition to the current Co-ed Dorms, Residential Colleges, "Quiet" dorms, dormitory living could include many other optional coed and single sex life styles. In this manner students could select a unique living experience rather than an institutional type room in an amorphous residence hall. Those persons not compatible with a particular residence hall life style could elect to move to a dormitory that more closely fits their expectations, desires, personalities, and academic programs.

I further envision an effective, responsible, and participatory campus security program designed to offer better protection for all members of our campus community. If we are engaged in achieving our individual academic goals and the development of a new living-learning experience, we must design a viable internal and external security program of which all community members assume a responsibility. As part of this new campus security program, I am proposing the establishment of a Police-Community Relations Institute which could help integrate a viable security program into our academic and social community.

If we are successful in effecting needed positive changes in our own University Community, then the experiences and knowledge obtained from this effort can be applied to solving some of the problems we will face when we attempt to improve the communities in which we live after leaving the University. For this effort to succeed, we must develop a renewed sense of individual responsibility and concern for our fellow human beings. Internally, this must include a massive and comprehensive campaign against drug abuse and the breakdown of internal dormitory security.

This year can mark the beginning of change and innovation by focusing our collective efforts and abilities to modify our own campus environment. I am dedicated to opening up this institution rather than shutting it down. This could be the start of a new experiment in a living and learning experience on a large enough scale that it could have a profound effect on the College and University communities throughout the Commonwealth and the country. Our collective potential energies can be utilized to effect prositive changes in our university community and modify our environment. This can be the decade of change. I am ready to proceed immediately but need your continued and renewed support.

Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs

ROTC Aids Pakistanians

Contributions totaling $1,165.75 have been sent by a group of ROTC students to Pakistan for the relief of flood victims in that country.

At the request of the students, UMass Chancellor Oswald Tippo sent the money to Senator Edward M. Kennedy and asked that he forward it to appropriate Pakistani officials.

Soon after the cyclone-tidal wave disaster hit East Pakistan in November, students of the Army and Air Force ROTC began a month of door-to-door solicitations in residence halls. They also set up a donations table in the Campus Center and advertised their campaign on local television and two campus radio stations--WMUA, and WFCR which is operated by the Five College network.

In his letter to Senator Kennedy, Chancellor Tippo said the donation to the people of East Pakistan was one result of the ROTC student campaign. "Another result," he said, "is a feeling of thankfulness that students and others of us here at UMass feel at being able to give some aid and perhaps some comfort in a time of disaster."

Five College Board Aids Study Abroad

The Five College Academic Policy Advisory Board has approved the establishment of a Five College Committee on Overseas Programs to explore possibilities for cooperation in overseas study activities and related fields.

The committee, set up in November with one member from each of the five institutions, has met twice already and is actively digging into questions of pooling information on overseas study programs so that students at all five colleges can have as much information as possible on which to make decisions about studying abroad.

By comparing experiences on evaluating the work of five college students in foreign programs and universities, the committee hopes to make it easier to estimate the academic credit a student might earn through different kinds of study abroad programs.

A five college file has been set up containing comments of students who studied abroad on their experience; the file is presently at the International Programs Office of the University but is available to all five college students and faculty.

In the future the committee plans to consider the possibility of five college overseas study programs, for example, in Africa. The UMass representative on the committee, Mrs. Barbara B. Burn, Director of International Programs, would welcome any comments and suggestions from students, staff and faculty at the university, on programs and activities that the new committee might consider or support.

Search Committee Selects New UMass Grid Coach.

MacPherson Succeeds Fusia

A six-week search last week with the announcement of Richard "Dick" MacPherson, an assistant coach with the Denver Broncos professional football team, as UMass' 18th head football coach. The selection by a university search committee and Chancellor Oswald Tippo's appointment culminated screening procedures for the post vacated by Vic Fusia, who retired Dec. 8 to assume an administrative post.

MacPherson is an affable 40-year old native of Old Town, Maine and a 1958 graduate of Springfield College, where he was an All-New England center and linebacker and recipient of the Springfield College Scholar-Athlete Award. An Air Force veteran, MacPherson earned a masters degree from the University of Illinois, where he also served as assistant freshman coach.

The coach then came to UMass in 1959 and was head freshman coach for two years. He left a big impression on campus during the two years, and has maintained close friendships in the area.

MacPherson, in 1961, went with then UMass coach Chuck Studley, to the University of Cincinnati, where he was a top assistant coach. During his five years at Cincinnati where he helped recruit and coach such stars as Cincinnati Bengal quaterback Greg Cook and Baltimore Colt placekicking hero, Jim O'Brien.

From Cincinnati, MacPherson moved to the University of Maryland, where he was assistant coach under Lou Saban. When Saban received a lengthy contract to coach the Denver Broncos, MacPherson went along with Saban to the pros and has been defensive coordinator and top assistant. The Denver defensive unit is one of the youngest and poetntially best units in pro football today.

The Redman coach will have a great act to follow in the successful record of Fusia. Fusia won five Yankee Conference titles (four outright, one disputed), in ten years and the coach had only two losing seasons in the decade.

The Screening Committee for the new head coach consisted of Chairman George Richason, who is also chairman of the Athletic Council and head of the Chemistry Department, Dr. David C. Bischoff, Associate Provost and Assistant Dean of Physical Education, Warren P. McGuirk, Dean of the School of Physical Education and Director of Athletics, Donald Junkins, Associate Professor of English, Evan Johnston, Executive Vice President of the Associate Alumni, and Peter Pascarelli, Editor-In-Chief of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, plus Advisory Members of the Committee, John Hulecki and Dennis Keating, co-captains of the 1971 football team, Bruce Cochrane, Associate Dean of Students and former UMass football great, and Robert O'Connell, Committee Secretary and Assistant Director of Athletics.

MacPherson was the choice from around 80 applicants and over a dozen of candidates interviewed. He has already assumed duties, and is busy trying to catch up in recruiting.

The new coach will have six assistant coaches, and right now it is not known how many will be retained from the present staff. The announcement of some of the assistants will probably be made later this week.

Redmen Are Best In Hall Of Fame, Upping Mark To 10-0

UMass Nabs Holiday Tourney

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

SPRINGFIELD-While UMass basketball opponents Providence College and Holy Cross were competing in the ECAC Holiday Festival Tournament in New York City's Madison Square Garden with the likes of South Carolina, Western Kentucky, St. John's and Manhattan, the Redman hoopsters found themselves in the eight-team field of the First Annual Basketball Hall of Fame Holiday Festival Tournament in the Springfield College Memorial Field House with the likes of Long Island University, Valparaiso and St. Michael's.

UMass entered the tourney with a 7-0 slate and exited in 10-0 style, copping the crown after defeating Fairfield University 95-82 on Dec. 28, St. Michael's College 94-59 in a semi-final game on Dec. 29, and Colgate University 79-67 in the championship game on Dec. 30.

The Redmen were the favorites throughout the three-day affair; in fact the tournament was moulded around UMass and its superb junior forward Julius Erving. Neither did the team nor Erving let anyone down, as the 6'6 Redman co-captain swept most valuable player honors.

UMass picked up two spots on the all-tournament squad. One went to Erving, the other to his co-captain counterpart, senior Ken Mathias, who played very strongly.

The Jack Leaman-coached contingent did not play the kind of basketball in the Hall of Fame tourney as it is capable of playing, but the Redmen did put forth a solid-enough effort to win the thing.

Three men were scoring standouts for UMass at Springfield, as Erving's tourney average was 30.7, Mathias' average was 17.7, and junior guard John Betancourt tallied an average of 13 points for the three tilts. Juniors Mike Pagliara and Rich Vogeley owned 8.7 tourney scoring marks, while Chris Coffin, another junior, chipped in at 4.7.

Rebounding was a two-man affair for the Redman cause with Erving averaging a high 25.3 and Mathias a solid 12.3. Both Erving's scoring and rebounding marks were holiday highs among all the players in the tournament fold.

UMass' margin of winning was an-even 20 points, as the Redmen outscored Fairfield, St. Mike's and Colgate at an average of 89.3 to 69.3. From the floor, the Redmen's shooting percentage was 45.1 for the three days as compared to their opponents' 33.4. From the foul line UMass was 65.1, but its opponents were slightly worse at 63.5.

Outside of Erving and Mathias, who earned the two positions on the all-tourney team, LIU's 6'8 junior Walter Jones was a selectee as were Colgate seniors Nick Scaccia and Don Ward. Not a single guard won an all-tourney berth. Scaccia and Ward, at 6'6 and 6'4, are both forwards, as are 6'7 Mathias and Erving.

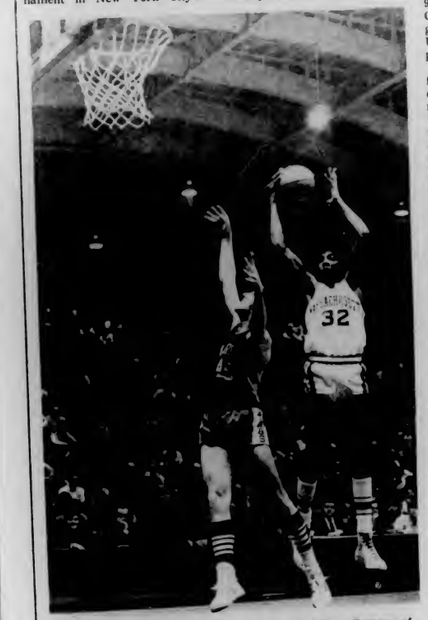
The following is a game-by-game wrap-up of the Hall of Fame tournament:

DEC. 28--UMASS vs. FAIRFIELD: Although UMass went on to win this game 95-82, there was much doubt right before the contest that the final spread would be 13 points or even that the Redmen would win.

The reason for that doubt was an ailing Erving. It was learned just prior to gametime that the junior was being hampered by a pesty flu bug, and it showed when he took warmups with the team. He just went through the motions and looked very sluggish in doing so. Erving even took to the bench while his teammates were still warming up. His being below-par physically appeared to affect the entire squad, as the entire pregame drills were run in listless fashion.

But the Redmen had enough of something to jump out of an early 7-0 lead in the first two and a half minutes. They would never lose the lead for the remainder of the contest. With about nine minutes to go to the half UMass was confortably in front, 23-10.

By halftime the score favored the Redmen, 43-26. Erving's play didn't suffer a great deal, as his stats at intermission were 11 point and 14 rebounds. For UMass, Mathias and Betancourt had11 andten first half points respectively.



In the second half Erving played even better, although the Stags of Fairfield were able to make a run at the Redmen very late in the game. Seven minutes into the half UMass was on top of a 20-point, 59-39, lead and could afford to coast.

Over the next eight minutes the Redmen had only lost three points of that lead and had a Stag by the horns, 81-64, with just over five minutes to play. At this point Fairfield made its move, slicing the lead to eight points, 84-76, in a matter of two minutes time.

However, UMass responded by outscoring the Stags 11-6 the rest of the way for the final 95-82 count.

The game was marred by too many quick whistles; 54 personal fouls were called. The Redman record climbed to 8-0; Fairfield's dropped to 1-4.

In other first round games, St. Mike's defeated Springfield, 92-72, to move into the semis against UMass. Colgate nipped American International College 88-86, setting itself up for a semi-final match against LIU, which swept by Valparaiso, 73-52.

BOUNDING HIGH - Julius Erving, out-jumping Steve Romano of Fairfield in the first round of the Hall of Fame tournament at Springfield, put together three excellent games at that affair and went away with the most valuable player award as the Redmen copped the tourney with three successive wins over Fairfield, St. Michael's and Colgate. DEC. 29--UMass vs. ST. MICHAEL'S (Semi-final Game): UMass defeated St. Mike's, 94-59, to advance into the championship round, as Erving collected 30 rebounds, surpassing his own Redman record of 28 in one contest, and scored 33 points.

Just as the score indicates, the Redmen had little trouble with the Purple Knights from Vermont. The lead at halftime was 42-32, Erving's 17 points and 18 rebounds paced UMass in this period.

In This Corner

25-1 Ain't So Bad

By PETER PASCARELLI
Editor-In-Chief

It was the odd coincidence Saturday for both UCLA and UMass to be knocked from the unbeaten ranks among the nation's college basketball teams. Both were defeated by superlative performances by a guard,; UCLA by Notre Dame's Austin Carr, and UMass by Providence's Ernie DiGregorio. Both were defeated on rabid enemy courts. Both were defeated on television.

There the similarities end, between UCLA and UMass.

The Redman loss to Providence was the type of defeat that can wreck team morale, and get a team muttering to itself for weeks to come. UMass had struggled from behind all night, and with 18 seconds left, and victory in its hands, it missed three shots all by inches.

But UMass morale won't be wrecked, for this team has too much character, and guts, and ability, and too much Jack Leaman to let one loss hurt it. And the fact that the game was headlined the next day as a Providence upset of Massachusetts, shows how far UMass basketball has come. This is the Providence of Len Wilkens, Jimmy Walker, N.I.T., fame, etc., etc., whose win over UMass, on the Friars' home court, was termed an upset.

The Redmen are into the meat of their schedule, with their next three games the biggest of the year right now. Tonight, they play nationally-ranked Fordham, Saturday Northeastern, which has won ten straight, and then Tuesday, it's down to Worcester and Holy Cross. 'Nuff said.

Then in another week comes that old nemesis Boston College, with Connecticut, Rhode Island, Syracuse, George Washington, and the rest to follow.

UMass basketball is the biggest thing on campus right now. It is probably one of the few things on campus that virtually everyone has some interest in. The Redmen did not back into this interest, they have earned it.

The Providence loss is not enough to hurt what this team has accomplished the past year and a half. The N.I.T., three successive Yankee Conference titles, and a strangehold on a fourth, 21 straight regular season wins, nation-wide attention, and the loyalties of a complete student body.

UMass has the ability to win the rest of its games. This is not an idle, partisan, pipe dream. This is instead a realistic possibility. Its backcourt has been outstanding, especially in the past two games, with John Betancourt and Mike Pagliara scoring 35 points between them Saturday, against the taller Friars. The frontcourt has been bolstered by the consistent rebounding of Ken Mathias, the improving Chris Coffin, Rick Vogeley, a deadly shooter in substitute role, and of course, the finest basketballplayer ever to play for a New England college, Julius Erving.

And both the frontcourt and the backcourt will be bolstered by the presence of Tom McLaughlin, a transfer who becomes eligible against Northeastern, and who will be a valuable and versatile performer. Virtually all of the remaining have helped in some way at some time, and can be counted on to do the same the rest of the way.

Yes, the Providence loss was a tough one. It can't be forgotten. But a team with this much ability and this much to play for won't be hurt by it. Neither will a team that is coached by what has to be one of the finest hoop mentors anywhere, Jack Leaman.

Besides, a 25-1 record isn't all that bad.

Throughout the game Erving looked like his old self, and it was readily apparent by his performance that the flu bug had stopped bugging No. 32.

On the whole it was not a strong Redman performance. Nineteen turnovers tell part of the story, another part is told by the competition; St. Mike's is a team that lost to Holy Cross earlier in the year by something like 70 points.

Because it turned into a lopsided affair UMass coach Jack Leaman was able to play all 14 of his squad members. Mathias was second leading Redman scorer with 12 points. It was a poor Redman shooting night, only 40% from the floor.

Erving's previously rebounding high of 28 came a year ago in games against Providence College and Maine. UMass' season mark was now 9-0. A big factor in the onesided outcome: the winners outrebounded their foes, 8 81-45. In the other semi-final tilt, Colgate advanced to the championship game by outpointing LIU, 97-86. In the two consolation semi-final matchups, Valparaiso defeated AIC, 78-61, and Springfield sent home a fine Fairfield team, 89-83.

DEC. 30--UMASS vs. COLGATE (Championship Game): Behind a couple of excellent performances by its co-captains Erving and Mathias, UMass beat Colgate, 79-67, to win this first Hall of Fame tournament.

Erving and Mathias were the game's two best scorers, with 31 and 24 points respectively, and the game's two best rebounders, with 20 and 18. The two Redmen tallied 32 of UMass' 38 first-half points or the equal of the whole Colgate team, which trailed at the half 38-32.

The Red Raiders were the tourney's sleepers and sliced the thin six-point halftime edge even thinner during second-half action. The Redmen were not out of the woods until the very end.

Betancourt, who had not had a very good tourney and who had a lousy first half against Colgate, helped lift UMass past the Red Raiders in the second half. His basket with about ten and a half minutes left in the affair gave the Redmen but a one-point, 54-53 advantage.

However he accounted for eight of the next 13 UMass points, as the Redmen streaked out ahead, 67-58, with about six minutes remaining. A little later on it was a Betancourt steal that produced a key hoop for the eventual winners, who went on to take the whole shebang in decent style.

Betancourt scored the great majority of his 14 points in the second half. UMass outrebounded its opponent 59-37. Along with Betancourt both Erving and Mathias scored in double figures in the second half, sinking 13 and ten points respectively.

In two consolation affairs, LIU topped St. Mike's, 87-81, for third place in the final tourney standings, and Springfield nipped Valparaiso, 54-49, for fifth place.

HOOP NOTES-The tournament director was Lee Williams, who is also the Executive Director of the Naismith Memorial Hall of Fame in Springfield, into which Bob Cousy, Bob Petit and Abe Saperstein were recently inducted...Persons who had tickets to the first round of the tourney were allowed to tour the Hall of Fame free of charge.. Two of the outstanding highlights of the Hall of Fame are "Pistol Pete's saggy socks", both of them...Each game the Redmen appeared in was a sellout (2600 is capacity) as a lot of people from the Springfield area came to get a look at Mr. Erving...He didn't let them down....This tournament was originally created with hopes of having it held in Springfield's new civic center, but that place is still under construction and won't even be ready in time for next year's Hall of Fame affair...That tourney will be held in AIC's place, Butova Memorial Gymnasium, and the field will comprise AIC, Springfield College, Ball State, Bucknell, Morris Harvey, Assumption College, Boston University and St. Peter's College...It was strange to realize that UMass actually was playing a team, Colgate, in the finals that trailed an AIC team for most of its first round game, eventually winning the game by only two points, 88-86, and that was in overtime...Recall that the Redmen have already defeated AIC this year, by an unbelievable 93-40 margin...George Groom, a 6'2 sophomore, was Fairfield's best ballplayer in the Stag-Redman affair....Vogeley had his season's high of 16 points in that first-round win over Fairfield...These three games in Springfield witnessed the emergence of Sam Provo as a key substitute at guard for UMass...Bill Pattison, a 6'2 junior forward, was St. Mike's best player against UMass, scoring 15 points, 14 in the first half... Colgate is a class aggregate, one which entered the tourney at 3-2, left at 5-3, and proved its mettle, especially in its semi-final victory at the hands of talented LIU squad...-Three players come to mind when one talks about Colgate' they are Les Bingham, a 6'1 senior guard, Ward, a 6'4 senior forward and Nick Scaccia, a 6'6 senior forward....These three scored 16, 18 and 17 points cespectively in the title game with the Redmen...The tournament championship was UMass' second holiday crown in as many years, the Redmen having nabbed first place in last year's Gem City Tournament at Erie, Pennsylvania.

MacPherson: 'UMass Will Be A Winner'

MacPherson lays it down when he affirms, "The most important part of this program is the recruitment of the student-athlete."

He desires the participation of the non-athlete students in his program in their role as fans. "I believe in students. I want them to be a part of it." He hopes that students will attend not only home nits, but those away as well. "Wherever we go, I want it to be a home game."

And MacPherson looks for campus unity, asserting, "As a campus we should win together; as a campus we should lose together."

Tying things together, the coach has stated, "I'm not a great coach and I'll never say I am. I need talent...I need an excellent staff and I intend to have both. Give me those two things...and I'll have them...and UMass will be a winning team."

And a final tidbit for thought from Mr. MacPherson: "Football is a serious game and a fun game. And the fun in football is winning. That's what I want...to win."

Redmen Take Eleventh Straight

UMass Sluggish In BU Win, 77-63

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

BOSTON- After a 22 day ' y-off, the UMass basketball team dumped the Terriers of Boston University despite a sluggish performance before a turn-away crowd of over 1500 fans at Sargent Gym on January 21, 77-63. It was the Redmen's eleventh straight victory of the season without a defeat while the Boston club slumped to 2-8.

The last UMass game before the BU affair was way back on December 30th when the Redmen downed Colgate in the finale of the Hall of Fame Tournament. The break adversely affected the hoopsters who were sloppy throughout and only the outstanding performance of junior guard Mike Pagliara saved the Redmen in this one.

Pagliara had a career high of 24 points as he netted eight of nine from the floor and eight of ten from the charity stripe. He connected for seven crucial points early in the second half as the Redmen ran off 11 straight points to ice the contest.

Also outstanding for UMass was senior co-captain Ken Mathias who was the game's leading rebounder with 17 caroms. It was his board play along wit h Pagliara's bombing which eventually led the Redmen past the upset-minded Terriers.

The first half was surprisingly close all of the way. UMass got a break before the contest even started as BU was charged with a technical foul for dunking during warm-up drills. The free throw was missed but UMass got the ball and Julius Erving, who had a rare off night, connected on a 20-footer to put the Redmen on top.

UMass jumped ahead, 10-4, at 16:13 on a three-point play by Chris Coffin from an Erving feed. It looked at this point as if the Redmen would romp after all. But less than three minutes later, the Terriers had knotted the count at 11 and their tight defense was giving UMass problems.

When UMass saw a 31-23 lead shrink to a 35-31 halftime margin, it was obvious that this was not one of UMass' better efforts. But as poorly as the Amherst boys played, the Terriers played well. Senior James Garvin was the main BU weapon as he ended the evening with 23 points, 16 in the first half.

The turning point of the contest came with about 18 minutes left to go. Coffin pulled down a defensive rebound but his pass was intercepted by a Terrier. The BU player drove for the hoop and put the ball in but was called for a charging foul in the process. When the referees disallowed the basket, a Terrier assistant coach vociferously objected and BU was hit with a technical foul.

From that point, the Redmen ran off eleven straight points. When the spree was over the score had the Terriers behind, 52-35, and this cushion was enough to last the Redmen who needed everything they could get in this one. The lead fluctuated between ten points and the final margin of 24.

With the way UMass played, it was lucky for the Redmen that the opposition was Boston U. rather than some of the clubs UMass must face in the coming weeks. The Redmen were still, for one more game anyway, the only undefeated team in New England.

LAYUP LINES - Erving , on his "off night" only had 22 points and 16 rebounds. In his only Boston appearance of the season, the junior star only netted nine of 25 field goal attempts and seemed to be bothered by the lay-off more than some of the other players...At least 400 fans were turned away at the door and reportedly about 40 of them had tickets. Campus police had a hard time clearing the entrances...Coach Jack Leaman once again was victorious over his alma mater. Leaman, it was revealed in the game program, has the most points for a Terrier backcourtman in a season and a career in BU history. He also ranks as the fifth leading all-time scorer with 961 career points.

B U Game Stars

Heroes in UMass' win over the Terriers of BU were Mike Pagliara (left) for the Redmen and James Garvin (right) for Boston University.

Pagliara played perhaps his finest game in a UMass uniform. The junior guard missed only one field goal attempt all night and his 24 points were a game high. He led the Redman's second half spurt which broke open a previously tight battle and locked up UMass' eleventh straight win.

Garvin was immense throughout the game. He scored 23 points, 16 in the first half, and pulled down ten rebounds. In a game in which UMass' Julius Erving was the main drawing card, Garvin proved that he too was a very talented ball player.

WMUA On The Air

As the UMass basketball team returns to Amherst, WMUA will return to the air to cover all the action beginning tonight as the Redmen take on the highly-touted Rams of Fordham.

Doing the play-by-play will be WMUA Station Manager Ken Horseman. Color will be added by Dave Melvin. Air time will be just prior to the 8 p.m. tap off time.

WMUA will broadcast the remainder of UMass' hoop tilts as well as selected hockey games.

Erving Chosen By YanCon

UMass' Julius Erving has been selected as the top frontcourt player of the week in the Yankee Conference for his performances in the Redman's battles with Boston University and Providence. Vermont's Ray Ortiz and Rhode Island's Steve Rowell were chosen as the top backcourt and sophomore players.

Erving, a 6'6 junior forward, scored 41 points and grabbed 34 rebounds while picking up 10 assists in UMass' victory over BU and loss to Providence.

Ortiz, who stands only 5'9, connected on 10 of 15 field goal attempts and 8 of 9 free throws for 28 points, while also getting six rebounds and five assists, as Vermont upset Fairfield, 86-74.

Rowell, who will be remembered by UMass fans for his shot which sent the UMass-URI game into overtime, scored 23 points as the Rams lost at West Virginia, 107-90.

UMass Loses First

Redmen Fall In Thriller To PC, 73-72

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

PROVIDENCE, R.I. - In one of the most exciting games the UMass basketball team has played in a long time, the Redmen were dumped from the ranks of the unbeaten, 73-72, in a fiercely fought "nip'n'tuck" affair at Alumni Hall before a sell-out crowd of 3300 on January 23. UMass now stands at 11-1, and the Friars are 10-3.

If one word could sum up the UMass feeling about this game it would have to be frustration. In an unbelievable turn of events, the Redmen were handed a golden opportunity to pull an almost certain defeat out of the fire, but as it turned out it was all for naught.

The situation was straight from a Hollywood 'B' movie. With 0:42 on the clock, Ernie DiGregorio, who was unbelievable throughout the game's leading scorer with 33 points, netted two free throws to give the Friars a seemingly safe lead of four, 73-69.

With one foul to waste, DiGregorio then bumped Mike Pagliara and when the junior guard hit the charity toss, Providence once again had the ball with only 37 seconds to kill on the clock.

If events to this point had been exciting, they got downright dramatic from here on. With the Friars attempting to freeze and the Redmen going for the steal, Providence center Ray Johnson was left alone underneath the hoop. He took the pass, hesitated a second, and then went up for a seemingly unconnested layup.

But Ken Mathias came from nowhere and made a phenomenal block of Johnson's shot and both sides scrambled for the precious loose ball. In the ensuing melee, Jim Larranaga rammed Pagliara sending the junior backcourtman to the line for one-and-one, since the Friars were now in the penalty situation.

With 0:20 on the clock, UMass had one, maybe two, free throws but were trailing by three points, 73-70. UMass fans were hoping that one of two things would happen. Either Pagliara would net the first free throw and miss the second with a teammate grabbing the carom, or he would sink both and UMass would try to steal the inbounds pass.

Either way, Pagliara had to make the first. With the pressure of an undefeated season on his back, the classy guard not only connected on the first but the second as well. The score: Providence 73, UMass 72 with 0:20 still on the clock.

The press was on. Despite the fanatic efforts of the Redmen, the Friars managed to get the ball into DiGregorio, the team leader and, most important at this point, the best ball handler. UMass hopes looked dim. But somehow the great guard was forced into a corner and boxed in by Mathias and Pagliara.

To the disbelief of a vast majority of the audience, DiGregorio was called for an offensive foul, and with 0:18 left the Redmen actually had an opportunity to win. UMass took time out to talk it over.

During the interlude, the crowd still murmured over the turn of events and speculated about who UMass would set up for the shot. In the game for the Redmen were Julius Erving, John Betancourt, Mathias, Pagliara and Rick Vogeley. All good shooters.

As play began, UMass worked the ball as quickly as possible to Vogeley who was at his customary spot about fifteen feet to the left of the hoop. Vogeley took the jump shot and it went in and then out again. As seconds ticked away, there was a scramble for the rebound and it ended up in the hands of Erving right in front of the basket. But he too failed to put it in.

This time the ball was batted out to the right side where Pagliara scooped it up and fired. The Ball bounced off the rim and before the Redmen could retrieve it, the horn had blown and UMass had its first loss of the year.

The game had been a close affair throughout. Providence led at halftime, 40-33, mainly on the bombing of DiGregorio who seemed unstoppable. But UMass was getting some scoring from its own backcourt as Betancourt and Pagliara were both on the mark.

The Redmen closed the gap to three, 44-41, with three minutes gone in the second stanza as Bentancourt banged home four straight hoops, all from fifteen feet or more. Momentum seemed to be swinging towards the Redmen as they finally were able to tie the score at 10:22 at 54-54 and then take the lead. But DiGregorio would not quit and he put the Friars back on top.

After Nehru King hit two short jumpers for Providence the teams traded hoops until Bentancourt scored from eighteen feet. Then the fun started.

LAYUP LINES - Leading scorer for UMass was Bentancourt with 20. Erving, who only converted six of 18 field goal attempts, had 19 points and 17 rebounds while Pagliara had 15 points.

Touching Upon The Redman Sports Scene...

Hoop Heroics, Naming Of Coach Make The News

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

UMass athletics, and some of the figures associated with it, has propped up in the sports news a lot in the last five weeks, or since students attended their last fall semester classes just before the break for the holidays, finals and intercession.

Pertinent to most Redman sports followers was the continued brilliant play of the UMass basketball squad, which won the Hall of Fame tournament in Springfield, defeated Boston University 77-63, and had its perfect 11-0 record dented a bit in an excellent contest with Providence College that the Friars won by a single point, 73-72.

Coach Jack Leaman's Redmen were ranked as the number one team in New England in last week's United Press International polls. With the loss to number three-ranked PC, it's anybody's guess which squad will get the number one nod. Each team should. The poll is released on Wednesdays and represents the voting of NE's coaches.

Let it be known that this UMass hoop squad turned in a whale of an effort against the Friars on PC's home floor, before PC's home fandome, and on one of Providence, R.I.'s television stations, WJAR-TV.

Also of major concern to UMass sports buffs was the naming of Vic Fusia's successor as head Redman football coach. The man selected is Richard "Dick" MacPherson, who leaves an assistant coaching job with the Denver Broncos of the National Football League to take over the UMass grid reins.

This MacPherson is an amiable person, UMass officially "named" him a little over a week ago, last Tuesday to be exact. On that day MacPherson met twice with representatives of the press, once in the morning here at the Campus Center and then later in the afternoon at 5 at Dinty Moore's Restaurant in Boston.

At the latter affair he rapped with the Boston scribes, and left quite an impression with them. The man from the Boston Globe later wrote that "MacPherson...he's people", and the Boston Herald Traveler representative noted that he "doesn't talk like an ordinary coach."

He really is a fine man to talk to. When one is introduced to him, he is friendly and makes it a personal point to remember that person's name, no big thing but then again it's not many a person who does that.

Another UMass sports figure who made some news was former Redman and present Detroit Lions quarterback Greg Landry. Before first semester classes had let out, this young man, who ran the UMass offense in 1965, '66 and '67, had led the Lions of the NFL to five straight victories and a berth in that league's play-offs against the Dallas Cowboys.

The Lions were edged by the Cowboys in a defensive (To say the least!) battle, 5-0. Landry had a bad day at the Detroit helm, but the story doesn't end here. He received little criticism for his play in this affair but rather a lot of big boosts for a job well done, and his potential has been labeled unlimited.

A fine example of the regard in which Landry is held comes from the following five paragraphs quoted from The Sporting News:

"The Lions revolve now around Greg Landry, the quarterback of merely 16 professional starts in three development years.

It was Landry who rallied the Lions as far as Dallas, and it was his first poor day which damaged them there. But he was the least experienced and youngest quarterback in the playoffs and he is a young man of extreme wisdom and savvy.

Dallas has been here in the playoffs five times, said Landry. 'This is our first time. Looking into our backfield and receivers area, none of us has played more than three or four years. Detroit has got an offense and a great defense.

We're going to be back here next year, if not in Dallas, somewhere.

Joe Schmidt already has designated Landry the Lions' No. 1 quarterback for the start of the 1971 training camp. Schmidt also would like to retain Bill Munson, who almost rescued the game for the Lions when Landry was benched for the first time."

UMass football lost a 1971 opponent when it was recently announced that the State University of New York at Buffalo had dropped its entire football program due to lack of money.

The Redman had played Buffalo five times, winning one, losing four, the most recent being Oct. 3's 16-13 affair at Buffalo. Generally speaking, the students at that school aren't rabid college football fans as can be seen in the fact that the UMass-Bull contest of Oct. 3 was Homecoming Day for Buffalo and it drew a mere 5000 fans.

UMass has yet to find a team to replace Buffalo on next fall's schedule.

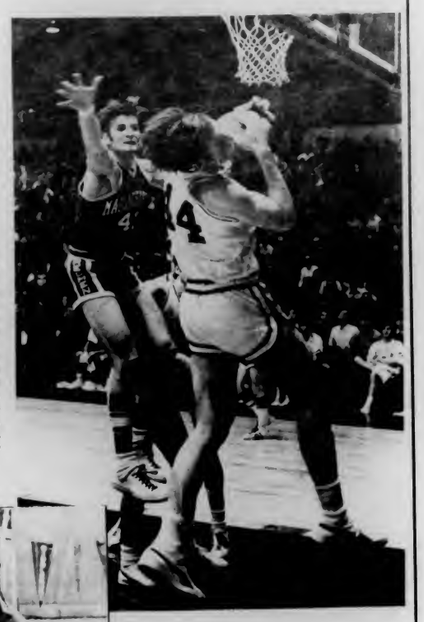
Yet another UMass football figure made sports news when William "Dub" Fesperman, a Redman defensive line coach the past three years under Fusia, was named just Monday to the same position at Dartmouth College.

Fesperman had been in charge of coordinating UMass' defenses, and one will recall that the Redman defense was the team's evident strong point the past two years.

Fesperman is the second assistant coach that new Dartmouth head man Jake Crouthamel has hired since taking the post vacated by Bob Blackman, who exited with most of his staff to pep up the football program at the University of Illinois.



Crouthamel has commented about Fesperman, "Massachusetts has always had an extremely tough defense. I think we're fortunate to have Dub joining us."

Fesperman, 36, is a 1956 graduate of Duke University, where he lettered in football and baseball. He was a two-way guard on the Duke grid team that won the 1955 Orange Bowl by defeating Nebraska, 34-7. He was SPORTS 'N' SORTS - No longer should UMass basketball fans complain of lack of coverage by the Boston media...That city's newspapers and television stations now recognize the Redmen as an excellent hoop unit and Julius Erving as a super player...A perfect example can be found in yesterday's Globe where a writer discusses some of the aftermath of the UMass-PC tilt: "The UMass-Providence game proved three things: 1. UMass is one very good basketball team that will get better when 6-4 transfer Tom McLaughlin is eligible Friday; 2. No one can leave John Betancourt and Mike Pagliara alone (oh, if they were only 6-2!); and 3. Don Lewis, who did the defensive job on Julius Erving and blocked a couple of his shots, is one of the best defensive guards in New England...UMass gets a toughie in Fordham Wednesday at home...The Sports Illustrated Jinx Dept.: S.I. writer Sandy Treadwell was up to do a story on Erving, only to have Julius hurt his ankle Friday and play perhaps his worst game of the year."...

...The team got a big headline in the Herald Traveler the morning after it played Boston University last Thursday...The Globe also ran a very complete story on that game, plus a preview on the Providence game...WBZ-TV in Boston filmed part of that BU game and also did a pre-game interview with Erving...No complaints...

Frosh Hoop Team Hosts Westfield

By FRED ROSENTHAL
Staff Reporter

Tonight, after a layoff of about a month, the UMass freshman basketball team (6-0) will host the Westfield State JV's. The game, which will precede the UMass varsity game with Fordham, will be played in the Cage at 6:00.

On paper the Westfield State JV team appears to be a very capable opponent. It has been averaging close to 90 points per game to about 80 for UMass. However, the UMass frosh have given up only 60 points per game as opposed to 80 for Westfield State.

A few palyers to watch on the Westfield State JV team are John Gibbons (6'1), Tom Daviau (6'4) and Don Byron (6'3). Byron is their leading scorer with 22 points per game.

The Little Redmen have shown exceptional balance in their first six contests with four players, Rick Pitino, Pete Trow, Al Skinner and Art Levine, all averaging in double figures. Also center John Olson is averaging 9.3 points per game.

Leo is lord of the chase, of adventure and speculation. This is perhaps the most colorful of the zodiacal signs. There is dash, intrigue and showmanship. Weak areas are the back and heart. Leo should avoid lifting heavy objects unless conditioned to do so. These are the actors and theatrical producers. Nothing is apt to be no hum around Leo, at least not for very long.

It's Fordham At The Cage At 8

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

For the first half of this basketball season the surprise team in the East has been Fordham University which has taken a complete about face in its basketball program to go from a medicore team last year to not only one of the best in the East, but also one of the best teams in the nation as the latest wire polls have indicated.

Tonight at Curry Hicks Cage this "new look" Fordham team will be supplying the opposition for the UMass Redmen in the second semester home opener with tap-off set for 8.

After a 10-15 record last season Fordham went looking for a new coach and came up with Richard Phelps the then chief assistant at the University of Pennsylvania and architect of the Quakers' surge to the top of the Ivy League and also to a position of national prominance.

It was said on a recent ECAC basketball game-of-the-week that "Phelps has brought excitement back to New York City basketball."

And excitement is the word as his Rams have run up an impressive 12-1 record to date and a national ranking of 15th best in the nation in the UPI poll this week.

All of this has been done without the big man, the tallest starter for the Rams is 6'5". What it has been done with is the defensive genious of its coach and a consistent offense led by its all-American candidate Charles Yelverton.

The Rams have been throwing many defenses at its opponents including its now vaunted press which has enabled Fordham to run up impressive victories this season over Yale, Columbia, Syracuse, Princeton and Holy Cross. Watch for this Fordham press.

Yelverton is the spark for Fordham. At 6'3" he can play either at guard or forward and uses his excellent jumping ability as the Ram's best rebounder. He's been averaging around 20 points per game with his finest effort coming in the finals of the Kodak Classic where he scored 46 points in leading the Rams to the title.

Ken Charles and George Zambetti play the front court for the Rams. Charles is a 6'3" sophomore and last year led the freshman team in scoring with a 27.8 point average. At 6'5" Zambetti is the tallest starter. Due to an injury he sat out last season, but this season he has been one of the mainstays in the Fordham hoop success.

In the backcourt will be Bill Mainor and John Burik. Both men are 6'1" and extremely good shooters from the outside. They are also tough defenders in the pressing defense.

On the UMass side, the Redmen are coming into this encounter with an 11-1 slate.

Coach Jack Leaman will be going with the same starting five of Julius Erving, Ken Mathias, and Chris Coffin up front with John Betancourt and Mike Pabliara in the backcourt.

An Opportunity, Not A Challenge...

MacPherson Wants To Keep Up UM's Winning Ways

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

New UMass head football coach Dick MacPherson strongly feels that his new job presents him not with a challenge but with an opportunity. He calls it "a fantastic opportunity" and explains Coach (Vic) Fusia has established a winning tradition at the University of Massachusetts "an opportunity is where you can help a winning program on its way."

MacPherson does have a sincere desire to help the UMass football program on its way. He has said, "I know I can be a winning coach. I know I can win. That's how I think and feel. That's how my teams will think and feel."

And in order to keep up the Fusia tradition, the winning tradition, MacPherson plans to ambitiously seek out the athletes and coaches he feels he will need. He has the reputation of being an excellent recruiter, and he has commented, "I've done recruiting and I'm good at it. I want the best boys in this state, but we don't have to have them all, just our share."

He has said, "I hope to be an ambitious recruiter. This is the state university and it's part of my job to take care of the players in this state."

"I hope to get my share of the best in Massachusetts first and then New England second." MacPherson does not plan to look very far beyond the six-state region, having stated, "We have enough good local talent to get the job done. I'll go after that talent."

In welcoming players into his program, the new coach will "just be honest and try to tell athletes what a great school UMass is. I know the school because I've been close to it as a student and I was an assistant there for two seasons."

MacPherson realizes that other NE football schools have the jump on him as far as recruiting local talent is concerned, but strongly feels that a new coach a new staff and a new attitude at UMass can balance off any advantage other places might have by their getting an earlier start.

A former assistant grid coach here 11 years ago, and also having assisted at the Universities of Cincinnati and Maryland, MacPherson who has been in similar situations to his present one, assures, "A new staff in a new situation has always been well received by prospective student athletes."

"We have never suffered in the first year of recruiting, because of our new attitude, even though we started late."

While the Yankee Conference and its "20-formula" ruling will restrict his recruiting ambitions, and MacPherson knows this, he is "willing to live with the Yankee Conference restrictions and was well aware of them when I took the job."

The head mentor has nothing harmful to say against the Conference, but rather has these words to offer: "I firmly believe in the Yankee Conference, and as long as the athletic program believes in it, I will too. I'm tuned to it. I'm a New Englander. I really, really look forward to playing the Oronos, the Durhams, the Kingstons...and the great challenge of Boston College."

As for rounding up a staff, MacPherson wants to fill six positions and has the very six men in mind he wants to fill them with. One man has already been confirmed, that being George Flood, head coach and athletic director at Union College who will take the post of offensive assistant. Knowledge of the remaining five figures and their respective duties should be made known by the end of the week.

MacPherson will carry the program along its winning path not by stressing defense, not by stressing offense, but by emphasizing strength in all phases of the game. He reiterates, "I don't want anybody to think that I'm a defensive genious or an offensive genius...in order to be a winning football coach, I think that we have to be real competent in all areas."

MacPherson who was a defensive assistant of Lou Saban's at Denver of the National Football League, abandons the label of defensive coach in coming to UMass, commenting, "If I was a defensive coach, then I don't think I would be qualified to be a head coach."

In qualifying his desire to field a Redman team that is strong in all areas, he has said, "I want to have the best offensive, defensive and kicking games around. I can't do it alone. This will come from my players and my assistants. We'll have a good team, well-versed in basics and we'll be mean and tough."

The coach continues, "I'm a people man...if I have the Greg Landrys, the Milt Morins and the Fred Lewises, then I'm a great offensive coach. If I have the Bernie Dallasses, the (Bill) DeFlavios, the (Jim) Kellihers, then I'm an excellent defensive coach."

"There are a lot of games won and lost by the specialty teams. We've got to emphasize this, because this all evolves into field position, which is the name of the game in football." And...thusly MacPherson gives his insights on offense, defense, specialty teams and the name of the game.

This man wants more than talent. He wants to develop a spirit of togetherness, not only among the Redman teammates, but among the UMass fans, and between the players and the fans.

He is looking for the student athlete, the many-sided individual who accepts a football scholarship not to play the sport and get a free ride, but to utilize the university and what it has to offer in order to establish himself as someone with a personality and a sense of what he's doing and where he's going.

Campion Assumes Admin. Services

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Asst. News Editor

Sandwiched between the "disbursement" office and the "Accounting" office in Whitmore's top echelon third floor, the newly stenciled emblem of "Vice Chancellor for Administrative Services" marks what can be interpreted as the next step in Chancellor Oswald Tippo's long range plans for administrative overhaul here at the Amherst Campus.

Thomas B. Campion, former business head of the New York Times, has been "taking over" the administrative responsibly for most of the fiscal and support units on campus, since January 11.

The lean 54 year old Campion is the second Vice Chancellor to be appointed. His new office is just beginning to shape up, with unmatched desks, borrowed equipment and telephone books stamped "Provost". Campion, interviewed during what appeared to be a hint of the busy days to follow assimilating the confusing maze of institutional beaurocracy, remarked that "even his secretary" was spirited from the Provost's office.

His desk is piled with data outlining UMass operations, pamphlets describing things like the Long term Disability Income Program for the University of Massachusetts." An engraved desk pen set, with a small clock served as a momento from the "New York Times 1948-1970". On the wall are pictures of his wife and five kids, "all grown up now" Campion left his Bronxville, New York home desiring to find a "New England College town" to get away from the headaches of New York City. UMass offered him a chance to realize his "ideal place".

Campion explained that he "believed in the value of the educational community" and had "intellectual interests" himself. In New York he had become involved with public education, having served as Chairman of his home school board.

In a memorandum, introducing Campion to the rest of the rest of the University, Chancellor Tippo stated that "in the next few weeks" there will be a need to "work out the precise relationships between Mr. Campion's operation and the Student Affairs area" headed by Vice-Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery.

Campion indicated that he wanted to work "closely with Bromery" who was the first person he met on campus.

Bromery, when asked about his relationship to the new Vice-Chancellor for Administrative Services commented that he wouldn't get involved in the "nitty gritty of running things", but would insist upon having "policy making" control in those areas which involved students, such as dining commons and residence halls.

"As a matter of policy" Campion explained, there will be "free and open discussion of policies." He expressed the hope that "reasonable people with a given set of facts can have reasonable answers...You can't make fiscal decisions, without considering the reactions of those affected", he added echoing ideas which Dr. Bromery has harped upon since the position of Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs was first created.

"My problem is to get to know the people around here and establish a working relationship", said Campion.

Dr. Bromery envisions "working closely together" with the new Vice-Chancellor and any other Vice-Chancellors to be appointed in the future. According to Dr. Bromery "The Chancellor (Tippo) wants all the Vice Chancellors to assume certain responsibilities, but not exclusively."

"I will not be part of a four flued administrative set-up" asserted Bromery, wary of the tendency of administrative beaurocracies to develop along "rigid" lines. Bromery wants to be able to overlap into different areas as the needs develop.

Dr. Bromery bared his optimism for the future functioning of the University, saying that "if the students can shut the University down then we can run it."

Vice-Chancellor Campion will have responsibilities for the following areas: receipts; accounting for state and non-state funds; procurement; personnel; administrative data processing; physical plant; auxilliary enterprises (food services, University housing, Campus Center); and the legal office. As a result, the following individuals will "report directly" to the new Vice-Chancellor: George Norton; Gerald Grady; William Maus; Francis Teahan; Thaddeus Los; Charles Hampton; Sydney Myers; Donald Pelkey; and Robert Mishol.

Long awaited in many circles around campus, President Wood has designated Kenneth Johnson as 'Treasurer of the System, reporting directly to President Robert C. Wood. Vice-Chancellor Campion will have responsibility, according to Tippo's Memorandum, for systems wide services in administrative data processing, fiscal afairs and procurement.

Senate To Consider Housing, Birth Booklet

By BETH GOODELL
Senate Reporter

The Student Senate could not muster a quorum last evening for its first meeting scheduled since December 16. Items on this week's agenda will be considered first at next week's meeting.

Among the measures moved up to next week are two concerning campus housing regulations, and others ranging from a resolution to fund a Birth Control Booklet to an act concerning a Prisoners of War treaty.

One measure concerning housing calls for the end of all restrictions on where students choose to live. Sponsor of the bill, Lee Sandwen, stated in the bill that "the University is supposed to supply its students with the opportunity for an education and not imprison them."

Also concerning housing is a resolution that the Senate charge its Student Matters Committee with the investigation of the current procedure for assigning singles. Sponsor Kevin Kulakowski calls the present system "unclear and unfair." He wants a campus-wide priority system to be established in time for spring room choosing.

Citing "mass ignorance within the student population concerning contraception, abortion, and venereal disease", a Birth Control Booklet Committee is asking the Senate to appropriate $2,500. If the Senate passes the measure, the money will go to cover the cost of publication of a booklet to be distributed throughout the college community.

Another measure moved up to next week's meeting is a request that the Board of Trustees reconstitute the Fine Arts Council. The Council is funded solely by students, but, according to the sponsor of the bill, Treasurer Richard Verrochi, members of the faculty have a disproportionately large voice on the Council. He wants students to have the total voice on the Council or else have the faculty and administration share in the cost of the program.

Firearms are once again the issue of another bill before the Senate. It is a request that the Flying Redmen Drill Team be allowed to store their deactivated rifles on campus and allow the team to drill on campus. The measure also states the Senate's support of the policy of keeping all firearms off campus and recommends the eventual elimination of even the firearms of the University Police.

One other resolution moved from tonight's to next week's agenda would direct the University's Student Government Association, through the President of the Student Senate, to sign the petition of the Committee of Students for Humane Treatment of Prisoners of War.

Conlon Named Fact Finder Involving Springfield Firemen

By JIM GOLD
Issue Editor

Dr. John T. Conlon, Asst. Dean of the UMass School of Business, has been named "fact finder" by the State Board of Conciliation and Arbitration in a contract dispute involving the City of Springfield and the local Fireman's Union, it was announced late yesterday afternoon.

Both the City of Springfield and the Fireman's Union have approved of Dean Conlon, who is known for his involvement as arbitrator of the Chicopee Teachers' dispute two years ago.

Dean Conlon communicated his acceptance of the "fact finding" position yesterday. Reached at his home last night he explained that a "fact finder" must submit to the disputing parties several recommendations from which a settlement might be reached.

The meetings with Conlon and the disputing parties will be delayed for an indefinite amount of time while he disposes of other obligations and business.

The Springfield firemen's dispute centers around the size of a pay hike which the firemen want. Springfield in recent weeks has been racked with labor disputes, the most serious of which ended in a court injunction against a police "work-slowdown."

Dean Conlon is one of three UMass professors who regularly act as "fact finders" and arbitrators for the Massachusetts Board of Conciliation and Arbitration.

The others, Professor Tim Bornstein and Professor Stanley Young, both of the School of Business, first became involved in arbitration through the collaboration of the School of Business and Labor Center here on campus and the Regional Arbitration Conference which had been held on campus annually for the last five years.

Dean Conlon described the work he does in the field of arbitration as an extension of the University's requirement that professors must fulfill teaching, research and service obligations. Conlon views his role in labor disputes as part of his "service" obligation.

DC May Plan Macrobiotic, Organic Food Lines

In response to recent student requests for macrobiotic and organic food lines in dining commons, Asst. Director Arthur Warren has set a meeting on Thursday, February 4 at 6 PM to determine the interest and feasibility of such a line.

Warren said in a interview that there is nothing holding up such a line as long as enough interest is shown by the students. "I'm studying up on it myself," he said.

Warren said that several students have called and said that many are interested. The meeting will help determine just how many.

Two diet lines were started last semester after student requests were made for it. Warren said that these lines, located in Worcester and Hampden Commons, were "going well for a while" but that interest in them seems to be fading.

Warren invited students to contact him at his office in Worcester Commons (545-2472) if they have questions or cannot attend the meeting.

NES Plans Orientation; Must Meeting For Tutors

Spring semester will bring closer coordination of tutoring in Springfield with the planned orientation.

The program will begin with a mass registration meeting Thursday (Jan. 28, 1971) at 7:30 pm in the Campus Center in room 163.

All those wanting to tutor should attend this meeting. The starting date for tutoring will be announced. Information concerning the scheduling of the bus and pickup points will be passed out.

The tutoring program essentially begins with this first meeting. Modular credit forms and policies will be discussed along with the orientation schedule and tutor participation in that orientation.

Last semester's tutor evaluation of the orientation proved tha workshops were the most effective and interesting way to get a point across. This first meeting of new and OLD tutors will determine the success of the whole orientation because it will be the tutor who will run the workshops.

All tutors planning to work in the NES program must attend; the program cannot work without involvement on the part of the tutors.

Other new items concerning this semester's orientation and the tutoring program in general is the planned meeting of tutors involved in the NES program from other colleges. There is also the opportunity, if enough interest is shown, that students could work with Springfield youths who have been suspended from high school.

Another educational activity will be discussed concerning tutoring high school youths who could care less about high school, hate teachers.

Therefore, the floor is again open to the student body at large. If you are interested in education and personal involvement in Springfield or in other closer areas attend the first meeting. Task Force Sets Up Work Week

By ANN GURNETT
Staff Reporter

A student-administration task force from the Central Area dismayed at the "neglected" condition of most of the Area's residence halls, has presented a solution to the Administration in the form of a "Work Week" to take place over the Spring vacation, March 22nd-26th.

This action was, according to the students, prompted by the "failure of the administration to witness the great needs and alleviate the poor living conditions existing in the Central Area. The general neglect" they continued, "has in part been attributed to the fact that the physical plant does not have a work force large enough to fill all work requests.

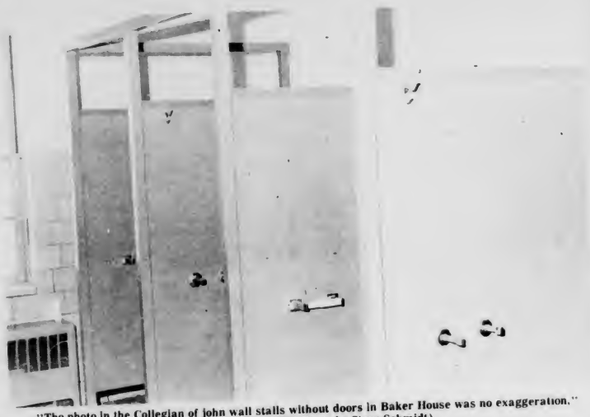
Southwest and Orchard Hill Areas remain the touring grounds for visitors and as such must be constantly maintained, while Central Area dorms, at the bottom of the priority list, fall into disrepair. Another major factor has been the lack of funds.

In some cases," they added, "years of neglect may mean that these dorms will not again attain a livable standard until they are renovated."

Another area of contention was created when, in 1970, Mills house, which has renovated in 1968 with funds from the Residence Hall Trust Fund Account, was given to the Black students of UMass as a cultural center.

The money used in this renovation could have been spread out to make general repairs for the entire area but was concentrated on the Mills project because it was felt that there was a greater need for a dorm which would also be an area center for offices and recreational facilities.

Students of the area did not have a vote in the administration's decision to convert Mills into an academic building but were verbally assured that they would be compensated for the loss of the renovation money.



This fall, $30,000 was allotted to the Central Dorms as a partial payment for Mills House. The Central Area Council was again verbally assured that at least $60,000 would be forthcoming over the next two years. The first $30,000 was not used for dorm repairs but rather for much needed furniture for student's rooms.

The aim of the "Work Week" this spring is to make the physical repairs which can be neglected no longer. Students and staff of the Central Area hope to work in conjunction with the administration and the physical plant in order to facilitate the realization of common goals.

The labor force for the Work Week would consist of sixty-five students from the Central Area working with the area maintenance crew and a supplementary crew from the physical plant under the auspices of the Area Coordinator's Office. Total estimated cost of the project is $17,170. The total savings to the University for utilization of a student work crew has been estimated at $8,000.

However, according to one administrative source there is uncertainty if there will be any money available for the project.

The matter will be reviewed by both Vice-Chancellor Campion and Vice-Chancellor Bromery, each of whom received letters detailing the project from the student organizers.

Figures Show Damage Less In Co-ed Dormitories

By ANNE STADNICKI
Staff Reporter

Co-ed dorms incur fewer damages than do male dorms, according to statistics provided by Herbert E. Potter, Assistant Housing Officer.

The figures compiled by the Physical Plant for the Housing office showed much higher damage costs in the all-male dorms such as Baker, Brett and Hills South in the Central Area than in the co-ed dorms Brooks, Butterfield, Greenough and Wheeler. Potter's statistics totalled $395.27 and $465.16 respectively in the months of October and November 1970 for just these three male dorms compared to the $121.77 and $107.45 accrued by the four co-ed residence halls.

The only exception to the decreased damages in co-ed dorms was Gorman house, Potter said.

Assistant Area Co-ordinator for Central, Margery Lenn, justified the still high damages following its conversion to co-ed residence by pointing out its huge size. She said that in a dorm as large and in such a state of disrepair as Gorman even the presence of females does not prevent damages.

"Females in the dorm definitely have a favorable influence on the male residents," Marcus Buckley, Head of Residence in Chadbourne claimed.

He cited various instances when the presence of a mere female visitor calmed disturbances that could have led to damages.

"In most co-ed and female dorms we have, there is a greater sense of community, which is the reason they don't have as many damages," Margery Lenn explained.

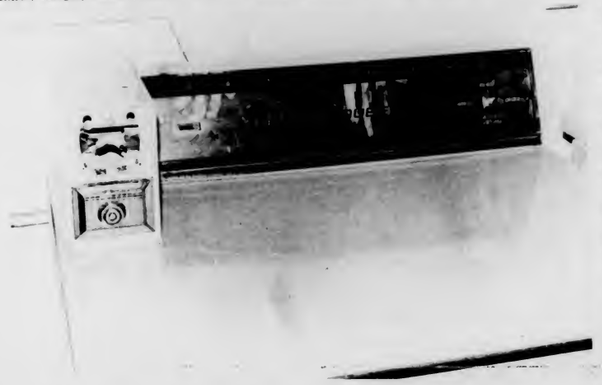
She pointed out that the dorms that are consistently damaged have no built in security using their own people in the dorm. The co-ed and female dorms have worked out their own security systems, she said.

Buckley said that little community action concerning external security or any group action could be achieved in his all-male dorm because of an influx of new people, especially freshmen. He felt that Chadbourne's 63% freshmen occupancy, many of whom had parental permission to live in a co-ed dorm, was isolated from participation in too many areas.

"People are as mature as their surroundings," Buckley said, "and the concentration of all these males who have been excluded from fraternities and co-ed dorms brings out their worst traits."

Freshmen are often away from home for the first time and are used to better surrounding, he added. They show a lack of respect for the poorer furnishings in the Central area and at first assume that if a bad piece is broken it will be replaced with a new one, he continued. He said a freshman in the mature or semi-mature environment of a co-ed dorm would react less destructively.

Mary Ann Noseworthy, Head of Residence in Baker, was in agreement with Buckley's conclusion that upperclassmen provided "a greater awareness and are steadier than freshmen in general". She thought going co-ed would create a better atmosphere for freshmen and damages would definitely drop, also.



"Environment is the key to decreased damages in dormitories," said Michael West, Associate Dean of Students for Central Area. He saw coed dorms as catalysts in creating a more favorable environment.

To decrease damages Miss Lenn said that there must be more support for physical repairs, an increased security system utilizing students in the dorms, and an increased programming for sense of community within the dorms.

"I can't say that when there are freshmen, there are increased damages, but when there is a male house, already in disrepair, I think there are probably more damages," she stated.

Figures from the physical plant reports also support Miss Lenn's statement. For the academic year 1969-70 in Southwest damages totaled $12,151.63. The total for the entire east side of campus was $7,023.65.

A comparison of the number of co-ed and male dorms in each area accounts for the higher total in Southwest. The ratio of male dorms to co-ed dorms in Southwest is much greater than on the rest of the campus.

Coin box of this washer located in a dormitory has been broken into. "People are as matured as their surroundings" said Marcus Buckley Head of Residence at Chadborne. (MDC Photo by Steve Schmidt)

New Haven Oil Spill Now Showing Results

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP)-A federal environmental official studying the effects of the massive oil spill in New Haven Harbor said Wednesday that although there has been no evidence of damage to aquatic life, the oil "quite possibly could have some toxic effect" on the shellfish population.

Al Bromberg, head of the Madison, N.J., branch of the Environmental Protection Agency EPA, said scientists would have to wait until spring, when shellfish come out of hibernation, to determine whether the oil would have a significant effect on them.

Nothing indicates any damage to either shellfish or finfish," said Bromberg. But he added that biologists who have been examining the effect of the oil on shellfish in the area still must conduct an "oil analysis" to learn whether "any appreciable concentration of oil" exists in their flesh.

Shellfish burrow into the bottom of the harbor in winter to hibernate, he said, but with the arrival of spring, they once again filter their food from the water and pass the harbor's water through their systems. Most damage to the shellfish begins occurring at this time, said Bromberg.

The oil slick was deposited Saturday in the channel of the harbor by the 685 foot tanker Esso Gettysburg owned by Humble Oil Co. The tanker struck bottom, rupturing its holds and spilling some 386,000 gallons of light home heating oil into the water.

The oil that escaped floatation equipment placed around the tanker drifted onto Long Island Sound, forming a slick 12 miles long and several miles wide just off the beaches and rocks east of New Haven.

On Wednesday, gale force winds churned up water in the Sound and the harbor, and much of the oil either sank, dispersed or evaporated. Bromberg said he would be "very surprised" if portions of the slick were still visible Thursday.

The Coast Guard said one of its helicopters was standing by to survey the extent of the slick if the weather cleared, but by late afternoon, the helicopter still was grounded.

"New Haven Harbor really has some beautiful sets of oyster beds," as well as some clams, Bromberg said. Ingestion of oil by the shellfish in the harbor, he said, might give them an oily taste after they are harvested-even though the oil would not make humans ill.

Four biologists from Needham, Mass., brought a portable laboratory to the Coast Guard station here to gather samples of water, sediment and marine life for a study of the spill's effect on the ecology of the harbor.

Bromberg said the scientists, members of the Regional Response Team investigating the environmental consequences of the mishap, will measure the amount of chlorophyll in the water samples to determine the extent of damage to the harbor's aquatic life.

Cold Slows Boston Building Demolition

BOSTON (AP)-Construction workers braved numbing cold and high winds Wednesday to begin cutting away hanging debris and rubble from the 16 story building where sections collapsed on Monday.

The bitter cold prevented workers with torches from spending more than a half hour at a time cutting the steel reinforcing rods holding concrete fragments.

The work is in preparation for digging into the rubble collected in the structure basement seeking the bodies of four men missing in the collapse.

Three Give Testimony In Bomb-Kidnap Hearing

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP)-Two women and a man were granted immunity and directed Wednesday to testify before a federal grand jury probing an alleged bomb-kidnap plot involving three Roman Catholic priests and a nun.

A Jesuit priest, however, balked at testifying, saying he was duty bound not to disclose information given him in confidence.

All three of those granted immunity testified before the grand jury. When they emerged they said they had answered all questions asked. One of them, who was on the stand when the jury recessed for the day, will be recalled Thursday.

The Jesuit, the Rev. J. William Michelman of Baltimore, vice principal of a school for black youths, also said he was being harrassed because he was a character witness at a bail hearing last week for three of the six defendants in the bomb-kidnap plot.

The six, including antiwar priest Philip Berrigan, are accused of conspiring to kidnap presidential adviser Henry Kissinger and blow up the heating systems in five Washington, D.C., buildings on Feb. 22.

Father Michelman asked U.S. District Judge R. Dixon Herman to quash the subpoena, and to direct the grand jury to limit the scope of its inquiry.

"No priest of any regularly established church or religious organization who, while in the course of his duties has acquired information from any person secretly and in confidence, shall be compelled or allowed without consent of such person to disclose that information in any legal proceedings before any grand jury," the priest said in a petition.

Herman set a hearing on the request for Thursday morning.

Indicted in the case are three Roman Catholic priests, one former priest now married to an ex-nun, a Pakistani graduate student, and a nun.

All are free in bail except Father Berrigan, who is serving a prison term for destroying draft board records. The government contends he masterminded the plot while in the Lewisburg Penitentiary near here.

Sister Jogues Egan, 52, of New York City, one of seven persons named as coconspirators but not charged, earlier this week refused to testify before the grand jury despite a grant of immunity and was found guilty of contempt of court. She was ordered jailed until she agreed to testify or for the life of the grand jury which could last another 16 months.

Jack Levine, attorney for Sister Jogues, said he would ask the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia to set aside the contempt citation and free the nun. He claimed the immunity law, guaranteeing a person will not be prosecuted on the basis of testimony was unconstitutional and that despite the judge's pledge to protect her she could be placing herself in jeopardy with the testimony.

Granted immunity Wednesday after a brief legal argument were Patricia Rom, 27, and Zoia Horn, 52, both librarians at Bucknell University in Lewisburg, and Joseph M. Joynt, 35, Silver Springs, Md., an elevator engineer engineer who works for the General Services Administration in Washington.

Nixon Revenue Bill To Split, Avoid Ways, Means Committee

WASHINGTON—President Nixon's embattled revenue sharing proposal will be split into at least seven separate bills-most of them bypassing Chairman Wilbur Mills and the House Ways and Means Committee.

John D. Ehrlichman, Nixon's domestic policy chief, disclosed the plan Wednesday-a day after Arkansas Democrat Mills delivered a lengthy House speech questioning the revenue sharing concept.

While Ehrlichman argued that "basic assumptions" advanced in the Mills speech "are not well founded," the real news in his remarks at a White House press briefing went to the heart of the administration strategy.

Many people in and out of Congress had assumed that Nixon's proposals for a $5 billion no strings attached revenue sharing fund plus a separate $11 billion kitty to be set aside for spending in six specific problem areas would be submitted as a package and would be referred first to the committee Mills heads.

Not so, said Ehrlichman. The $11 billion portion of the program will be divided into six separate measures, each covering a restricted area of proposed sharing of federal revenues with state and local governments.

These areas are: urban development, rural development, education, transportation, job training and law enforcement.

Ehrlichman said each measure would go to the congressional committee most directly concerned-such as those handling education and transportation matters.

He said the administration will follow this course so its recommendations will be studied carefully by the committees most experienced and best staffed to handle the specifics.

Ehrlichman acknowledged, however, that the $5 billion portion of the revenue sharing program would have to clear the hurdle of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mills has promised thorough hearings on this-adding that he hopes to kill the Nixon plan.

In his House speech, Mills was most critical of the $5 billion part of the package that Nixon says will help initiate a "new American revolution."

Even if the administration is able to bypass the Mills committee and win authorization for the $11 billion section, actual funds to carry out that part of revenue sharing would have to clear the House Appropriations Committee, headed by Democrat George H. Mahon of Texas.

So Does Wholesale Prices

Economy Turns Upward

WASHINGTON (AP)—The nation's sluggish economy is showing signs of bounding upwards, but accompanied by the biggest wholesale price hikes in a year, the government reported Wednesday.

"I find myself on the whole reassured by the figures," said President Nixon's chief economic adviser, Dr. Paul McCracken. But organized labor's chief economist, Nathaniel Goldfinger, called it "more of the same."

A Commerce Department report that leading economic indicators showed big gains in new orders of durable goods, housing permits and common stock prices in December cause another administration economist, Dr. Harold Passer, to predict that "The economy will continue to expand in the months ahead."

But the report was at least partially dampened by preliminary Labor Department figures showing a broad range of wholesale prices for food and industrial raw materials jumped six tenths of one per cent this month, sharpest rise since January 1970.

The report said when seasonal factors were figured in, the rise was only four tenths of one per cent. "The over all economic situation is still a continuation of rising prices and rather wide spread softness in sales, production and employment," said the AFL CIO's Goldfinger, whose labor organization has been highly critical of Nixon economic policies.

The government reports highlighted the difficulty of Nixon's stated objectives of spurring renewed economic growth without adding fuel to the worst inflationary spiral in some 20 years.

Laws Explain Tenant-Landlord Rules

(Ed. Note: The following are listings of sections of Massachusetts General Court Laws Chapter 186 concerning tenant-landlord regulations. They were compiled by Student General Counsel Richard M. Howland. Mr. Howland hopes that the laws may answer some student-tenant questions, but he also reminds students that he is available to any students with problems concerning tenancy.)

Section 11. "Upon the neglect or refusal to pay the rent due under a written lease, fourteen days' notice to quit, given in writing by the landlord to the tenant, shall be sufficient to determine (end) the lease, unless the tenant, at least four days before the return day of the writ, in an action by the landlord to recover possession of the premises, pays or tenders to the landlord or his attorney all rent then due, with interests and costs of suit."

Section 12. "Estates at will (including tenancies without leases) may be determined (ended) by either party by three month's notice in writing for that purpose given to the other party; and, if the rent reserved is payable at periods of less than three months, the time of such notice shall be sufficient if it is equal to the interval between the days of payment. (The Supreme Judicial Court holds that this interval means that it must end on a "rent day" which is the day when rent is customarily paid e.g. the period for a monthly tenancy where rent is regularly paid on the first of each month runs from any first of the month after notice is received to the next first of the month so that if such notice were given on the fifth of the month, even if the rent had not yet actually been paid, the interval would be fifty-five days, or thereabout. Prescott v. Elm, 61 Mass. 346 (1851); Currier v. Barker,68 Mass. 226 (1854); Yoffe V. Krasnow Wool Stock Co., 322 Mass. 211 (1948); U-Dryvit Auto Rental Co. v. Shaw, 319 Mass. 684 (1946); Connors v. Wick. 317 Mass. 628 (1945).) In case of neglect or refusal to pay the rent due from a tenant at will, fourteen days' notice to quit, given in writing by the landlord to the tenant, shall be sufficient to determine the tenancy..."

Section 14. "Any lessor or landlord of any building or part thereof occupied for dwelling purposes,...who is required by the terms, expressed or implied, of any contract or lease or tenancy at will, to furnish water, not water, heat, light, power, gas, elevator service, telephone service, janitor service or refrigeration service to any occupant of such building, or part thereof, who wilfully or intentionally fails to furnish such water, hot water, heat, light, power, gas, elevator service, telephone service, janitor service or refrigeration service at any time when the same is necessary to the proper or customary use of such building, or part thereof, or any lessor or landlord who wilfully or intentionally interferes with the quiet enjoyment of any such leased or tenanted premises by the occupant, shall be punished by a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than three hundred dollars, or by imprisonment for not more than six months."

Section 15. "Any provision of a lease or other rental agreement relating to real property whereby a lessee or tenant enters into a covenant agreement or contract, by the use of any words whatsoever, the effect of which is to indemnify the lessor or landlord or hold the lessor or landlord harmless, or prelude or exonerate the lessor or landlord from any or all liability to the lessee or tenant, or to any other person, for any injury, loss, damage or liability arising from any omission, fault, negligence or other misconduct of the lessor or landlord on or about the leased or rented premises or on or about any elevators, stairways, hallways or other appurtenance used in connection therewith, and not within the exclusive control of the lessee or tenant, shall be deemed to be against public policy and void."

Section 15A. "Any provision of a lease or other rental agreement relating to residential real property whereby a lessee or tenant enters into a covenant, agreement or contract, by the use of any words whatsoever, the effect of which is to waive the notices required under the section eleven or twelve, (notice to quit for non-payment of rent, etc.), shall be deemed to be against public policy and void."

Section 15B. "No lease relating to residential property shall contain a provision that a lessor may, except to inspect the premises, to make repairs thereto or to show the same to a prospective tenant or purchaser, enter the premises before the termination date of such lease. A lessor may, however, enter such premises in accordance with a court order or if the premises appear to have been abandoned by the lessee. No lessor shall require a security deposit equivalent to more than two months rent, nor a charge of more than the purchase and installation cost for a key or lock, now any interest or penalty for failure to pay rent until at least thirty days after such rent shall have been due.

"A landlord of residential real property who holds a security deposit pursuant to this section for a period in excess of one year from the commencement of the term of tenancy*shall, beginning with the first day after the expiration of such year, pay interest at the rate of five per cent per year, payable to the tenant at the end of each year. The lease or tenancy, return the security deposit or any balance thereof, after deducting the amount of any damage caused by the tenant, or any person on the demised premises with his knowledge or consent, reasonable wear and tear excepted, and less any unpaid rent. If the landlord wilfully fails to return to the tenant such deposit or balance thereof, as aforesaid, he shall be liable in damages in an amount equal to twice the amount of such security deposit or balance thereof plus interest at the rate of five per cent from the date when such interest was last paid or became due...

"Any provision of a lease in violation of this section shall be deemed to be against public policy and void."

Section 18. "Any person or agent thereof who threatens to or takes reprisals against any tenant of residential premises for reporting to the board of health . . . or to any other board having as its objective the regulation of residential premises a violation or a suspected violation of any health or building code or of any other municipal by-law or ordinance, or state law or regulation which has as its objective the regulation of residential premises shall be liable for damages which shall not be less than one month's rent or more than three month's rent, or the actual damages sustained by the tenant, whichever is greater, and the costs of the suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

"The receipt of any notice of termination to tenancy except for non payment of rent or of increase in rent or of any substantial alteration in the terms of teanancy within six months after making a report or complaint of violations or suspected violations of any health or building code, municipal by-law or ordinance, or state law or regulation which has as its objective the regulation of residential premises shall create a rebuttable presumption that such notice is a reprisal against the tenant for making such report or complaint."

Chapter 151B contains important provisions regarding discrimination in housing or employment on the basis of the race, color, religious creed, national origin, sex, age, or ancestry of any individual. The Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination enforces these prohibitions and can be applied to by any person who has knowledge of such discrimination whether or not he or she has been personally discriminated against. Incidentally, oral inquiry into the subject in any way, is a violation.

In the Amherst area there are many forms and methods of redress for tenants' grievances. It is suggested, but no necessary, that if a student-tenant has a problem with his landlord that he consult with this office in order to select the most appropriate remedy. There is no charge for such consultation by a student. Any tenant may also complain of his landlord to the Amherst Landlord Tenant Relations Council, Town Hall, Amherst, in writing with a copy to the landlord and there is no charge whether or not the student consults this office beforehand.

Suits for recovery of security deposits, when necessary may be maintained in the Small Claims Division of the Hampshire County District Court at Northampton. Assistance can be obtained from this office as well as referral to local legal counsel where indicated. It is not always necessary to have a lawyer to prosecute a claim in the Small Claims Court.

The Amherst Landlord Tenant Relations Council is preparing a comprehensive booklet which hopefully will cover tenants' rights and responsibilities more thoroughly than this letter can.

Women Voters To Sponsor Candidates Night Monday

Amherst voters will have a chance to hear and question the candidates for major town offices at the Candidates Night sponsored by the Amherst League of Women Voters. This forum will take place on Monday, at 8 p.m. in the auditorium of the Junior High School.

Donald Freeman, announcer on radio station WTTT, will be the moderator for the discussions, which are planned to take place in three groups, with brief presentations by the candidates followed by question periods.

The first group will consist of the candidates for town moderator, William F. Field and Gerald J. Grady, and the candidates for trustee of the Jones Library, Barbara Carpino and Robert D. Hawley.

The four candidates for School Committee seats, Rhoda Honigberg, William C. Atkins, Robert T. Fischer, and Robert C. Chisolm, will make up the second group.

The final group will be composed of the candidates for selectman, Michael Sullivan, Nancy Eddy, Ben Surner Jr., and Norman MacLeod.

The Candidates Night program will be televised live on station CATV, Channel 8, which can be received only by viewers with cable television. To get the most out of this opportunity to hear the candidates, voters are urged to be there in person and to ask the questions that most concern them.

DaVinci Working Models On Display

Working models of mechanical designs by Leonardo da Vinci will be on display at the UMass Art Gallery Herter Hall, from Thursday to Feb. 5.

The exhibit will be open to the public from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays.

An unrestricted gift to UMass-Amherst from International Business Machines Corp., the models were built by IBM according to da Vinci sketches found in 1965 by Jules Piccus, professor of Hispanic languages and literature at UMass.

Prof. Piccus was studying Spanish medieval poetry in Spain when he became interested in the lost manuscripts. He searched through many ancient manuscripts until he found the missing da Vinci sketches.

The sketches and da Vinci descriptions on which the IBM models are based show da Vinci's preoccupation with power transmission and the transformation, regulation and control of motion by pulleys and gears. Some of the designs show refinements of existing devices; others illustrate mechanical principles.

"Listen — If I Hear Any More Complaints, I May Stop Hurrying"

Quiver, My Dear....

Oops...oh yes,
yes dear friends, here we are again...icicles, rosy cheeks, spring semester, crisp laughter, and the sweet aroma of hashish brownies baking.....it's the season for merriment, unbounded exhuberance, and knowing smiles wrapped in scarfs and silence.

Why, it's the season for skiing and tobogganing and ice skating, for philosophizing and meditation, for thoughts upon thoughts of love, upon thoughts of this life that is to each of us, for.....

the season of numbed fingers and temperate hearts, cold feet and calm faces, wool turtle-neck sweaters and wind-blown hair, wet boots and aimless carefree stares in portraiture, for.....

It's the season...the season...

The season of the soul.

And, it's also spring semester, State University, Amherst, Massachusetts. well....Hot Shit!

Concrete classrooms are currying favors bending, bending to rapture in the ass of the Witless computer, incarnate, channeling energies in a responsible, respectable, veddy-veddy adult manner mattering precious little to anyone, especially so if you're one of those swimming the channel; but then, again, one man's rut, as the Doktor of Time once said, is another man's groove and whom gives any righteous fuck anyway?

.....Phallic Ladies, pristene Gentlemen..., it has always been time to use our heads, and none the less always than the immediate now--but how? Let us consider our topic: the individual tribesman in classroom. Can the University help us to use our heads? Oh....strain, oh trauma, o most anguished idiocy. The answer to this question is a function of what you want, naturally (indisputably, irrevocably), obviously What do you--you--what do you want?

The university, and, for that matter, every aspect of the educational system of which we are products (dig....?), is paid for by "adult" society to train "young" people to keep the same old games going, (i.e. responsibility to a 1925 reality, steel-hard manhood, ultrafeminine womanhood, racism, consummate consumerism, etc. etc. etc.)....in other words, to be certain that you do not use your (your!) heads.

Brothers and sisters, this concretized, austere, and bloody institution and all educational institutions are set up to tacitly anesthetize you, to hypnotize me, to put us all into the wide-eyed dreamland of deodorant role playing, extremely well-planned spontanaity, societal (not tribal) fuctionality, artificial respectability, and obscenely repressed sexuality-that's right freshmen women (Never freshmen girls), fucking obscenely repressed, obscenely fucking repressed sexuality; and all because the games they play, that they are subtly attempting to bend and shape us to play, because the games they play are the games of a generation that has grown old without ever having grown up.....

'...these games have no room for people-people, only metal men and eggshell women...

Because these games are the games of a generation with a widespread lack of religion-please notice that this is what they accuse us of-a lack of religion with a sick dread of death, with a sick worship of the temporal and material, sickly gothic masks of duty to T.V. cardboard personalities enacted for you in every living room and bedroom in every middle-age, middle-class, middle-American home, here in Babylon, and isn't that just nice now, dearie? That's a good little girl, now step and fetch it, good little boy, now go and beat off in the closet...we'll watch just to make sure you do it right.....now,

"Ough-swell, I think I'm having an organism, my dear."

"Good boy."

Did you ever wonder what happened, what ever happened to Mr. Barbara Stanwyck? Maybe he just got tongue-tired.

"Give the baby the formula, dearie, I'm a little dry this generation."

DOO....DAH! DOO....DAH!

As I said, people (and I use the term in smiling confidence), we are faced with a very eunuch situation here. I'll go out on a very short limb and say that their monolithic, frozen empire is in the final stages of decay, and they're exerting maximum pressure upon us, both to sustain the empire and to give them psychological assurance that their cultural existence is justified.....Very sad, both for them as well as for us. So....what can we do about educational narcosis? How can you (meaning us) how can you learn to use your head? Well, a good place to start...would be to.....

Ig nore the come-on that says "Keep coming. Come on. It's going to get better. Something great is going to happen tomorrow if you be good today." Brothers and sisters, this is a cholesterol-encrusted lie. As a matter of established fact, it gets worse....witness the suburbs. The American dream becomes nightmare. Acute indigestion. Good....Boy.

Why should we take? Why should we take it? These fruits prooffered to us are radioactive. Shiny on the outside, leering on the inside. Sweet to the eye, ashes to the taste. Worth. Such great worth. If you predicate your life upon images. There are few things more appetizing than, more succulent than, taking a crisp mouthful...a hearty bite out of a firm, crisp plastic apple. De-fucking-licious. And good for you, too.

LEFT OFF.

For an education, drop out.

For a reality sandwiche, Drop Out.

FOR THE LOVE OF GOD, DROP OUT.

Drop out, I'll say it again, Drop Out. And again, Drop Out, any way that you care to, in any form, to any degree (pun intended), any way that you care to, for innumerable ways are available. Drop Out....Everyone has choice, but it's only you that canever decide. Remember...

icicles? It's the season for warm bread abaking, and for white and red and rose wines, for the touch of a hand on a shoulder, for lips upon necks, for iridescent eyes at ease within the dewy gaze of another lover of humanity in self, of others....of brothers together warmly shrouded in wool wrappings, ecstatic within the symphonies of silence manifest in smiling subliminal appreciation; wrinkle-free laughter.

Don't you know, the day, it was on it's way, but this, this very, hour, (and I mean right now, you know,) is held, and held here, in this very today. Today is the sunrise of the rest of your life. Isn't that great?

Isn't that simply, ecstatically wonderful?

Winter is the very season of the soul. So heap your hearth high, stoke your soul.....it's a frozen world outside.

of love,

a tribal Wizard

Never do business with Budget Rent A Car because their cars do not have clean ash trays. They're not number two and they certainly don't try very hard. But, speaking of people who try very hard, the Elm Street Tigers will probably trade the rights to their first draft choice to Denver. Denver will then draft Manty Hall in a spectacular deal.

Watch much early morning television? Well, here are a few viewing tips. First, never turn the set on before you've sprayed the stereowith right guard, or a left tackle. Then, be sure to salt your three minute egg with a Claude Kirk autographed toothpick.

And, just so there is no doubt about it, Richard Nixon is not the Governor of Delaware. That error appeared in a column in the Washington Express theother day, and was actually confirmed by Ron Ziegler. He's fine, thank you. But his youngest daughter, Zelda, has the gout again and can't make the junior prom on Thursday night. She was going to be escorted by former Attorney General Ramsey Clark's eldest son, Happy. They are both fine, and please don't ask anymore.

Finally, the Leominster Register reported in its P.M. edition yesterday that Jed Willinghogen will probably be appointed Governor Sargent's gardiner by Aprilfirst. It is common knowledge around Beacon Hill that the Chief Executive wants his carrots sprouting early this year. Robert C. Lamb is not the name of the next Secretary of Defense.

Go home young man, the poster read in the post office, and complete footnotes for semester term papers are available, for a limited time only, in the Fitchburg Jail, call (617) 970-9910, night or day for details. Call collect.

And that is about how it should be for the rest of the Congressional term . and there is absolutely nothing Bobby Sherman can do about it.

He's Gotta Make A Livin'

President Nixon allowed Glenn Seaborg, head of the Atomic Energy Commission, into the throne room the other day because he was getting worried.

Seaborg arrived in a dust-covered Jeep, fresh from the Nevada testing grounds, and was quickly ushered into inner sanctum.

Nixon was sitting at his desk, his eyes red from weeping and his expansive brow wrinkled into an exquisite pattern of worry.

"Tell me again what the bomb will do," he begged.

Seaborg was momentarily stunned. After all, this was the President, wasn't it? This was the man who had the guts to go on nation-wide TV to tell the people he had no idea who was fooling around with his campaign funds; this was the man with the iron nerve and steel-edged will who risked ridicule in the eyes of the public by trying to beat George Murphy, and lost. What was bothering him?

Nixon motioned Dr. Seaborg into a chair.

"The reason I brought you here," he began with a stammer, "I, well, that is, Pat and I have been doing a little thinking lately about what would happen if they get mad. Know what I mean?" I mean, somebody could get hurt around here. Can you understand that?"

Seaborg began to nod and looked at his hands with embarrassment.

"Here, look at this." Nixon offered him a sheaf of paper. "It's the budget for this year. Turn to the Defense Dept. section and look at page four and tell me what you think."

The good doctor thumbed through the massive document until he came to the Defense Dept. section. He turned to page four and began to read about the $1 billion that Nixon requested for ABM's and Safeguard missile systems to protect the capital.

"I don't know quite understand what you want me to tell you, Mr. President," he said.

Nixon slumped lower in his chair and sighed, "Just tell me it'll work. Tell me I'll be safe. That's all."

Seaborg said, "But no one knows that for sure, Mr. President. They have only just begun to test them." So far, they appear to work. But no one can guarantee that."

Nixon gave him an impatient flip of his hand "That's all you dumb scientists ever tell me," he snapped. "What this country needs is someone with a little bit of nerve, someone who can take charge and get things done quickly and efficiently."

Seaborg stared at the dark jowled figure leaning over the desk in front of him. Nixon was sweating and he was breathing hard.

Seaborg got up and slowly walked to the door. He turned the knob and then swung around to face Nixon.

"You said it, Mr. President, I didn't."

BCBC Bows Out

To the Editor:

Due to unforeseen complications, the Birth Control Booklet Committee, per se, must, at least temporarily, postpone work on the panphlet. Because Boston University had published a booklet containing referral information, we had mistakenly assumed that such an act was legal. However, after much consultation with Mr. Howland, we simply had to face the fact that though publishing educational information on abortion and birth control is legal, "advertising" persons or places that give out such information or help one procure either of the above is illegal: illegal to the extent that, if prosecuted, the chairman of the BCBC could be sentenced to 3 years in prison. Now, we don't know exactly how or why Boston University escaped legal action, but as a state institution, we really can't risk it.

Contrary to the data published in the Collegian on December 17th, 80% of what the booklet would have contained is not illegal--in fact, only one page of the booklet would have been so, i.e. the page with referrals. However, the main difference between our booklet and others on this campus dealing with birth control was to be the referrals, which the BCBC considered of the utmost importance. Therefore, till next semester at least, all work on any sort of booklet has been ceased.

We on the BCBC would like to thank the Student Senate, and expecially the two senators sponsoring our bill, for their efforts; we apologize for any hassle we put them through. We would also like to thank those dorms that planned to contribute towards the publishing of this booklet. We hope that this letter has clarified our situation somewhat and that you understand. Perhaps February will bring better days for the BCBC.

Birth Control Booklet Committee

Rocky Racoon

To the Editor:

I was led to believe that the 5 college planning committee intended to bring the question of accepting the Rockefeller grant to the entire community to resolve the deep questions raised by accepting such a grant. By arriving at their decision alone, the committee has followed the same sort of elitest process which enables men like Rockefeller to control the masses.

Initially, the grant seemed very attractive to me, as an ecology student. Some of the projects which came to my mind were a study to gain evidence to halt the army engineers plan to destroy part of the valley, studying and controlling air and water pollution in this area of rapidly expanding population, or designing an ecologically sound transportation system for the area. But we must look beyond our isolated valley and take into account the overall environmental and social harm done by the American corporate system. Will this system be perpetuated by the favorable publicity Rockefeller receives from making this token, beneficial grant? (Initial reports in the Amherst Record and Boston Globe make him out to be the "great white father"). Conversely, will the fact that students rejected money help make people aware that students have high ideals which they are sincere in sticking to, and are not just passing through a fad of rowdy, pointless, radicalism? Perhaps, in its little way, this will gain sympathy for the radical movement and hasten the eventual downfall of America's repressive institutions.

If Rockefeller is sincerely concerned about the problems of today, he could put a major dent in their solution by cleaning up his own house. Standard Oil is one of the major air, land and water polluters of the world. Chase Manhattan Bank supports the racist regime in South Africa. The tax-free Rockefeller foundation money (about $50 billion) puts the tax burden on our own parents. Rockefeller interests support a large part of our involvement in Vietnam, etc., etc. Rockefeller's computerized advisors have calculated that by supporting students seeking minor change, he'll knock the wind out of the radical movement which recognizes that institutions such as his business empire are the major obstacles toward the improvement calculated risk that a study by students in this isolated area won't endanger his own interests (a similar study by students in New Jersey might indict Standard Oil).I am flattered that he thinks of the radical student movement as a real threat to his interests and it is necessary to buy them off. This makes me very optimistic that the major social change needed to better the plight of man and his environment will take place in my lifetime, if we stick to our ideals and educate others. Rockefeller has won the first round, but the fight is not over yet.

I Wanna Kill...Kill

Ever take a draft physical? If you haven't, you should try it. The process is amazing. It all begins with a sharp straight officer gentleman calling role. "Adams, Samuel-Adrian, Haroid..Zeffer, Michael. Alright, if you're not here give a shout. (a little hidden chuckle here)" From here you are herded up to the third floor. Mr. LIFER walks in. "I've been in the service for 30 years..." He then goes on to read off some instructions in a noticeable illiterate fashion. Dr. Kildare then walks in all dressed in white. I didn't know whether to swoon or puke. Since neither is in accordance with army regulations, I ignored the scene. The doctor proceeded to inform us of our rendevous with the medical examiners; none of which made any sense. We were then shipped out for our medical examination.

Its funny how vividly I remember the 'stripping room'. Yes, we promising draftees were commanded to disrobe to our B.V.D.'s. "Strip to your panties" went the demanding phrase. (Another chuckle here--quite a humorous crew they have there.) We were then corralled into the weight and height room--station 1. Oh yes there were lots of stations and they all had their own little private inquiry into a specific function of your body. Station 3 was the urine station. It was in this station that one of my brighter companions retorted, "This must be a pissy job." Station 5 jabbed you with a needle and 7 made you cough while he held your life in his right hand.

This will shock you so be prepared. You get a free lunch--yes F-R-E-E. Except that you're so physically mutilated that you can't look at the mystery meat they serve you--let alone eat it! From the dining box you are driven into a classroom. The mental aptitude test awaits you. I can see why army intelligence found their recent P.O.W. raids successful.

The shrink is the next stop. The questioning begins. "Do you take drugs? Do you like boys? Would you like to stay out of the military? Are you emotionally disturbed?" I replied in the positive on every count. A quick check was scratch across my paper. I was phychologically fit for the armed service.

The rest was rather dull--a few more quick stations then you sign out. Sardined in a bus on the way home I was glad it was all just for fun. I regained my student deferment the next week.

Pre-Civil War Study Wins UMass Prof Award

UMass historian who wondered which pre-Civil War Northerners violently opposed anti-slavery, wrote a book about it and earned an award from the American Historical Association.

Assistant Professor Leonard L. Richards is co-winner of the AHA prize for the best book of the year on American history.

A teacher of the Jacksonian period, he was concerned with the kinds of Northerners who formed mobs to fight the abolition movement. His researched answer is the title of his award-winning book: Gentlemen of Property and Standing: Anti-Abolition Mobs in Jacksonian America."

Prof. Richards, a soft-spoken man of 36 years, also asked: "Why were Northerners so hostile to organized anti-slavery?" "Who were the most zealous anti-abolitionists, and what motivated them?" and "What were the Northern anti-abolition mobs like?"

His answers are sometimes surprising. He found that a general assumption of many people is not correctly applied to the anti-abolition mobs. Those mobs were not "primitive, emotional, and spontaneous responses of the poor and desperate," he says. According to the author, the opposite was often true. "How can one call 'spontaneous,' mobs that assembled at church meetings with bags full of rotten eggs? Or with a band?"

Some of the larger mobs, Prof. Richards writes, were unorganized and tended to get out of hand, perhaps because they were large. But these mobs, he contends, were more anti-Negro than anti-abolition.

Anti-abolition mobs usually had a sense of organization, and well designed purposes. Their leaders were often "scions of old and socially dominant Northeastern families," Prof. Richards writes. Even so, their names are not among those readily recognized by most people today -- names like Joseph Graham, Joseph S. Bates, and Julien Neville, all businessmen and merchants.

The author prefers to write about lesser-known people in history, the "little folk." One of his current projects concerns the "little folk" involved in anti-slavery activity in the North. In this his second book, Prof. Richards will explain which geographical areas were strong anti-slavery areas, and why.

Dr. Richards, who was unaware his publisher, Oxford University Press, had entered Gentlemen for the American Historical Association award, learned of his win the day before Christmas. He shared the $5,000 prize with Francis S. Hackney of Princeton who wrote a study of the transition of Populism to Progressivism in Alabama.

Leonard Richards came to UMass as assistant professor in the fall, 1969, from San Francisco State College. He earned his Ph.D. from the University of California in 1968, with Gentlemen as his thesis. He and Mrs. Richards and their four children live in Amherst.

Assistant Professor Richards wrote a book about Northern Anti-Abolitionists in Pre-Civil War days, and found some surprises. He in turn was surprised to win an award for it.

Fund Raising Drive Held For S.C. Blacks

An ad-hoc group of UMass students has raised over $500 during the last six weeks on behalf of impoverished Blacks and Indians in the Ridgeville-Four Holes area of Dorchester County, South Carolina. According to U.S. Census Bureau figures, the region is one of the poorest in the South, with high unemployment and inferior educational conditions causing some 8,000 non-whites to subsist below the poverty line.

The fund-raising drive is being spearheaded by Ann Nichols, '72, and Sally Schmidt, '71, who are roommates on Emerson House's Spanish corridor.

According to Ken Mosakowski, a graduate student in education who is serving as press contact for the group, which calls itself the Dorchester County Relief Fund, the success of the drive is due largely to extensive publicity through the media of radio and newspapers. Mosakowski has sent press releases about the drive to a number of local newspapers and radio stations, which have shown "a high degree of cooperation" in publicizing the project.

Paula Pavelcsyk, '72, another member of the group, has volunteered to carry the message of the drive into her home community of Haydenville by distributing a leaflet in her neighborhood and among the parishoners of local churches.

Responses to the students' appeal have been both discouraging and heartening. A fund-raising letter distributed to some 800 University professors and staff members on December 18th netted the Fund barely fifty dollars. Then, on January 5th., the group received a personal check for $175 from a couple in Miami, Florida, who apparently had heard about the drive on the radio.

The students have decided to continue the drive through the winter months. Contributions are being wired directly to Mrs. Victoria Delee, founder of the Dorchester County Freedom Association and long-time civil rights leader in South Carolina. All funds collected will be used to buy high-protein food and medicine to combat widespread hunger and disease found among the poorer families in the Ridgeville area.

Other students participating in the drive include Arlen Brunson, '73; F. James Gensheimer, '72; Janice Herlihy, '73; Joanne Medwid, '73; and Judy Tripp, '72.

In a recent Daily Hampshire Gazette interview with Woman's Page Editor Betsy Goldman (UMass '70), Ann Nichols offered a viewpoint which may well speak for the motivation behind the Dorchester County Relief Fund. "It's easy to talk about changing 'the system'," she said, "but it's another thing to actually help people."

Taxpayers Delay Own Refunds

Refund checks to thousands of taxpayers have been delayed because taxpayers are failing to properly identify themselves, the IRS revealed today.

IRS said taxpayers are forgetting to peel off the pre-addressed name label from the front of their return and place it on the top of the Form 1040. The name label contains information necessary to process the return such as taxpayer's social security number and address.

IRS advises taxpayers that their signature or signatures at the bottom of the Form 1040 is not sufficient identification because hundreds not only have the same name but similar addresses. Use of the name label enables IRS to properly identify the sender and process the refund speedily.

Physics Dept. To Offer New 'Intermingled' Courses

According to the physics dept., Nuclear subtle effects on the environment is becoming one of the important facts of life. A nuclear balance of terror dominates world politics and threatens the life of us all. Yet students have too little opportunity to learn about these serious nuclear age problems and their relation to the approaching strain on the global environment.

These are problems to which science is relevant but in which technical realities are of necessity intermingled with social and political considerations.

In response to their need, several members of the UM/A Department of Physics and Astronomy are offering courses addressing these problems. The courses being offered are designed for non-science majors.

Insofar as there is a gap of misunderstanding and distrust leading students to avoid science altogether, the courses are an attempt to bridge this gap and to give undergraduates a more informed appreciation of the technological society in which they live. None of the course offerings have prerequisites in science, the background material being developed in the courses themselves.

Six faculty members will be engaged in this effort this coming spring, with the following courses being offered:

(a) Orchard Hill 268: "Strategic Weapons and World Order." A course discussing the role and effect of strategic weapons in international relations. Nuclear warheads, mounted on intercontinental missiles and guided by computers, symbolize a class of weapons which make international problems and policies different from those which most world leaders regard as traditional. In some cases it may be that the weapons determine policy rather than the other way around. An appreciation of these weapons then becomes an integral part of policy making.

(b) Physics 117: "Nuclear Energy - its Physics and its Social Challenge." This course is based on the presumption that a citizen can better cope with the political, environmental and social problems posed by nuclear energy if he has a background of understanding what an atom and a nucleus are and how they contribute to the way nuclear power plants and weapons work and what they can do. Thus the course is a mixture of physics and engineering and biological effects and political and diplomatic challenges; a wide range of topics from the meaning of force and energy to the need and problems of disarmament. This semester the course will be given in two sections, both at 9:05 AM, one for students who have not had a course in physics or a closely related science and another section for those who have, so that the physics material may be covered at an appropriate place and level for each group. It will be taught by Professors Inglis and Hoffman.

(c) Southwest 390: "Nuclear Technology and the Environment." This course examines the impact of nuclear technology and man's environment. Effects on the physical environment, the biological environment, and the world political and social environment will be examined. Attempts will be made to discuss possible future accumulated effects. Emphasis will be placed on topics which are most interesting and pertinent to those enrolled. Opportunities for various types of active participation in directing the course will also be stressed. This course will be taught by Professor Kofler.

(d) Orchard Hill - "Problems in the Air." Taught by Professor Ford. A scientific study of the problems of air pollution intended primarily for the student with little or no scientific background. Guest lecturers with expertise in various fields will discuss some of the relevant topics.

The intent of these courses is not to train people as scientists but rather to provide them with sufficient information to function as informed citizens in an increasingly complex world.

Guest Speaker To Discuss Father's Role In Childbirth

"Father Participation in the Childbirth Experience" will be discussed at UMass next week by John S. Miller, M.D., an expert in childbirth education.

The lecture will be given Tuesday, at 8 p.m. in 163 Complex at the Campus Center. Sponsors are the UMass School of Nursing, the Pioneer Valley Childbirth Education Association, and the Childbirth Education Association of Greater Springfield.

A second lecture, sponsored by the same group, will be presented Wednesday, at 8 p.m. at the Schine Inn, Springfield. The topic will be "Parents and Professionals: Partners in Childbearing."

Dr. Miller, a consultant for the International Childbirth Education Association and the La Leche League International, is a graduate of the University of California Medical School. He completed his residency in obstetrics and gynecology at the University of California Medical Center. Dr. Miller is chairman of the department of obstetrics and gynecology at French Hospital, San Francisco, and has a full-time private practice.

The author of "Childbirth," a manual for pregnancy and delivery, he is a member of the American Board of Obstetrics and Gynecology and the American College of Obstetrics and Gynecology.

The lectures are open to the public without charge.

Winter Parking Rules Explained

To facilitate snow removal operations, the following overnight parking regulations will be in effect immediately, and until April 1, 1971.

Lot #1 (Whitmore), the Police Station lot, and the Infirmary road and Infirmary parking areas will be plowed first. Overnight parking in these areas is prohibited.

Lots #10, 11, 12 and 13 will be plowed second. People who are assigned to any of these lots and who wish to park overnight must park in a cluster in lot #10, and be prepared to move their vehicles to lot #11 while snow removal crews are plowing lot #10.

There will be no overnight parking in lots #12 and 13.

Overnight parking is also prohibited in Areas #2, 3 (Haigis Mall), 4, 5, and 6. Vehicles parked in these areas will be towed when necessary. People who work the night shift in the Campus Center or who park their cars in Areas #2, 4, 5, and 6 during the night for other reasons should make arrangements in the Campus Center which will allow Police and snow removal crews to contact them when plowing is to be done.

Vehicles parked in F Lot must be moved when necessary to facilitate plowing. These cars should be moved to V Lot. Notice of snow removal policy in F and V Lots will be announced.

Overnight parking in N Lot is prohibited; vehicles will be towed when necessary.

Cars parked in M Lot overnight should be parked in a cluster in the WEST end of the lot, and moved as necessary to facilitate plowing.

WFCR Presents 'Colors'

The varied shades of ideas and experiences that make up the black experience are presented on "Colors," a new program heard Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday evenings at 7:30 p.m. over public radio station WFCR.

"Colors" is one of several programs produced by members of the Black Mass Communications Project at Amherst through WFCR. interviews, and "rap sessions," "Colors" brings to the listening audience a reflection of the attitudes of the blacks to the American experience.

As "Colors" fulfills a much needed service to the black community, it provides an equally important service to the white community. A source of news and information for blacks to blacks, it also has a message for whites. It is one more step towards building bridges from the one community to the other, according to the producers.

At 88.5 FM, WFCR broadcasts in a six-state area and is a cooperative effort of Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges and the University

New Student Pay Procedure Coming

As a result of the increasing number of student employees over the past several years, student and faculty requests, and further efforts of the University Personnel Office to better serve the University community, certain changes effecting student employees' pay periods to become weekly instead of bi-weekly and paycheck distribution to become departmentalized rather than centralized are being implemented in the near future.

The paycheck issued to student employees, at the Cashier's Office in Whitmore Administration Building on February 5, 1971, will be for the two week period ending January 23, 1971. Accompanying this paycheck will be a card listing the name and location of the department where his future checks are slated for distribution. If the information on this card is in any way erroneous, the student should return the card to Mrs. Elizabeth Broadhurst in the Personnel Office no later than 12:00 noon on February 8, 1971 and appropriate corrections will be made. If for some reason a student employee is not receiving a paycheck on February 5, 1971, he should contact Mr. Gerald A. Miller in the Placement and Financial Aid Office to ascertain where his future checks are scheduled for distribution.

The paychecks issued to student employees on February 12, 1971 will be received at the department in which the student is employed. This paycheck will be for the work period January 24, 1971 through February 6, 1971. If a student is employed by more than one department, he will receive only one check each week for the total amount due him for work performed in all departments in which he is employed. If he wishes his paycheck to be sent to another department in which he is working other than that department to which it is scheduled to be sent, he should bring the card received at the Cashier's Office on February 5, 1971 to Mrs. Elizabeth Broadhurst in the Personnel Office by 12:00 noon on February 8, 1971 to have the change made.

Each Friday, thereafter, the student employee's paycheck will be received at the department in which he is working and will represent the work period of the week immediately preceding that week in which the paycheck is issued. For example, the paycheck received on February 19, 1971 will be for the work period February 7, 1971 through February 13, 1971.

Facilities are available to cash student employee paychecks at the Cashier's Office in Whitmore Administration Building and at the Business Office, second floor, Student Union Building.

Not only will these new procedures eliminate the current inconvenience to students who must wait in lengthy lines for extended periods of time to receive their paychecks but will also result in student employees receiving pay for work performed at the earliest possible time rather than waiting from two to four weeks for such payment.

The patience and cooperation of all student employees will ascertain that this long awaited transition will occur smoothly and with little confusion.

Girls Gymnasts Get Ready For Saturday

UMass' Girls Gymnastics team will start its "second season" with a meet against state championship YMCA team from Marblehead, Mass. on Saturday at 1 p.m. at the Boyden Auxiliary Gym. Admission is $1, or student identification card.

Both varsity and JV members will be featured on the mixed team competing against the toughest opponent to date. The JV girls, coached by graduate student Ruth Morse, and varsity team, coached by Mrs. Kitty Kjeldsen, have spent the greater part of the intersession training for the upcoming competitions. The loss of two top competitors, Barbara Holt and Sue White, has weakened the varsity line-up somewhat but the girls are still hoping to come through undefeated this year.

Mrs. Kjeldsen Selected As Gym Rep

Mrs. Kitty Kjeldsen, women's gymnastics coach, has been chosen as the official U.S. gymnastics representative to travel with the Russian World Championship Team during their upcoming trip to the United States.

The choice was made by the United States Gymnastics Federation, the governing body of the sport in this country.

The Russian men and women gymnasts, best in the world, will travel to the states during the week of Feb. 3 for an international competition against U.S. teams at Pennsylvania State University on Feb. 5 and 6 this year. Tickets for the competitions were sold out within 24 hours of the start of the advanced sale, and the event itself will be covered by major U.S. television networks.

Mrs. Kjeldsen will meet the Russians in New York and will travel with them during their stay in this country.

UM Bows To Fordham, 87-79

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

Falling behind too far too early the UMass basketball team lost to Fordham University, 87-79, although it kept coming back, never making it all the way due to its own costly errors before a large Cage contingent of 4500 last night.

It was the Redmen's first home loss in over a year, or since Dec. 16, 1969 when the culprit was the University of Connecticut by 88-71. UMass record is now 11-2, while the nationally-ranked Rams moved up a notch to 13-1.

The only lead the Redmen owned in this one was a 2-0 advantage 26 seconds into the action; their only two ties came at 2-2 and 3-3 in the very early goings. Fordham was able to establish some strong first-half leads, and when UMass made its runs at the Rams late in that half and throughout the second half, it was Redman miscues that slowed the Redmen down.

UMass turned the ball over 19 times to the visitors' nine. Much of the story of the game is told right there.

Approximately five and a half minutes into the game and the Redmen were down 13-6 as Fordham's Ken Charles already had nine points. He was to end up with 22. After about ten minutes of first-half play, the Ram advantage was 24-13 due to the hot hand of star Charles Yelverton, who had nine points up to this point and who would finish the game with 30.

Five and a half minutes later, with 5:34 showing on the clock, Fordham rode two Charles free throws to a 36-19 advantage, its biggest of the contest. That lead was duplicated a few seconds later when Yelverton matched a Redman hoop with one of his own and the score read 38-21.

At this point, UMass got down to the business at hand and cut the Ram lead to ten, 46-36, at the intermission break. Extremely poor shooting plagued UMass in that 20-minute stretch (the Redmen shot 36.1% from the floor), but improved shooting would be the key to the home team's comebacks in the second half.

Julius Erving had a low-scoring first half, seven points; the night, however, was only half over.

The Redmen let Fordham score four points in the first two and a half minutes of the second canto, but held the Rams to that total for another one and a half minutes, and the home team started to peck away at the lead.

Two John Betancourt points, three from Ken Mathias and six from Erving set the stage for an Erving-to-Chris Coffin breakaway that netted a key basket and brought UMass within one at 50-49.

In two minutes time the visiting squad built its edge up to five, 54-49, and for the next couple of minutes the Ram advantage fluctuated between three and five points. Over the next six minutes, from when there was 12:03 left in the tilt to when there was 6:01, Fordham built up another hefty lead, this one a 14-pointer, 77-63.

But the Redmen climbed back. Back-to-back three point plays by Erving and Rich Vogeley, two Erving foul hoops and a long-range jump shot by Betancourt brought UMass within four, 77-73, with 3:46 to go.

After Yelverton and Erving traded baskets, it was two fouls committed by the home guys that gave the Rams a golden opportunity to ice the affair. The first foul sent John Burik to the line for a one-and-one; he canned them both for a 81-75 count with 3:02 remaining. The second foul saw Bill Mainor also hit both sides of a one-and-one for 83-75 with 1:54 showing on the clock.

UMass made up for the four points lost on fouls after Betancourt put in a shot from the floor, followed by two Erving hoops from the line, making it 83-79 with 1:18 left. A Fordham turnover just seconds later gave the Redmen a big break, but a quick Fordham steal resulted in a Charles lay-up, dashing UMass' hopes of pulling its fine rallies through. The Rams were up 85-79 with one minute to go. One half minute later, Mainor ended the scoring for the night with a couple of more charity hoops, 87-79.

HOOP NOTES-Of the Redmen's 19 turnovers, ten came in the second half when less mistakes were necessary if the comeback was to work...Vogeley played a strong game...The junior forward, in substitute roles for Coffin and a fouled-out Mathias, played some real smart ball, scoring 11 points...Erving really came through in that second half...The junior star, who was a mere two-for-seven from the floor in the first half, sunk six-of 12 in the second and all 11 of his attempts from the foul line...Betancourt was sub-par to his performance the other night against Providence...Although the junior guard scored well, 18 points, his floor play was off as his seven turnovers indicates... With his 30 points Erving raced 8th place in UMass career scoring, surpassing Peter Bernard, a 64 graduate...His total is 1007, as last night's performance made him the eighth Redman player ever to cross the 1,000-point threshold.. Yelverton, at 6'2, showed some fine moves and sharp shooting. .No one particular area or thing sticks out as the reason for UMass two losses in succession, the other coming last Saturday to PC, 73-72...If anything, the two defeats result from a confusing combination of little things, things that a young team and its hard-working coach can discover and correct in the days ahead.

Freshman Basketballers Face BU Away Today

By FRED ROSENTHAL
Staff Reporter

In what could be one of its toughest encounters of the year the UMass freshman basketball team will battle the BU frosh in BU's Sargent Gymnasium at 6:00 tonight. UMass will be seeking its eighth victory against no defeats.

The BU freshman have beaten Northeastern, Brown and Chamberlayne Junior College and have lost at UConn. That UConn freshman team lost a close game to the UMass frosh 78-65 after running off the first eight points of the game.

BU's best player is a 6'4 forward from Fredrick, Maryland, Kenneth Boyd. Boyd scored 30 points against UConn. The other four starters for the little Terriers will be guards Steve Dabney (5'11) and Albert Cofer (6'0), forward Louis Bosley (6'2), and center Curtis Bolden (6'6).

UMass's coach Pete Broaca expects to have a tough game in Boston due partly to the long layoff between semesters. "We've had only three practices after a layoff of a month and a half."

Frosh Cagers Bop Westfield

By FRED ROSENTHAL
Staff Reporter

Showing effects of a month long layoff, the UMass freshman basketball team came back from a poor first half to easily defeat the Westfield State JV's, 97-72, in the Cage last night. The win was UMass' seventh in a row against no defeats.

The Little Redmen played very poorly in the first half with Rick Pitino trying to be just a little bit too fancy. After the 6'1 guard settled down the frosh frontcourt proceeded to get themselves into foul trouble with Al Skinner picking up his third personal at 12:42 and Art Levine picking up his third at 8:43.

Coach Pete Broaca shuffled reserves, Craig Boyles, Peter McMahon, and Dennis McHugh in and out of the lineup, but no one was able to do a consistantly good job.

Another thing which seemed to hurt the Little Redmen in the first half was the fact that Pitino was not getting the ball on the fast break. Several times UMass forwards got rebounds and attempted to dribble up the court themselves only to turn the ball over. Coach Broaca later stated that it was Pitino's responsibility to make sure he got the ball after the rebound.

The one good thing in the first half was the overall play of 6'3 guard Pete Trow who kept UMass in the game with his scoring and rebounding. At the half UMass led by only one point, 37-36.

In the second half the Little Redmen turned around and got their fast break going to outscore Westfield State, 17-6, over the first four minutes of the second half and take a 54-44 lead.

Partly responsible for this outburst was a full court press with Skinner playing a guard on defense. With less than a minute gone and UMass leading 40-36 Skinner tipped a Westfield State pass in the backcourt and Pitino grabbed the loose ball. He then fed Skinner for an easy two points.

The UMass frosh put on another scoring outburst at 13:15 with the score 61-50, as they scored eight straight points over a two minute stretch.

Trow was the leading scorer and rebounder for the Little Redmen with 27 points and 13 caroms. Pitino had seventeen assists which tops his previous total of 13 against AIC. The leading scorer for Westfield State was forward Don Byron with 24 points.

UM Growth Plans Aired Before Faculty Senate

HER TEEPEE RUNNETH OVER-The Faculty Senate yesterday was told that the Board of Trustees liked the idea of stabilizing UMass growth at 25,000 by 1980 and heard explanations of plans which would create "satellite" campus in the valley and increase the size of the Junior class by 50%. They did not hear any explanation of where all the new students are going to be put. See story page three and editorial page six. (MDC photo by Steve Schmidt)

Oz Outlines New Schemes

By ANNE GURNETT
Staff Reporter

A special meeting of the Faculty Senate was called Thursday afternoon at the request of Chancellor Tippo to discuss motions submitted by the Rules Committee concerning the size of future freshman classes, grad-undergrad enrollment ratios, the College Cluster concept, and the growth rate and enrollment stabilization cutoffs to be established at the Amherst campus in the near future.

Tippo, speaking on the concept of possible enrollment stabilization, said that at an informal Board of Trustees meeting held in December, the Board showed a "strong inclination to stabilize the population of the student body at 25,000" within a few years. He added that he was not "enamored of further growth" but would like the stabilization to occur over a period of perhaps five years.

"However," he continued, "the meeting was just a discussion - no official action has as yet been taken."

The question of stabilization led to discussions of problems inherent in the plan. It was proposed that the size of the freshman classes be restricted so that junior transfers from state and junior colleges might continue to be admitted in keeping with present University policy.

When it was pointed out that this would cause an increase in the size of junior-senior classes of up to 50%, it was further proposed that the Amherst campus might eventually specialize in upperclass and graduate programs, leaving the bulk of undergrad programs to be handled by state and junior colleges. This proposal was not readily received by the majority of those present.

A discussion of the Cluster College concept was presented by Prof Webb of the Geology dept. According to this plan, satellite campuses would be established within a ten to fifteen mile distance from the Amherst campus, which would remain the central campus.

These satellites would consist of 2,000 to 3,000 students at most and would be basically Liberal Arts colleges. Students seeking specializations not available at their campuses would transfer to Amherst in their junior years.

The purpose of this proposal was to give the students the advantages of both a small college like Amherst and the size of the University.

The shortcomings of the proposal, specifically the lack of funds, opposition from the state legislature, and the fact that the administration has no power outside of the three campuses, killed the measure which, as Chancellor Tippo put it, "didn't have a ghost of a chance of getting approved."

Also brought up was a motion to establish a grad-undergrad enrollment ratio. This was met by opposition from Chancellor Tippo who said it would be "unfortunate" to establish such a ratio without first considering the quality of students in graduate programs, the supposed surplus of Ph-D's, and expansion programs within the University.

Prof. Brogan brought up a motion to establish a Faculty Senate Committee on Residential colleges, which was passed after much debate. Discussion did not progress beyond that point.

A high concentration of narcotics in the Western Massachusetts area has resulted in increased arrests and confiscation of a great amount of marijuana, LSD and heavy-type drugs according to the Western Massachusetts narcotic division of the state police. (MDC photo by David Williams)

Western Massachusetts Narcotics Arrests Jump

NORTHAMPTON —Narcotic arrests have doubled during the last year and the Amherst area has been the scene of a concentration of LSD-type drugs, while the Springfield area has a heavy concentration of heroin, Joseph A Delva, head of the Western Massachusetts narcotic division of the state police said Wednesday.

Arrests ranged from 209 in 1969 to 425 last year as the result of a five member state police narcotic team based at the Northampton Barracks.

In 1969, arrests were made for every violation of the narcotic law including illegal use of heroin, amphetamines and other harmful drugs.

In 1970, most arrests were of large dealers, and wholesalers of narcotics.

Those arrested in Western Massachusetts last year ranged from a 15-year-old Holyoke marijuana user to a 39-year-old Northampton man who was using heroin, Delva said.

The greater Amherst area, according to Delva, has the greatest concentration of LSD and marijuana. Arrests have also been made for illegal use of cocaine.

Some 12,000 LSD "tabs" were seized last February in an Amherst raid which resulted in the arrest of three persons. The drugs, taken from a North Pleasant Street bar, were valued at over $45,000, state police said.

Springfield, has a concentration of the heavy-type drugs, such as opium and heroin, Delva said.

Other high concentration areas, he said, besides Amherst and Springfield are Holyoke and Pittsfield. Even the small valleytowns, have been the scene of large arrests, Delva said.

Large arrests have occurred in the Hamptons-north, south, east and Westhampton, West Springfield, Deerfield, Turners Falls and Lee.

"According to our records, arrests have occurred throughout the Pioneer Valley with the exception of two small Berkshire County towns of Mt. Washington and Florida," Delva said.

The narcotic team has seen a definite rise in heroin during the past year, although, it is not a popular drug. A few years ago, according to Delva, there was virtually none in the valley.

The job, as Delva sees it, is primarily enforcement of the narcotic laws with secondary duties of instructing other state police officers in the criminal end of drugs, and the Narcotic Speakers Bureau.

The bureau, which is made up of members of the narcotic division, speaks before civic groups in Western Massachusetts on assignment from headquarters in Boston. These talks are designed to keep people informed on current trends in the field of drugs.

Government Pressures Striking British Labor

BY LOUIS NEVIN
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Plagued by labor troubles the government warned Thursday it will slash welfare benefits and tax concessions which it sees as subsidizing strikes.

Officials said the administration, spurred by a nationwide postal strike and tieup of a state owned airline, will announce the move shortly, probably next week. It is said to promote protest from trade union leaders and opposition legislators.

The postal strike is entering its 10th day with mounting evidence of disruption to business and widespread hardship. If prolonged it could lead to bankruptcy for smaller firms operating on small margins and unable to collect their bills.

All operations of British European Airways were halted at London Airport as a strike of mechanics and maintenance went into its third day.

Workers in both fields want higher pay, more than the government is willing to give.

At present, strikers receive special social welfare benefits based on family size. They are eligible for rebates of part of income taxes previously collected under withholding rules.

Now, after a year in which strikes lost 11 million work days, the government has resolved to end what some Tory leaders have called the "premium for strikers."

The strike picture at London Airport was dismal, with idle Bea planes blocking parking aprons. A few flights got away from Manchester and Birmingham airports after the planes were serviced by supervisory personnel.

In Liverpool, leaders of 1,800 dockworkers who have been on a wildcat strike for three weeks met management to debate a dispute over movement of men from one dock to another according to need. Thirty one ships are tied up.

Area Colleges Offer Female Studies Program

Female Studies, a new field akin to the Black Studies programs so promisingly begun in American colleges, seeks answers to very basic questions about women and their past.

Although the educational institutions in the Valley have not yet addressed themselves to the need for a coordinated or comprehensive Female Studies program, four of the institutions have begun to offer courses relating specifically or generally to women.

Ten will be offered for the Spring semester. They are as follows:

English 382, Prof. Lee Edwards, "Virginia Woolf," University of Massachusetts, Tuesday & Thursday 2:30-3:45.

English 380s, Prof. James Ellis, "Daughters and Ducats," Mt. Holyoke College, Tuesday 2:00-3:30.

Economics 202b, Prof. Robert Averitt, "Pro-Seminar: Women in the American Economy," Smith College, Thursday 4:00-5:50.

Eco. & Soc. 103, Prof. Margorie Childers, Introductory Sociology, "Section on Woman," Mt. Holyoke College, Tuesday and Thursday 9:00-10:15.

Soc. Sc. SS114-S71GH, Prof. Gayle Hollander, "Soviet Political Life," (Section of course deals with Soviet women), Hampshire College, Monday & Wednesday 10:00-11:00.

Sociology 224b, Prof. Jan Dizard, "Sociology of the Family," Smith College, Wednesday & Friday 1:40-2:50.

Government 303b, Prof. Susan Bourque and Prof. Jean Grossholtz, Seminar in Public Opinion and Pressure Groups: "Sex and Politics: The Impact of Sex on Power and Influence in Society," Smith College, Tuesday, 3-5.

History 337b, Prof. David Allmendinger, "The Women's Rights Movement in America," Smith College, Thursday 7:30-9:30.

Psychology 276b, Prof. Leonard Bro[illegible], "Male and Female," Smith College, Wednesday, Thursday, & Friday 12:00, Thursday 11:00.

Latin 790, Prof. Anne Parry, "Women in Latin Literature," University of Massachusetts, Wednesday 7:00-9:30.

The benefits of studying historical and modern women include discovering and assessing their contributions to cultures, dispelling misinformation about the female half of the population, and instituting a sense of self-worth among us.

The goals are sort truth from myth concerning the abilities and distinctions attributable to women now and in the past, and to ensure that women are free to extend themselves as far as individual, instead of sexual, restraints allow them. SUG Proposes Self-Examination

By LINDA A. BALICKI
Staff Reporter

The Student Union Governing Board last night moved to accept an Administration proposal contained in a letter from Vice-Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery that a task force be established to "review and establish more clearly the responsibilities of and relationship to the University administration and SUB Board".

The proposal came in the wake of recent discussion concerning an administration proposal for space on the ninth floor of the Campus Center for President Wood and the Secretary. It was this recent discussion which has raised the question of the role of SUB Board with relation to the University administration.

The task force, which will be composed by appointed members of SUG Board as well as Vice Chancellors Bromery and Campion and Associate Dean of Students Daniel Fitzpatrick was greeted by SUG Board President Betty Pugh as a step towards determining the answers to questions which have long plagued the Board as to its true role in affairs on campus.

In other discussions of the task force proposal, it was noted that the Governing Board Finance Committee which had been scheduled for Tuesday and then cancelled had been called off by David Clay who at the same time withdrew the Administration's request for space.

In other action the Board moved to approve a proposal for the reduction of Parking Garage Fees to ten cents per hour or $1.60 maximum per day. This would also include a $10.00 charge for students per month and fifteen dollars for non-students. The proposal will be taken up at the Board of Trustees meeting today in Boston, and, if approved will go before the Building Commission on Monday for final approval.

The Board also moved to table to the Building Committee a proposal made by Miss Pugh that a random poll or survey of students be made to determine student reaction on such topics as the location of T.V.'s in the Campus Center, the use of the tenth floor of the Campus Center as the location for the proposed Rath skeller and the proposed location for the "Green Monster", the fountain given as class gift by the class of 1970. Also their opinions concerning Food Service in the building and the proposed Play Area to be erected on the lawn in front of the Cafeteria.

The Play Area as proposed by Food Service Committee Chairman Bob Nims would be modeled upon that which now exists near Skinner Hall. The proposal was tabled to Food Service Committee for investigation pending the results of the proposed random survey.

In other business, a motion was approved to extend appreciation to members of the Food Services Department for maintaining the Coffee Shop for 24 hours throughout the exam period.

The Board will hold its next meeting next Thursday at which time it will consider space requests by such groups as the Student Long Range Planning Committee, the Student Homophile League, UMass Craftsmen Guild and the Ombudsman.

The Student Union Governing Board questioned its own role and its relationship to the administration at last night's meeting, after a discussion of the administration's proposal for space in the Campus Center. A task force of SUG Board members and administration representatives will further consider the problem. (MDC photo by Steve Schmidt)

DC Boycott Fizzles Under Admin. Pressure

By ANNE STADNICKI
Staff Reporter

The threatened boycott of the dining commons in Southwest was cancelled when the administration cautioned students that they might be expelled from the University for non-payment of their bills, said Jesse O'Leary, head of the boycott committee.

Recommendations for students to pay their board bills were placed on tables in the commons after it was explained that the University ruling about freezing records would be by-passed for more drastic measures, he said.

"The boycott was based on the premises that nothing is impossible, and in as big a place as the University a problem can be handled if we get the backing of enough authority," he explained.

Faith had to be placed in the administration because the committee did not want to risk jeopardizing students' academic standings, he continued.

Joel Stoneham, Director of University Food Services, said he knew of only one student who could not register because he did not pay his board. The student was allowed a deferred payment and he registered afterwards, he added.

"We are cognizant of student attitudes, and we want to offer as many services to the student as we can," he said.

He outlined feasibility studies that the food services committees are working on. The weekend restaurant and the now defunct diet line were two results of attempts to meet student demands, he said.

"I am positive we will see changes as of September 1971, but I cannot say what those changes will be," said Stoneham when asked if the mandatory meal tickets policy would be amended.

He said that the Food Services would be going to the students with the financial possibilities sometime in April.

Allen Davis, member of the Boycott Committee, said that a minimum concession of at least allowing Southwest residents the same exemptions as the rest of the campus (over 21 or a senior) was promised as a result of the discussions with Dr. Randolph W. Bromery, Assistant to the Chancellor and Douglas R. Forsyth, Associate Director of Guidance and Counseling.

If no action is taken to improve the situation he said further organization would be necessary. He added that the emotional support of students would probably be greater after a non-fulfillment of promises and the next boycott, if there was to be one, would be effective in spite of threatened rulings.

The committee is now investigating other possible uses for the dining commons facilities, considering the possibility that one or more commons would close if meal tickets were not mandatory, Davis said.

O'Leary added that the committee is attempting to get exemptions for students by recommending them to professionals who can provide acceptable excuses to the Food Services.

Publicity for Bromery's statements about dining commons is expected to hold or to shame him into keeping his promises, he said.

Nixon Pledges To End Draft This Summer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon pledged Thursday to make every endeavor to end the draft by midsummer of 1973 as he urged Congress to enact reforms to bring the nation closer to an all volunteer Army.

"No one knows precisely when we can end conscription," Nixon said in a special message to Congress. But, he said "The objective of this administration is to reduce draft calls to zero, subject to the overriding considerations of the national security."

Nixon urged Congress to increase the pay of servicemen by $1.5 billion, especially in the lower enlisted grades, initiate a test program of special pay incentives, and expand recruiting, medical scholarships and ROTC programs to make military life more desirable.

These legislative proposals, Nixon said, "would move up substantially closer to the goal of an all volunteer force."

Nixon asked Congress to extend induction authority only for two years to July 1, 1973. The normal extension period is for four years.

"We shall make every endeavor to reduce draft calls to zero by that time, carefully and continually reexamining our position as we proceed toward that goal," he said.

In addition Nixon called for legislation to change the present draft law to make it "as equitable as possible."

He urged - as he did a year ago - that undergraduate student deferments be phased out and divinity student exemptions be eliminated.

He also called for a uniform national draft call by lottery numbers to ensure relatively equal liability by the lottery numbers throughout the nation.

"I urge favorable congressional action on these proposals to reform the draft and make it as nearly fair as we can for the time it is needed," he said.

Gov't Dept. Plans Summer Internships

By BETH GOODELL
Staff Reporter

The Department of Government has announced that it is attempting to organize a Washington summer internship program for interested and qualified students. The goal of the program is to place students in summer jobs in the executive agencies and in the offices of Massachusetts Representatives and Senators.

Internship programs of this kind provide first-hand experience which can be useful both to supplement courses in political science and to evaluate different career possibilities. For several years, universities across the country have been operating programs similar to this.

According to Stanley Bach, coordinator of the internship program, "almost every member of the Massachusetts Congressional delegation has expressed interest in our plans. Although it is too early for firm commitments, we expect that most of them will accept one of our interns in their Washington offices. We are also exploring the available opportunities in the federal bureaucracy, and we should know more about that in the next few weeks."

"Students who are interested in spending next summer in Washington should contact me as soon as possible," Mr. Bach said. "I suppose the ideal candidate would be a junior, majoring in government with an above average academic record and with some background in American national politics, who can write clearly (no type). But other students, who don't, some of these credentials, are also welcome to apply. In most cases, we will nominate students to individual positions. In other cases, students will apply directly, but we will do some preliminary screening here."

"We have only modest ambitions for this coming summer. We can then try to expand the program in future years if there is enough interest on campus and enough opportunities in Washington. For students who are interested in politics and public policy this can be an excellent opportunity to both learn and act. One special problem this year, however, is that most members of Congress will not be able to pay full salaries."

Interested students graduate and undergraduate, should see Mr. Bach in his office, 410 Thompson or Mr. Eric Einhorn, 308 Thompson.

Judge Rules Kent Report Bordering On "Criminal"

CLEVELAND, Ohio (AP) - A federal judge struck from the record Thursday a special grand jury report on violence at Kent State University, saying it could "irreparably damage" the rights of 25 indicted persons, mostly students.

U.S. District Judge William K. Thomas also declared the report bordered on criminal accusations against 23 unnamed Kent State faculty members, who the grand jury did not indict but said shared the blame for the violence.

He refused to throw out the 25 indictments, saying there was no basis to stop prosecution, and refused to convene a three judge panel to rule on constitutionality of Ohio's anti riot law.

The jury, convened in the wake of disorders at Kent State last May 4 in which four students were shot to death, returned most of the indictments on riot charges. Thomas said the plaintiffs gave no evidence the law was unconstitutional.

Former Gov. James A. Rhodes, who sent National Guardsmen onto the campus to break up rioting, ordered the grand jury probe.

The shootings, which also wounded nine persons, came in a confrontation between students and National Guardsmen.

Thomas, in a 51 page memorandum, said the special grand jury went beyond its powers and violated its oath of secrecy in producing the report.

"The grand jury is an accuser of crime, not a trying body," Thomas said, adding that the report upset the teaching atmosphere at Kent State. He said it leveled charges "bordering on criminal accusations" against 23 faculty members who opposed the presence of National Guardsmen.

The jury indicted 25 persons - 23 of whom have been served with warrants and said the Kent State administration had "festered an attitude of laxity, over indulgence and permissiveness."

The report charged that students, "observers," "cheerleaders" and the 23 faculty members who circulated a statement May 3 against the guard presence all shared blame for the shootings.

Thomas' ruling was made on two suits joined in his court, one by a group of students and another by faculty members who contended that the report endangered their jobs.

He said the jury violated its oath of secrecy in asserting in the report that witnesses before it had "fairly represented" events at Kent and that the witnesses "indicted an effort at complete impartiality."

Monkey Misfires!

WASHINGTON (AP)-Ham, the rocket-riding chimpanzee who blazed the space trail for America's Mercury astronauts 10 years ago Sunday, has turned out to be less of a sensation in another field-as a lover.

The onetime hot shot of the heavens ignored a chance at romance with an amorous female chimp named Maggie who shared Ham's cage for three months.

That's the report from Ham's keeper and would be matchmaker at the Smithsonian's National Zoo where Ham still healthy and hale-has been in retirement and residence since 1963.

It was on Jan. 31, 1961, that Ham, wearing diapers and rubberpants, rode to fame on the nose of a Redstone rocket.

Secured within a one ton space capsule, he was lobbed 155 miles high and 420 miles out over the Atlantic Ocean at speeds up to 5,000 miles an hour. His feat paved the way for Alan Shepard, John Glenn, Neil Armstrong and all the rest.

Ham's would be Cupid-Bernard Gallagher, supervising keeper of the zoo's great apes-says he still has hopes that Ham will also get off the launching pad as a Don Juan and become a family man. There's no question about his physical capacity to do so, Gallagher said.

Now 13 1/2 years old, Ham is four feet tall and weighs about 120 pounds-a foot taller and three times heavier than when he blasted off from the then Cape Canaveral a decade ago.

Apollo 14 Nears Blastoff

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP)-The Apollo 14 launch crew, hoping for a flawless mission, moved smoothly ahead Thursday in a near perfect countdown toward Sunday's blastoff to the moon.

"It's one of the cleanest Apollo countdowns we've ever enjoyed," said Walter Kapryan, directing his third straight launch of the Saturn 5 booster rocket.

After the oxygen tank explosion of Apollo 13 that imperiled its crew and forced cancellation of its moon landing, Kapryan added, "it has got to be a perfect mission."

While the three astronauts worked in trainers, the launch team made final adjustments to the command module Kitty Hawk and the lunar module Antares, placing them in readiness for Sunday's 3:23 p.m. liftoff on the journey to the craggy highlands of the moon.

Adding to the optimism surrounding the flight preparations was a forecast of good weather at launch time-partly cloudy skies, cool temperatures and easterly 10 knot breezes.

The Apollo 14 astronauts-Alan B. Shepard, Jr., Edgar D. Mitchell and Stuart A. Roosa-spent several hours Thursday in spacecraft trainers, practicing critical maneuvers such as the lunar orbit, the descent to the moon's jagged Fra Mauro region, and the start back toward earth.

America Accuses Soviets Of Intimidating Newsmen

WASHINGTON (AP) - The State Department accused Soviet authorities Thursday of allowing a campaign aimed at intimidating American journalists. Journalists are said to be unable to get news from the Soviet citizens.

In a follow up to protests lodged by the American ambassador in Moscow, State Department Press Officer Robert J. McCloskey referred to two incidents in which U.S. newsmen were assaulted by unknown assailants.

McCloskey said the Soviet foreign ministry, in receiving the American Embassy protests, had given no explanation so far concerning the assault in a Moscow street Tuesday on Associated Press Correspondent James R. Peipert or the roughing up Saturday of Washington Post Correspondent Anthony Astrachan.

He said the only response from the Soviet Foreign Ministry was that it would look into the matter.

Peipert was pushed and kicked and had his glasses broken by several unidentified men. Astrachan said he had been forced back into his car when he got out to pick up a Russian friend. He said the Russian was seized.

Television Ban Butts Tobacco Ads Into Papers

(AP) - Cigarette makers are using a substantial share of the money formerly spent on television commercials to increase advertising in newspapers, magazines and billboards and to underwrite sporting activities. What's left over is being banked or reinvested.

Exactly how much of the $226 million spent annually on television and radio is being diverted into other media is unknown because tobacco manufacturers consistently refuse to discuss promotion plans for fear of tipping off the opposition.

But one estimate is that the industry will spend about $90 million less this year on advertising than in 1970.

Cigarette advertising has more than tripled in some magazines since commercials were banned from the air Jan. 1. In the January McCall's, the last issue out before the ban, there were three pages of cigarette advertisements. In February it jumped to 10 pages.

Cigarette advertising is once again blossoming out in newspapers, where it is principally concentrated on the sports, television, stock and women's pages.

Newspapers get only about $14 million in cigarette advertising revenue in 1970, but this year the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Association estimates it will rise to between $50 million and $80 million.

Tobacco advertising in magazines last year totaled about $56 million, and in 1971 the Magazine Publishers Association estimates a 20 per cent increase.

A good percentage of the new money in magazines is being spent in women's magazines. Besides McCall's, Redbook, Family Circle, Cosmopolitan and Ladies Home Journal all report increases.

One new direction cigarette promotion is taking is in sports. Liggett & Myers has been into automobile racing for several years with its L&M Continental 5000 in the Sports Car Club of America professional series.

Speed: Cramming and Crashing

This article is part of a weekly series dealing with such topics as drug research, the "drug culture", drug addiction, drugs and religion, altered states of consciousness, and the use of drugs in other cultures such as the American Indian. This series will be sponsored by Room to Move, but will encourage readers to react to the articles by mailing or bringing in questions, rebuttal, original statements, or interesting excerpts from various publications, c/o John Dunphy, Room to Move, Student Union (located in the old barber shop across from the post office). The hope is that this series will become a medium for an ongoing exchange of views on drugs and related uses.

Speed is the group of drugs classified under amphetomines. It includes benzedrine, dexedrine, and methedrine (in ascending order of potency). Benzedrine and dexedrine are usually taken in pill form and are most commonly referred to as diet pills. They come in many potencies themselves and may be mixed with a tranquilizer to ease the nervousness induced by the drug.

Methadrine can be snorted in crystal form or shot up. This is the most dangerous use of any speed. The short term affects of pill use are increased and prolonged and can result in death.

Most often the use of diet pills on campus occurs for a one to two day stint for an exam, write a paper, or just for fun. Although this may be beneficial, realize that you will probably be nervous, irritable and bitching at almost everyone who looks at you cross-eyed. It's not easy, but try to remember that most bad vibes occur because of the drug.

If you are going to speed, try to take multiple vitamins with iron and extra vitamin C, eat a little if you can, and rest your body even if your mind can't rest. Showers and stretching ease muscle tension and gum chewing releases some of the excess energy.

The effect of speed is a feeling of high energy and competence - of being on top of the world and digging talking about that or anything else. Often, nights spent speeding with a friend to study turn into rap sessions and usually no studying gets done.

Another danger of using speed in study is that writing may have gaps of logic. Still, a lot of cramming can be done in one night with speeding to pull you through.

Usually, the longer you speed, the harder you will crash. Although for some, the crash may be relatively easy, for others it can become a painful (in the mind sense) experience -- crying for no reason at all, depression, and extreme irritability.

The crash sleep works, for others, smoking a little grass to ease themselves down and help them fall asleep is a common method. A mild tranquilizer or a hot "My Bubble" bath relaxes muscles and usually helps one to fall asleep.

While you are speeding, your mouth will be very dry-if you smoke cigarettes, you will probably double the amount that you usually smoke. Temporary sexual impotency may occur as the result of the drug and usually wears off after sleeping.

Speed is not good for your body. Prolonged use causes lesions of the frontal lobe of the brain which may also result in severe hallucinations (the Meth-Monster)! Other results are dried skin and rotting teeth. An increased heart rate and lack of sleep causes low resistance to disease and heavily taxes the body.

A tolerance is also built up in speed; that is, the more you speed the more speed you need to get off. This tolerance builds up very quickly.

Speed is one of the more dangerous drugs to get into. The fantacies and high of speed make it one of the easiest drugs to become psychologically dependent on. But, the harm speed does to the body and the mind cause one to question the worth of the high.

Institute Will Explore Police-Campus Relations

The Office of Community Development and Human Relations announced today that it will sponsor a "Police - Campus Relations Institute" during February and March of the Spring term.

The purpose of the institute is to provide an opportunity for campus police, students, administrators and faculty to explore in depth a number of vital issues that involve police - campus relationships, such as:

1. The special problem of police relations with students.
2. Police image, the problems of rumors, carrying of firearms.
3. Communication problems, security on a campus setting.
4. Police - campus relationship problems around drugs, alcohol, attitudes toward authority, student altruism, etc.

A special planning group composed of students, police, faculty and staff members of the Office of Community Development and Human Relations met during November and December to develop the eight week program which will also include a two day intensive workshop. The institute will meet in The Campus Center each Monday afternoon from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. beginning February 1st.

This institute is one of several to be sponsored by the Community Development and Human Relations Office which functions out of the Student Affairs Office. The CDHR Office has four full time staff members and seven part time staff. Their purpose is to foster the development of a humanistic climate in the University with specific emphasis on the residential areas.

Originally known as the Office of Staff Training, the CDHR office still has major responsibility for the training of dorm counselors, the inplementation of other training programs throughout the university using the laboratory method, and the encouragement of community development through the training of residence halls' leaders. The Office of CDHR is located in 235 Whitmore.

French Dept. Presents Foreign Film Classics

The Department of French, Italian & Classics has announced that French 390b, the Department's first course offering in which films will be used, will consist of seven novels and the seven films based on these novels.

As already announced, the first film to be shown is Roger Vadim's Les Liaisons dangereuses, based on the Laclos novel. The six other films are: Therese, La Symphonie pastorale, Le Journal d'un cure de campagne, Zazie dans le metro, Le Feu Follet and La 317e Section.

Of the six, the first three are relatively well known since they are based on novels that have earned a place for themselves either on their own merits or because of the reputation of their authors. The last three, are less well known in this country, but in France this is not the case. Both Zazie and Feu Follet, although written as novels by different authors, were both adapted to the screen by New Wave director Louis Malle.

The last film to be shown, La 317e Section, won the Venice and Cannes film festival awards in 1965, but has never been released commercially in this country. One of the most powerful antiwar movies ever made, it tells of the destruction of a French patrol behind Vietminh lines at the close of the First Indochina War.

Made by Pierre Schoendoerffer, who has also made the best film study of the current Indochina War, the Emmy and Oscar award winning Anderson Platoon, this film is a veritable masterpiece and is, interestingly, based on a novel of the same name also written by Schoendoerffer. French 390b will be taught by Professor O'Connell, for three credits, meeting on Tuesday and Thursday at 2:30.

Some Faculty Senate Snafus

When Chancellor Tippo addressed the Faculty Senate yesterday, advising them on several plans concerning the shaping of the University's future growth it became that clear that some Faculty Senators are still preoccupied with several half-baked schemes.

There was some encouraging news, however. The Chancellor reported that the Trustees have outgrown the Feulty Senate idea of stuffing 30,000 students into the Amherst campus in ten years. They have evidentally settled on the figure of 25,000, which is much more realistic, and for this, the Board should be congradulated.

But the congradulations end here.

Tippo reported that the administration has been kicking around a plan to freeze the size of the Freshman Class and thereby increase the number of transfer students from State and Junior Colleges admitted to UMass each year.

This is absurd. Granted, the University has an obligation to Junior college transfers, but this plan would swell the Junior Class by 50% and would probably lead some astute Whitmorite to consider teaching only upper-level courses on this campus.

The idea of "satalite" colleges in Amherst's "suburbs" also came up for discussion again. This nightmare would create a series of semi-autonomous sister colleges in the surrounding towns, made up of about 500 students each. They would basically be liberal arts schools.

"Obviously, the duplication of facilities, the administration confusion, the opposition from the State Legislature and the ecological rape of the Valley which the plan would perpitrate leaves it, in Tippo's works, without "a ghost of a chance." The fact that the idea was considered by the Faculty Senate at all illustrates that some of the time that body claims it dedicates to serving the University is wasted.

The Faculty Senate should concentrate on grading and teaching proposals, faculty matters and educational policy. It should leave the planning of the University's future to professionals.

"We Loose Talkers Have To Stick Together"

The Greatest Column

WASHINGTON--The president, whether he likes it or not, is the trend-setter in this country, ad when he speaks in superlative it is no surprise that everyone starts picking up the habit.

I imagine the first time we knew we had a President who pulls out all stops was after our astronauts landed on the moon. The President was quoted as saying:

"This is the greatest week in the history of the world since the creation."

Then last week, before he gave his State of the Union speech, the President called it "The most comprehensive, the most far-reaching, the most bold program in the domestic field ever presented to an American Congress."

This kind of talk cannot but affect all American families.

For example, the other night, just as our family sat down to dinner, my wife announced, "I hope everyone has washed his hands, because I have cooked the greatest meal ever served in the Western Hemisphere."

"That's good," I said, "because I've had the hardest day anyone has ever had since Gutenberg invented the printing press."

My 15-year-old daughter said, "We had the worst test in school today since the Spanish Inquisition."

"How did your football game go?" I asked my 17-year-old son.

"It was the most magnificent contest ever waged in intramural sport," he replied. "I made two of the most unbelievable catches in the history of the game."

"And what did you do today?" I asked my 14-year-old daughter.

"I had the greatest Coca-Cola I've ever drunk in my life."

My wife served the pot roast. "I hope everyone likes it because it's the most expensive pot roast any butcher has ever sold."

"It is truly delicious," I said. "And it explains why we have the highest food bills of anyone on the Eastern Seaboard."

My wife took this as a personal criticism. "I can't help it if we're living in the highest inflationary period in modern times."

My son saved the day by asking, "Can I have the car tonight?"

"What for?" I asked.

"I'm going to the greatest movie ever made."

"What's the name of it?"

"I forget."

My 15-year-old daughter said, "Someone has to drive me to Jody's birthday party. It's supposed to be the grandest party ever given in the nation's capital."

My 14-year-old daughter said, "Then how come you were invited?"

My 15-year-old daughter said, "That's the most insulting thing anyone has ever said to me. You can take off my best blouse right now."

"Shut up," my wife said, "and eat your Brussels sprouts. I'm sick and tired of preparing the most fantastic meals ever served in this country, and having vegetables left on the plates."

"Your mother is right," I said. "Besides, I hate to hear fighting during the most momentous banquet I have ever attended in this dining room."

My wife said, "After the most delicious apple pie anyone has ever tasted, I want everyone to help me with the largest pile of dirty dishes I've ever seen."

There were the loudest screams of protests ever uttered by an American family but no one could escape.

Then we all went into the living room to watch President Nixon give his "State of the Union" speech which Atty. Gen. John Mitchell described as "the most important document since they wrote the Constitution."

Requiem For A Noodle
Or
How To Stuff A Wild Noodle

(A word of note from your late friendly neighborhood vegetarian restaurant)

Purpose of the Noodle: To Make a Healthy Place For People To Eat (Some food places around here have an atmosphere like walking through thin crisco.) We need a place that smells good, that is quiet, friendly, warm and relaxing- we want to bring people into closer contact with the process of making food. Connect them to the action of making/eating/becoming-you are what you eat? Talk of macrobiotics, perhaps. Talk of yoga diet. When was the last time you read a label on a package of food you were going to put into the temple of your body that holds the God of you?

Originally we got $500 from Program Council (bless em) to buy food, and ads for a 3 week trial restaurant. (the loan from P.C. has been returned.) Everybody digs it--we get 150 people to feed daily. Many volunteer to help wash and cook the vegies--not so many to wash dishes. (Why don't we use plastic coated paper plates like the rest of the campus? Besides the ecological garbage, eating on plastic is as aesthetic as a furlined urinal.) We got much help from Elaine Parker who runs the catering kitchen we use. The Union's custodial staff has also been of great assistance.

So we're a success, business booms. We change our hours so we can cut our workday from 12 hours down to 10. How much food do you order not knowing whether the place will be around in a month? Finally we get o.k. from Student Union Governing Board and Food Service to go another few weeks. Questions like, who is responsible for governance of the Noodle, never seem to get answered. Meetings and delays.

What it boils down to is you can't run a business under the bureaucratic structure of the registered student organization. It freezes funds and fractionalizes activities and has too god damn many fucking meetings.

Problems with R.S.O. (It's a drag, I know, to list the lot, but they're real): 1) R.S.O. wants all income deposited. Freeze. Buy everything on "purchase orders." All businesses we deal with ask for cash and will not sell anything otherwise. Alternative system is to get a "cash advance," that is, come to the R.S.O. office, get a few signatures and then go to the bank. We make purchases daily. Waste of valuable time and can't do that on weekends anyway. 2) Menu prices at present make enough to cover food, equipment and accessories, plus only 1/2 needed for salaries for 4 full time and 2 part time staff. Any ideas where the rest can come from? (S.U.G. graciously offered us one week's worth of salaries.) 3) We requested an extent and unused fry machine a month ago from Food Service. Not in sight. Also requested a washing machine or use of the one in the Hatch downstairs (to save our ruff chaffed hands and comply with the health inspector's need for sterilization.) Not in sight (not to be confused with 'out of sight').

The entire workings of R.S.O. seems to be to committee to death, over study and fragment. Enough of the bitch and moan.

NOODLE COME HOME

Meeting with the Noodle staff the uncertainty of our situation prevailed, so we decide to give free food during our last week, literally eat up the profits, as Michio Kushi to possibly come to U.M. to talk about just what is macrobiotics anyway.

or

THE RETURN OF THE NOODLE

Any suggestions where? Off campus would take a minimum initial investment of at least $6000. Take over a dining commons? Serving more than 200 people makes the whole thing far too impersonal. What about several kitchens in various dorms? What about Kosher, what about Chinese, Indian, etc.? What about what?

Our next move is to rest. Seek more answers. It's no shame that the Noodle has ceased present operation; it will be a crime if nothing better arises.

In the meantime let us talk, come together, do some Yoga, T'ai Chi, center ourselves, body and mind, and do everything with a sense of wonderment and friendly play.

Let us make love with our friends and life.

The Morality of Grades

I taught a philosophy course for the first time last semester and I am not sure about the morality of grades. What are the effects which grades have upon people? What kind of a system does grading help to perpetuate?

If there is a Nuremberg Trial for damage to people's spirits, will I be guilty? I don't want to say that "I was just following orders." Can I honestly take the responsibility of accepting the educational Establishment's system of rewards and punishments.

Some of my friends who are leftists have asked me many times "What gives you the right to judge people-the right to hold this power over their lives?

Another argument which I keep hearing is that the grading system conditions people to desire the grade as a goal-instead of the process of growing self-awareness and change which continues through the whole semester and hopefully throughout your whole life. How can you grade this subtle process-and if you can do so, Should you do it?

What I want to know for myself before I commit myself to the System is: Can grades teach you anything worthwhile? Or do they just teach you to look for approval from others, status, and ego trips rather than self-satisfaction?

I myself am in a very ambiguous position. I am a (grad) student and a teacher. (Actually these roles are very funny because as long as we are alive we are all always teaching and learning.

As a student I know how grades have been used to manipulate me by enticing me to work or by punishing me for a personality conflict between myself and the teacher.

The problem is that being a teacher I must grade people.

I don't know the answer to my problem yet. As with other moral dilemmas it will take time and a great deal of self-searching and ultimately some trial and error.

Since I have been teaching an ethics class I have been trying to resolve it in terms of certain moral theories.

The way from authority is: They (the trustees, deans, other teachers, parents, grad schools, businesses and conditioned students) say "GRADE"- so I will. It's the will of society and the way things are set up. Besides I'm not killing anyone...and I will do well (monetarily within the system). So I guess it's okay. I'll accept the system.

The Utilitarians such as John Stuart Mill and Jeremy Bentham have a formula based on happiness. It says "Act so that the results give the greatest happiness for the greatest number."

I could give everyone "A's". (I am not being paid for my teaching. I just want to be doing it.) If I had a paying job and I did that I would almost surely be fired. So I would be a martyr...

From the point of view of Marxism, it would be said that the system of education corrupts us all. A Marxist would say that the educational system trains us to be competitive so that we can fit right into the capitalistic economic system. We compete with each other for grades rather than helping each other learn. This is because there are only so many "A's" to be given out, just as there is only so much money around. The system says "Get what you can in this dog-eat-dog world." This encourages cheating- which seems to be one of the implicit values of the capitalist system.

Marxists believe that the economic system must be changed before there can be real changes in the educational system. This is because they understand the educational system to be a part of the superstructure which reflects the basic economic relations. They think that until we revolt against the capitalist system and replace it with socialism, our education will continue to be oppressive.

Finally, let's look at Jean Paul Sartre's theory of Existentialism. I have learned a lot about the process of making a decision from reading Sartre.

First of all, he says that my act will be defined by other people's reaction to it. For instance, other teachers may call me immoral or insane or a revolutionary if I do not accept the system as it exists. Some other people might call the same act moral and praiseworthy. So I must act in a social context where other people define what I do and who I am.

If I go to someone for advice I cannot say that he told me to do such-and-such and therefore I am not responsible for my actions because I was only following his advice. This is because when I go to someone I more or less know what his advice will be beforehand and I have chosen to listen to him. If I go to a student or a teacher for advice it is pretty obvious what each one's response would be. So I see that no one else is responsible for my decision. Only I am responsible for what I do. I am the one to praise or to blame.

I am responsible for the effects which my actions have upon other people, whether they help or destroy their lives.

Finally I can't not choose. Either I choose to give grades or not to do so-although I hope that if I choose to do it that there will be a way that I can do so as humanely as possible, such as letting people grade themselves.

So here I stand, free and responsible, attempting to create myself through my actions-trembling on the brink. I am afraid to jump and unable to stand still.

I want to leave you with a quote from a very fine paperback by a psychiatrist named R.D. Laing, which deals with the thesis that society drives people mad-that schizophrenia is not caused by heredity but by an insane society. The book is called "The Politics of Experience."

"A child born today in the United Kingdom stands a 10 times greater chance of being admitted to a mental hospital than to a university, and about one fifth of mental hospital admissions are diagnosed schizophrenic. This can be taken as an indication that we are driving our children mad more effectively than we are genuinely educating them. Perhaps it is our way of educating them that is driving them mad." (p. 104)

(Monday the Collegian will print a long excerpt from a book called "Student As Nigger" by Jerry Farber. It will offer further proof of the damage caused by the present grading system.)

The Bot's Brother

To the editor:

Saturday night, some of my friends and myself took a little tour of some of the recently constructed buildings on campus. None of them were sensible or worth the time space or money put into them. However, one of them struck us as the largest piece of technological trash to be erected in a long time. This building as most of you can guess is the Campus Center. Some of its lovely features are: a wonderful Coffee-Shop where you can pay more for the same things you get in the Hatch down the hall, although I must admit you do get to sit in a cork-walled room and use plasticware which hasn't been disposed of if it ever will be, then there's the red carpeted music room where there's no music, a great ballroom if you like expensive closet space for 500, or so people, upstairs or the escalator, to be correct there's the wonderfully carpeted bookstore where you pay full price on items you're supposed to be getting a 10% discount, little private rooms everywhere in a student funded building, hotel rooms and conference rooms in a student funded building, a multi-thousand dollar marble table for the board of trustees to sit around and plan more buildings like the campus center, a cafeteria that few students if any use, a Top of the Campus bar and restaurant that no one under 21 can use to drink at and few can afford to eat there, and there's the staircase for emergencies only that locks you in it except for the door at bottom which informs you that if you use it you set off the fire alarm system even if there's no fire, but there's no other way out so you have to use it and you come out on the slate covered terrace where every other slate is broken from less than normal use and above you is another cork covered ceiling, outside that is, and then not last and not least is the concrete pillbox or whatever-it-is with the sliding steel window and the shiny marble top which has no use, but I'm sure they'll find one since they made it even if they didn't have a purpose for it when they designed it, but then again why should they it's our money.

The Dawning of Illumination Is Often Times Blinding

To the Editor:

Thinking over the beauty of the holiday season which has waned, I began to search for the true meaning of Christmas. Christmas, with its promise of peace and goodwill. And I've often wondered why so much rhetoric and forced emotion inundate the Christmas season. It seems to me that all this talk and feeling should amount to something that lasts the whole year through. But the trouble is, it has amounted only to a wild catharsis and expression of emotions that have been hiding deep within the souls of human beings. Oh, surely, I'll admit that I was caught up in this whirlwind of talk and superficial smiles at Christmas. But I wanted to do something for someone at Christmas, because I know from my own experience that at every Christmas time there exist so many poor, suffering, anguished, and crying people; but these are people we hardly ever see---they crawl off into a corner to celebrate Christmas in its saddest feast.

My concern for these people brought me to a table that was set up in the Student Union. I walked up to the table to see what was going on. I decided that at this table very vibrant things were being done. Here was where the action is. The people at the table were collecting for Blacks and Indians in the Four Holes area in Dorchester County, South Carolina. Curiously I started discussing poverty with the collectors, and I joined the group. As it stands now there are less than ten students in this group, which was originally an Ad Hock organization and is now referred to as the Dorchester County Relief Fund. I knew by the sincerity of their faces that these were hard-working, dedicated people sitting at the Table of Hope for the Poor. There was aroused in me a deep sense of charity, and I gladly joined the group.

Do you also have that same sense of charity? Being an idealist, I like to believe that all people do have within the walls of their minds a sincere desire to give and to love. Perhaps you don't have the time to be part of an organization like the Dorchester County Relief Fund, but whenever you get the chance, respond to your inner sense of charity by making a poor, lonely person smile, or by insulating despair with hope. Let the light of happiness shine on those less fortunate than you.

Thank you,
Paula J. Pavelesyk

Movies

BELLE DE JOUR (Friday, Campus Center Ballroom, 7, 9, and 11)

A highly elegant, smooth pornographic film about a bored housewife who partakes in various erotic fantasies. Directed by Spanish director Luis Buneal, the film and its star Catherine Denueve have won awards at several international film festivals.

EAST OF EDEN (Friday, Saturday, Hampden Dining Commons, Southwest, 7:30 and 10)

Elia Kazan directed this film version of John Steinbeck's novel. It is the turbulent story of the relationship between a father and his two sons, and contains excellent finely-drawn performances by James Dean, Julie Harris, Melvin Douglas, and Jo Van Fleet.

FACES (Monday, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College.)

The American marriage is brutally examined by John Cassavetes as he explores in a cold, analytical manner the failure of a middle-class, middle-aged relationship. Often difficult to follow or understand, its power comes from the depressing mood the film evokes.

FIVE EASY PIECES (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)

A most enjoyable film. Jack Nicholson stars as a clever, educated dropout of a musical family who returns home after years of wandering. Lyrical in its texture and brutal in its truths, this film won the New York Film Critics Award as best Picture of 1970.

Five Easy Pieces

FOOTLIGHT PARADE and GOLD DIGGERS OF 1935 (Talkie, Northampton)

"In 1935, when things got rough, they sang and danced a lot," thanks to director and choreographer Busby Berkely. FOOTLIGHT features a singing-and-dancing James Cagney, with Joan Blondell, Ruby Keeler and Dick Powell. GOLD DIGGERS again stars Powell with Adolphe Menjou, Alice Brady, Dorothy Dare and Ramon and Rosita and simply hundreds of nubile, foot loose, tapping young ladies.

FREAKS

A legendary film, mainly because it was banned in this country for some thirty years. It is a typical melodrama which takes place in a carnival freak show and was considered too morbid and shocking for its time. The last film of master horror film director Tod Browning ("Dracula"), it is frequently discussed but rarely seen.

Tora, Tora, Tora

HAMLET (Tuesday, Maqhar. 8 and 10)

Laurence Olivier's highly Freudian interpretation of Shakespeare's drama.

JULIUS CAESAR (Amherst Cinema, Amherst)

A new version of Shakespeare's historical drama features an all-star cast. A strong and vivid film starring Charleston Heston, and Richard Chamberlain.

LOVE STORY (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

Erich Segal's jogging all the way to the bank with his royalties from both book and film. Reviewed elsewhere on page.

THE MAKING OF BUTCH CASSIDY AND THE SUNDANCE KID (Thursday, SU Ballroom, 7 & 9:30)

How this incredibly successful comedy-western was made is shown in this interesting and entertaining documentary.

THE OWL AND THE PUSSYCAT (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)

A bravura performance by Barbra Streisand as a hooker who hooks bookish George Segal in a generally agreeable, sentimental sex comedy.

THUNDERBALL and YOU ONLY LIVE TWICE (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

James Bond and girls and much violence comprise this very boring piece of American culture from the mid-Sixties. TORA! TORA! TORA! (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

A film disaster which ably equals the catastrophe it depicts. $25 million went into this, believe it or not, for the cardboard set-and-phoney-backdrop seem left over from "Rodan". The Japanese are wily and the Americans are schmucks in this boring film which will do to Twentieth Century Fox what Pearl Harbor did to the United States.

Theater

THE CHRONICLES OF HELL

Religious ritual is blended realism, fantasy and "living theater" techniques in this play which displays the corruption and carnality of the Fourteenth century Roman Catholic mind. Directed by UMass senior Robert L. Rofenburg, this drama is the annual Roister Doister production and will be presented February 3, 4, 5, 6 in Bowker Auditorium at 8:15. Admission is $1.50 and reservations may be made by calling 545-2043 or 545-2149.

THE LOWER DEPTHS

Maxim Gorky's famous drama is a study of a motely crew's pathetic existance during the early part of the century in Czarist Russia. This production, the senior thesis project of Amherst senior Josh Karter, will be presented this Friday, Saturday, and Sunday evenings at 8:30 in Kirby Theater, Amherst College.

TRYOUTS

The University Children's Theatre will present its second production of the season this March, ALADDIN AND THE WONDERFUL LAMP by James Morris.

Tryouts for ALADDIN, which is under the direction of Dorothy Aldrich, will be held February 3, 4, 5, from 7-9PM in Bartlett 119. Callbacks will be held on February 4. Scripts and further information are available in Machmer 401 and everyone is welcome.

The Dream Is Over

By ROBERT KELLY

"I was the Dreamweaver
But now I'm reborn
I was the Walrus
But now I'm John
...The Dream is over"
—God - J. Lennon
(Copyright 1970 Maclen (Music) Ltd. (U.K.)

JOHN LENNON/PLASTIC ONO BAND
(R. Starkey, K. Voorman, Yoko Ono)
Apple Records — SW 3372

John Lennon seems to have accomplished the impossible in having a genuinely personal record with Phil Spector at the Producer's chair. It seems that Mr. Spector only got a short piano solo to heap his embellishments on.

The record is given "For Yoko with love, from John" and it carries with its love a musical flashback of Lennon's life with heavy influence from his primal therapy sessions in California. He cries for his dead mother, shows his pain and feels it the hardest:

"No one can harm you Feel your own pain" - I Found Out (S1-C3)

The record is simple in its musical structure, but complex and revealing in its lyrical form (Not a new Lennon talent as the semantically puzzling I Am The Walrus shows.) Lennon sings sadly, and condescendingly of the Working class hero and then perplexes you with the line:

"If you want to be a hero well just follow me."
(Working Class Hero - S1-C4)

In the same song Mr. Lennon shocked the neurotic minds of AM radio with the foreever forbidden but widely used adjective "fucking" (a cuss is always good for reviews). John declares void the thoughts of Hare Krishna, gurus, dope, Jesus, Zimmerman, and the Beatles in his eyes, and quietly determines that:

"I just believe in me
Yoko and me —And that's reality
God - S2-C5

In the line of earthy Lennon effects you get one "cookie", a full set of San Francisco church bells ringing, and an amusing explosion in subsitute for a better song ending. The explosion is (according to Lennon's Hype interview by Rolling Stone magazine —the interview is very hype, not the explosion) reminiscent of Guy Fawlkes Day.

Lennon shows very little accomplishment on the piano, but makes up for his shortcoming with his excellent guitar work and imaginative chord structures. His voice is reminiscent of "Hide Your Love Away", and occasionally sounds as though his vocal chords are made of a highly elastic cement compound.

Overall, This album is a guided tour of John Lennon/Yoko Ono the inseparable, remarkable in its simplicity and honesty, and beautiful in its experience:

"Just a boy and a little girl
Trying to change the whole wide world
Isolation.....
The sun will never disappear
But the world may not have many years
Isolation"

ISOLATION — John Lennon (S1-C5)

Love Story, a Review

Is Crying Banal?

By DON GLICKSTEIN
Fine Arts Staff

Lately, there are people who have become so taken with the rhetoric of anti-apple pie, motherhood, and flags, that they have begun to lash out at and mock all sentiments and values, not questioning whether they are legitimately old-fashioned, or whether they are universally accepted ones that happened to be cherished by our fathers and will be revered by our children.

Love Story has been criticized for what some have called "mushy, cliched triteness" This description is adequate for plastic critics, but for a person who retains his humanness, the movie contains emotions and feelings of not only a white, middle-class romanticist tradition, but of conditions of all men.

The strength of Love Story lies in its perfection of cliche, not only the contextual cliche, but the production one.

If the WASPishness of Oliver Barrett III, the SOB, seems overdone, if the sarcastic witticisms of the Cliffie, Cavilieri, are too perfect, if Ryan O'Neal's Preppie is a bit too Hahvahd, if the "Preppies" and "Cliffies", "bitches" and "dammits" stereotype a passe vernacular, if, in a word, Love Story is just a little corny, it is because other movies manifest our society's cliches in terms of over-exaggeration: William Compton, in Joe, for example, doesn't merely exemplify the silent majority – he goes beyond and kills his daughter. Love Story is attacked as a mushy movie because it does not exaggerate; father and son are reconciled in the end, Jenny and Oliver appreciate the niceties of Central Park West, Oliver doesn't break into Tiffanies to steal money for the hospital, no one commits the ultimate sin against the establishment by turning on. Arthur Hiller, the director, steadfastly refuses to use any exaggerated shock or surprise, no slow-motion death scenes, no sensational sex scenes; he relies solely on his ability to make the audience identify with his cliche of life, love, and death.

"Cert's is a breath mint."

Rather than have the camera identify with solely one character, Hiller leaves his protagonists from time to time and lingers on the aftermath of scenes. When Oliver storms out of Dean Thompson's office or stalks out on his father, or when Oliver's roommate complains, the audience remains with the secondary character for a few seconds. Given this momentary breather to mull over events, the viewer projects himself into the situation. The result is empathy: "How do I feel about it?"

The unabashed traditional use of focus and lighting also contributes to Hiller's cliche. Just as the slow-motion camera has become the "tried- but-true" technique for violent death scenes, so Hiller capitalizes on dimly-lit hospital rooms, communication by facial gesture, aerial panoramas of Boston's Northeast Expressway, and a background theme played at the right dramatic moments.

Ryan O'Neal was a perfect Oliver Barrett IV, if only because he was so typical of what a law student jock looks like. I would have preferred to see someone like Liza Minelli or an anglicized Sophia Loren play Jennifer, not because Ali MacGraw gave a bad performance (indeed, in places, especially in the last half-hour of the movie, she was truly excellent), but because Ali MacGraw is too lanky and has too much of a cultured accent to stereotype the daughter of an Italian banker on scholarship ideally. (Indeed, because of her stylish, but emaciated figure, she looked more ill at the beginning of the movie than on her death bed.)

Love Story will either be adored or despised, depending on whether or not one believes that a man should be allowed to cry, and a woman to hold a door open for a man, and whether or not one believes that there is such a thing as "Love", or whether there are only "meaningful relationships". It could have been a stronger film, but in an age when Joes murder their daughters, Jean Brodies kill their pupils and Butch Cassidys and Captain Americas and Bonnies and Clydes and Ratzo Rizzos all die with social symbolism, Love Story is a refreshingly unheavy reminder that most people are but human.

SATF Budget Guidelines

The following guidelines, set by the Student Senate Budgets Committee, are to be followed by all RSO's, Class Governments, etc., in drawing up their group's budget:

1. The prime consideration of the Committee is reviewing each individual request will be based on whether the organization fulfills a useful role to the undergraduates of the University and whether it really requires the funds it is seeking.

2. Non-funding of any religious organization or any organization which is in any way affiliated with a religious organization.

3. Non-funding of any organization that is involved in blatant political activity (Under the Board of Trustees ruling, this means any organization which endorses candidates or works for the election of any candidate; organizations which are opposed to certain policies but do not endorse candidates are not included under this restriction)

4. . Non-funding of salaries and/or compensation for undergraduates who hold positions in any organization (either elected or appointed)

5. Non-funding of conferences or overnight off campus trips (off-campus conferences that is).

"Pollution Probes" Aid Ecology Study

Students learn about pollution by confrontation in a new environmental biology course. The main direction of this introductory course is not to remedy environmental stresses by creating specialists to untangle the mess, but rather to create informed citizens and teacher.

"Pollution probes" are a central feature of the course. UMass environmental scientist Haim Gunner, who originated the course this term, explains pollution probes this way: "We have asked the students to cluster themselves in groups and have asked each group to go out, identify some pollution problem in the community, diagnose it and present a brief in which a socially responsible remedy is proposed."

The first students to take the course started this past September and have just completed their pollution probes. Here are some of the results:

One group made a noise pollution survey at two UMass dormitories and came up with results that are being considered by University housing administrators.

Another did a depth study of solid waste disposal, rejected recycling as economically unfeasible and concluded that incineration is presently the only solution to the disposal problem.

Other groups did pollution probes in such areas as air, agricultural, chemical and thermal pollution. There are 11 groups in all and each has contributed a written report for the Department of Environmental Sciences pollution probe library housed in the Technical Guidance Center for Environmental Quality Control.

Another result of the course is a research project on the ecology of the Mill River in the north end of Amherst. A group in the class has submitted a research proposal to the National Science Foundation on the changing river ecology under the effects of pollution. If funded, the students will carry out the project this summer.

The pollution probe aspect of the course is combined with regular lecture sessions, the whole designed to give the students what Dr. Gunner calls "a vocabulary of current environmental stress."

It is designed to work in two ways–as an introductory course for environmental specialists who will continue in more advanced study and as a course for the undergraduate who simply wants to know what environmental stress is all about. The pollution probes help students "confront the social realities and become very quickly aware that any kind of environmental change involves social choices," Dr. Gunner said.

Gymnasts Return To Action

By MICHAEL CUSACK
Staff Reporter

After a five week layoff, the UMass varsity gymnastics team will resume its schedule tomorrow night when it hosts Syracuse University, beginning at 7:30 p.m. in the Boyden Auxiliary Gym. The meet will be the first for UMass since they defeated Army last Dec. 19.

The Redmen defeated Syracuse last year, 149.8-96.5, but tomorrow's meet promises to be a closer encounter. This year, Orangemen coach Paul Romeo has a stronger squad which boasts several outstanding specialists.

Syracuse's Tony DeSteffeno, an outstanding sidehorse competitor, has been a finalist in the Eastern Championships for the past two years. George Salter, Syracuse's top ring man, finished third in the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastic League Championships last year, and qualified for the NCAA Championships.

These performers, along with all-around men Pat MacDonald and Gary Cushman will provide an experienced nucleus for the improved Syracuse squad.

The undefeated Redmen will be seeking their fourth straight victory. With several seasoned gymnasts becoming eligible this semester, the squad should prove to be the strongest yet. Steve Cary, an outstanding competitor, will be returning on parallel bars and long horse, while John Walsh will become the second specialist on sidehorse. Co-captain Scott Stover, who was out first semester with a knee injury, will be competing on the high bar. His return should add considerable strength to this event. The rest of the lineup will be basically the same one Coach Erik Kjeldsen has used thus far.

In the floor exercise event, Jack Berner and John Calabria will be the specialists representing the Redmen. Both have been consistent performers all season.

The sidehorse event will be led by senior Rick Riley, who has been one of the top scorers for the Redmen all year. Walsh will be the other specialist.

The specialists in the still rings event will be Jay Aronstein and Danny Spier. Though only sophomores, both have shown their capability in the past.

Dave Genest and Cary will be competing as specialists in the parallel bars event, which should prove to be a strong event for the Redmen.

Bob Henry and Cary will represent the Redmen as specialists in the longhorse vault.

Tom Myslicki and Scott Stover will compete for the squad as specialists in the horizontal bar event.

In the all-around event, UMass will be represented by Norm Vexler, Tony Vacca, and Rich Seikunas.

The Redmen are looking for a strong team performance as they prepare for the all-important Penn State meet next weekend, at Penn. A strong showing tomorrow night will give the squad a boost in morale as one of the highlight meets of the season draws near.

Due to the performance of the Russian National Team, which will be at Penn State Feb. 6, the originally scheduled away meet between UMass and Penn State has been changed from Feb. 6 at 8:00 p.m. to Feb. 5 at 2:30 p.m.

Frosh Host Dartmouth

By STEVE FERBER
Staff Reporter

For the first time this season, the UMass frosh will be hosting a team they have met before. In tomorrow night's 5:30 p.m. contest, the Little Redmen will meet a Dartmouth freshmen team that they defeated in their second game of the season by a score of 64-52.

Led by Billy Raynor, who has scored over 40 points twice, the Dartmouth frosh hold a 7-2 mark, losing their other game to the Progidence freshmen. A pressing defense has been one of the keys to their winning ways, and the Dartmouth press was one of the main reasons that Dartmouth was the only team ever to lead the UMass frosh at the half.

In their first meeting in Hanover, Raynor was held to a season low of eight points, and Greg Hannah, his backcourt partner, provided the scoring spark with 23 points. On the UMass side of the slate, Peter Trow and Al Skinner led the Little Redmen, with Skinner doing an exceptional job off the boards.

Looking as if they've overcome the effects of their 34-day layoff, the Little Redmen will be looking to continue their winning ways against a Dartmouth squad that has come off of a resounding 93-49 win over the Holy Cross frosh. Foul trouble and turnovers are still plaguing the Little Redmen, and against the pressing Little Green these factors will be of the utmost importance.

Listen for the sounds of love...

Where do you hear them?

In a plea for help from someone who needs it? In a didlogue between students and the Establishment? In a talk session for a marriage-on-the-rocks? At a Catholic Mass conducted in an Episcopal Church?

You'd be surprised.

The sounds of love are everywhere — anyone can hear them. If they listen.

The Paulists listen. But, like everything in life, the things that matter most are the hardest.

Wrestlers At Yale For "Second Season"

By BOB GANLEY
Staff Reporter

The UMass wrestling team begins its "second season" tomorrow when it travels to New Haven to meet Yale University. The Redmen haven't wrestled in about forty days and it has hurt them in more ways than one.

Normally a forty day layoff would hurt the performance of any team, but it especially hurts wrestlers. Each one must keep his weight down during the long break and this has caused some lineup changes for the Redmen.

The layoff also cost the Redmen the number one New England ranking. In early January, the 5-1 Redmen were ranked number one, but due to the long layoff, they are presently ranked behind undefeated New Hampshire. Brown is ranked third and Springfield fourth and UMass has a chance to climb back on top with wins over Yale tomorrow and Springfield at home on Tuesday.

Yale is a fairly strong outfit and may give the Redmen trouble. The Eli tied Springfield, 17-17 on Tuesday, and UMass coach Homer Barr describes Yalc as being consistently strong all the way down the line. He has made several lineup changes due to weight problems and injuries. Dave Amato will wrestle at 118, Dave Reynolds at 126, Sheldon Goldberg has moved down to his normal weight at 134 as has Clay Jester at 142.

Brian Urquhart is at 150, sophomore Steve Del-Maestro is making his varsity debut at 158, flu-ridden Tom Young is at 167, Mike Brauner is at 177, George Zguris is at 190 and Carl Dambman at unlimited. Barr is hoping that Young and Brauner will be able to move down a weight for the Springfield meet with Ed Carlsson moving in at 177.

The Redmen have not lost in New England for nearly a year and will have a chance to avenge that last loss in the Springfield meet. But first the Redmen must get past Yale. Barr said "We're not in great shape yet, but we're in good spirit" and he hopes the second season starts out as well as the first one did, when the Redmen beat Tufts, 42-0, way back on December 5th.

Back In Action...
Pucksters On Ice At Colby

The UMass hockey team, undefeated, and currently ranked number one in Division II standings, travels to Waterville, Maine hoping to make the Colby Huskies its eighth straight victim of the season tomorrow night. The Redmen have not played a scheduled game in 43 days, their last contest a victory over Norwich University, December 18th, at Orr Rink.

The next Redman home game won't be until February 10, when they face the Huskies of UConn.

New Face Joins Redman Lineup

By MARK VOGLER
Staff Reporter

Chances are that he won't receive the red carpet treatment that adorned him at Tennessee. But one thing's for sure. If transfer student Tom McLaughlin stacks up to what the UMass athletic department estimates, he'll certainly incite a warm welcome from the frantic fans who fill Curry Hicks Cage. And that, my friends, is equal to any southern basketball reception.

McLaughlin, a sophomore who stands at 6'4, becomes eligible to play for the Redmen this semester. A year ago he paced the Tennessee freshmen club in scoring, averaging better than 17 points per outing. In recognition for his all-around ability as the team's top performer, he was feted with the Blue Chip award.

However, due to transportation costs and contributing circumstances, the Bronx native was prompted to reconsider his educational plans. In so doing he preferred a school much closer to home. Among the eastern colleges that he placed an immediate interest in was UMass.

Coach Jack Leaman reported that McLaughlin was recommended to him by Holy Cross mentor Jack Donohue who was being assisted by Tom's brother Frank at the time. It has been the Crusaders' policy not to accept transfer students. McLaughlin visited UMass, took a liking to its campus, and decided to transfer. Now he's content to stay where he is and seek a well-rounded college education.

The newcomer noted how his former college just about bent over backwards in convincing him that it was the right place to go. The prepaid airplane trip to Tennessee and, of course, the weekend stay on campus, compliments of the college, was nice in itself. Being swarmed at the ramp by photographers with Chicago Bulls star Tom Boerwinkle as an escort further spiced the occasion. But things were a bit overdone when he was granted complete weekend rights to a 1968 Toranodo, supplemented by an attractive prearranged date--not to mention the billboard posting "Welcome Tom" greetings and then the television interview that followed.

Tom best recalls: "It's like nothing that happens in the east. It just goes to show how much emphasis they put on sports. I was really awed by all of this, but as far as I'm concerned they take it much too seriously.

Before, I thought that basketball was the only thing I was going to do in life. But now, I've laid it up and have begun to realize that there are other things of greater importance which should be stressed."

Leaman says that McLaughlin's size will enable him to play both the front and the backcourt.

"He's a very fine basketball player," asserted the coach. "We figure and hope that he'll make a major contribution to our squad second semester. He can defend, rebound, and shoot with considerable proficiency--so he will definitely add something to the defense of our New England championship."

"I think the type of young man he is both on and off the court, he'll be a definite asset to our program. And anybody who works as hard as Tommy does has to be successful in whatever he pursues."

Asked a month ago whether he foresaw a possible starting berth for McLaughlin in the Redman line-up, Leaman replied: "I'd say it would depend entirely upon how the team is playing. Right now it would be mighty tough to break into the starting team. But who's to say how things will be like a month or so from now. I think he has the talent to presently help us out as either a starter or substitute. But it's tough to answer. We'll just have to wait and see how things are going in January."

McLaughlin finds the atmosphere at UMass more appealing than he had experienced as a student-athlete elsewhere: "The main thing I really like at UMass is that I don't have all that pressure on me that was at Tennessee and high school--scoring points, grabbing rebounds, being the all-

Tom McLaughlin

American boy. It's given me time to think where I'm going and what I'm going to do in life."

One thing that continually bothers Tom is the negative attitude of the fans towards the official. Refering to the AIC game, which the Redmen won handily, McLaughlin looked back on a common incident. "We were heading toward the locker room at half time and the officials were walking behind me. This one kid chased after them, screaming in retaliation for Julius Erving's four fouls. I stopped and told the kid to leave the refs alone, that these guys are just doing their jobs and are liable to make mistakes."

"I feel this one instance just goes to show that officials and athletes are human. They're not machines and they're going to make mistakes. You just have to accept them for what they are."

The youngest in a family of male athletes, Tom, just as his three brothers before him, as a schoolboy standout in basketball at Fordham Prep. Likewise, he attended college on an athletic scholarship.

Walter, the elder of the McLaughlin brothers and now 38, holds the distinction of having quarterbacked Fordham's last grid outfit. Vince Lombardi was the backfield coach of that team.

A tragic automobile accident took the life of Jackie McLaughlin who as a freshman for St. Louis University, had a bright hoop future on the horizon at the age of 18 (1955). During the same season head coach Ed Hickey had manuvered St. Louis into the national top ten rankings.

Franky, a 23-year old Fordham alumnus (1968), had pro possibilities and was drafted by the New York Knicks of the NBA. But after the 6'3 captain had guided his mates through a 17-9 campaign and into the NIT, he decided to hang up the sneakers and get involved in the coaching circle. He is presently an assistant coach at Fordham.

Their dad's brother, Albert, a NYU grad whose pastime bag was baseball, played with Lou Gerigh in the Yankee organization.

McLaughlin becomes eligible today and will be available for action as the Redmen take on Northeastern at the Cage tomorrow night.

Redmen Host Tough NU Five

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

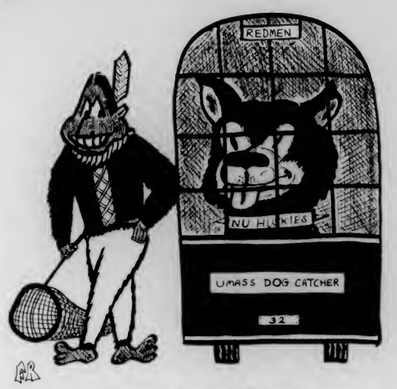
After dropping consecutive games to top teams, the UMass basketball team faces another test tomorrow evening at the Cage when it entertains the Huskies of Northeastern at 7:30 p.m. The Redmen will be attempting to get back on the winning track after disappointing losses to Providence and Fordham. For the Huskies, the game will present an opportunity to revenge last year's 90-62 thrashing at the Cage.

Northeastern may well be the surprise team in New England. Relying mainly on Boston area talent, Coach Dick Dukeshire, one of the most successful coaches in the area, has put together a well-disciplined, hard-nosed unit which can give any team trouble.

At the time of this writing, the Huskies stand at 10-2 with a school record often consecutive victories after opening losses to Boston College and Boston University. Since that time, Northeastern has run roughshod over its opposition and among its accomplishments is the Scranton Holiday Tournament championship.

The main difficulty that Dukeshire faces is the problem of many college basketball teams these days, lack of height. The tallest Husky starter is only 6'4 but this hasn't seemed to bother the team thus far. In its first twelve games, Northeastern holds an unbelievable 456-288 rebound advantage over its opponents. The Huskies also rank fifth in the country in team defense, limiting their opposition to only 52 points per game.

In Northeastern's disciplined style, the Huskies only average 52 shots per game. However, they have converted on 51% of these which is pretty good for any ball club.



Dukeshire emphasizes hustle, team play and aggressiveness and generally employs nine or ten men trying to keep his team fresh and tire out the opposition. This strategy has proven successful over the years for Dukeshire who is in his thirteenth season.

Among the starting five players for the Huskies will probably be captain Kevin Shea, 6'4, Jim Moxley, 6'4, Bill Moore, 6'2, Jack Maheras, 6'2, and Paul McDonough, 6'4. Shea is the floor leader on the team while Moxley is the best shooter. Individually, though, the Huskies aren't especially frightening. As a team they can be murder.

Joe Lawler, 6'7, Jack Niven, 6'3, Stu LaFramboise, 6'5, and Mark Jellison, 6'2, will all probably see plenty of action against the Redmen. In fact, every Husky player could get into the game. That's the way Dukeshire likes to play it.

Last night, the Huskies battled the No. 6 small college team in the country, Assumption. In case you missed it, Assumption bombed Holy Cross on Saturday. So the next two games are big ones for Northeastern, a team which has the same goals as UMass, namely a No. 1 in NE rating and an NIT bid.

With these things in mind, Saturday evening's contest shapes up as an important battle for both clubs.

Pats Pick Plunkett

NEW YORK (AP) - The Boston Patriots said Thursday they would not trade Stanford quarterback Jim Plunkett their No. 1 pick in the National Football League draft but did not rule out a deal for their other quarterbacks, Joe Kapp and Mike Taliaferro.

Billy Sullivan, president of the Patriots, said the club turned down 17 offers for the No. 1 pick, the last one just five minutes before the start of the draft.

He declined to say who made the last offer but said it was "one of the better clubs talent wise" and "wasn't too much of a revision from their previous offer."

Plunkett, who had expressed a desire to play with a West Coast team, said "it will be great to play with Boston."

The Heisman Trophy winner heard the news of his No. 1 selection at the Downtown Athletic Club where he received the trophy on Dec. 3. The draft was at a midtown hotel.

"I feel honored to be picked first," the beaming quarterback said. "I just feel great about it."

Sullivan said the Patriots' only untouchables were Plunkett and Phil Olsen, last year's first round pick from Utah State who missed the entire season with an injury.

Sullivan said the decision to draft Plunkett was made by Coach John Mazur, and the quarterback's brilliant play in the Rose Bowl against Ohio State was a key factor in the decision. Plunkett completed 20 of 30 passes for 265 yards in Stanford's 27-17 victory over Ohio State.

"Before the Rose Bowl we felt our best bet was a trade to strengthen our team at several positions," said Sullivan, noting the Patriots need help at linebacker, tight end, cornerback, wide receiver and possibly defensive end.

Trackmen Return To Action At B.A.A. Meet In Boston

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

Prior to intersession the UMass track team had its difficulties in scoring points in the middle and long distance events with any degree of consistency in its first two dual meets. With a long lay-off from the rigors of dual meet competition ahead the competitors in these events set as their objective improvement in their performances.

As the practices became more strenuous the results began to pay off as in successive weekends Redmen middle and long distance runners set a four mile relay record at the United States Track and Field Federation meet at Dartmouth and won five straight heats in the 1000 yard run at the Yale Invitational Practice meet against some of the top performers from the New England and Greater New York City area.

With these results, the objective has hopefully been reached and tomorrow night the Redman trackster will put their improvement on the line in the B.A.A. games at the Boston Garden.

Each year many of the individual performers in the country and the best college teams in the region come to the Garden to put on one of the best indoor meets in the country. This event is also used as a qualifying meet for the K. of C. meet next Saturday at Madison Square Garden.

Coach Ken O'Brien is hoping to have his improved mile and two mile relay teams qualify along with some individuals who will be competing in the field events.

Jerry Spellman, who makes his return to UMass track tomorrow evening after a semester of student teaching will run the lead-off leg in the mile relay. He'll be followed in order by Steve Levine, who has turned in the fastest relay split times on the team, Al Mangan, and freshman Mike Teasdale.

The two mile relay will feature John Maloney, who set a freshman 1000 yard record at Yale, running lead off, followed by distance aces, Ron Wayne and Larry Paulson, with Dave Evans, fully recovered from an early season injury, running the anchor leg.

Between Maloney, Wayne and Paulson, during intersession, they won four 1000 yard races and set one school record and one meet record.

In individual field competition Jim Graves and Bill Landry will be in the hurdle field. It was last year in this same meet that Graves gave first notice of his excellence in this event as he went to the semi-finals.

Ron Harris and Tony Pendleton carry the Redman colors in one of the fastest 50 yard dash fields in recent years.

Ed Shaughnessey will be competing in the high and long jump events, in which he placed last year. He'll be joined in the high jump by Steve Crimmins and in the long jump by Dick Dyer who has been the best UMass performer in this event this season.

In the shot put and weight throw UMass will be represented by Eddie Arcaro and Barney Schneider. Arcaro is rounding into the shape that made him one of the best collegiate weightmen in New England last year.

So with their improvement on the line and a chance for both achievement at the B.A.A. and a place in the K. of C. field next weekend UMass performers should make themselves known in tomorrow night's meet.

Buffalo swapped Bill Enyart, a running back, and a tenth round pick to Oakland for Alvin Wyatt, a defensive back and a third round choice.

Pena Selected By Browns

It came as little surprise yesterday when it was announced that UMass football star Bob Pena had been drafted by the National Football League in its annual draft. The 6'2, 240-pound guard was selected in the fourth round by the Cleveland Browns of the American Football Conference and was the second player in New England picked. Pena is a resident of West Falmouth and is a member of Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity.

Tabbed by former coach Vic Fusia as "the best guard in the East", Pena let few people down in his performances last season. He was an All-Yankee Conference selection as well as being named to many All-New England and All-East squads. He could not be reached for comment last night.

The first NE player selected was Boston College running back Fred Willis who set numerous school and New England records in his career. The Natick native was also picked in the fourth round by an AFC team, namely the Cincinnati Bengals.

Also drafted in the fourth round from New England was another Yankee Conference star, Vin Clements of UConn. The 6'3, 205 pound running back was nabbed by the Minnesota Vikings.

Frosh Lose, 61-58

BOSTON-Employing a full court press, the Boston University freshman basketball team forced the UMass frosh into several turnovers late in the game to salvage a 61-58 victory last night. The game, which was played at BU's Sargent Gymnasium, was UMass' first loss of the year against seven wins.

BU led most of the way until with 15 minutes left in the game UMass center John Olsen put the Little Redmen ahead with a free throw 38-37. With 13:21 left, UMass was dealt a crucial blow as Al Skinner fouled out of the game.

At this point BU bugged UMass into turnover after turnover with a pesty full-court press, and with 7:56 to go BU regained the lead, 49-48. The UMass frosh regained the lead, 52-50 at 6:39 on a lay-up by Art Levine. But they could not hold the ball and BU went ahead to stay with two minutes left, 5-56.

Health Services: Feast or Famine

Student Poll Initiates Change

(Editor's Note-This article is the first of a five-part series compiled by Barry Averill, Assistant Director of the UMass Health Services. The series deals with recent changes in the Health Service practices prompted by student surveys over the past two years.)

By BARRY AVERILL
Special to the Collegian

"Why does it take so long to see a doctor in this place?" "Why can't patients come through here in a steadier flow--it's either feast or famine." Last year these and other questions were common on the part of both students and physicians.

The unhappiness with the system led to a novel approach to responding to the medical needs of the student population. Faced with having to provide care for 19,000 students in a building designed for 10,000, the Health Services staff turned to the academic departments of Sociology and Industrial Engineering to solve the waiting time problem.

The project began with analysis of returns from student questionnaires in December 1968 and February 1970, which asked students about their perceptions of the problem. In response to the questionnaires, minor changes were made in September 1969, but the more significant changes came about as a result of the systems study.

Using data from these studies and other analysis of patient use of Health Center, Professor Edward Rising of the Department of Industrial Engineering constructed a computer model of the operation. With this model different suggestions for scheduling physicians' time, arranging appointments, etc., could be tried and one selected which seemed to offer the best solution.

A novel feature of this study was an analysis of the feasibility of establishing a Nurse-Practitioner Clinic, under the direct supervision of a physician, in which many patients with minor problems, not necessarily requiring a physician's time, could be treated. Another innovation was the development of a computerized appointment system which would enhance the Health Services' ability to provide more scheduled patient visits.

Finally, there was thorough review of the criteria for satisfaction on the part of physicians involved in the medical care process, a project carried out through detailed interviews with each physician.

Those involved in the study, which began in the Spring of 1970, include, in addition to Professor Rising, Doctor Robert Gage, Director of the University Health Services; Barry Averill, Assistant Director; Doctor Thomas McBride, Assistant Director; Professor Eugene B. Piedmont and George Gross, Medical Sociologists; Robert Baron and Erik deBruijn, Industrial Engineering Graduate Students; Thaddeus T. Los, Associate Director of the Administrative Data Processing Center; and Jane Zapka, Health Educator. A critical ingredient was a high degree of cooperation of the medical and nursing staffs of the Health Services.

The infirmary will see changes as a result of the project to solve waiting time problems. (MDC photo by Steve Schmidt)

Following the study, a number of changes were put into operation during the fall of 1970. Probably most important was an improved scheduling strategy for physicians which was accomplished by varying the appointments in relation to the number of students expected to walk in seeking medical care. On days when more walk-ins were anticipated, fewer appointments were scheduled, and vice versa. This has helped to level off the number of students seeking medical attention at any time, reducing the severity of the peak periods when waiting times were consistently the longest.

The Nurse-Practitioner Clinic was established under the direct supervision of a physician. This clinic, staffed by four full-time nurses, provides high-quality service to a large number of the walk-in patients who come in each day without an appointment. This enables the other physicians to spend more time with patients with more complex medical problems.

Establishing the automated appointment system made it possible to make available up to fifty per cent more appointments than had been available previously.

In creasing the number of available appointments, increasing the time patients are able to spend with the physician, and enabling the Health Services to absorb a 10 per cent increase in outpatient activity within an already severely overcrowded facility have been immediate direct benefits of the systems study.

Even this success, however, is qualified, and the problem of long waiting times is not completely solved. Indeed, since peak periods of epidemic illness cannot be predicted, there may be periods when the waiting time is even worse than at present.

To increase patient satisfaction and decrease waiting time, Mr. Averill urges students to make appointments in advance as often as possible rather than taking a chance on walking in. The operating principle of the Health Services has remained unchanged throughout: to provide high-quality comprehensive health care, and to do this in a confidential and personal matter. Emphasis has been placed on reducing patient waiting time without increasing costs, primarily by using available personnel and facilities to best advantage.

In articles which follow, each of these changes will be explained in greater depth. Reactions to these changes, as well as other suggestions, are solicited from all students at any time.

Infirmary Visiting Hrs. Revised

The Health Service encourages patients to have visitors, especially in the case of prolonged confinement to the Infirmary. Students have requested longer hours for visiting. In response to student requests for longer visiting hours, the hours will be extended for the month of February. If this trial period is successful, it will be extended for the rest of the semester.

Visiting hours are:
Week days: 6:15 - 8:15 p.m.
Saturday and Sunday: 3:15 - 4:30 p.m.; 6:30 - 8:00 p.m.

"Focus" On McGovern's Campaign

Tonight at 10 P.M., WMUA's "Focus" series returns, with moderator Ken Mosakowski departing from his usual format of debate by controversial guest panelists.

The bulk of tonight's program will instead be devoted to commentary on the budding campaign of Senator George McGovern (D-South Dakota), who on January 18th announced his candidacy for the office of President of the United States.

The program will feature excerpts from some of the senator's major speeches on the Senate floor, and a comparison of McGovern's voting record with that of Senator Edmund Muskie of Maine, who is also a leading contender for the Democratic Presidential nomination in 1972.

The program will conclude with a brief segment of commentary on President Nixon's stated proposal to "end the draft" by mid-1973, as announced last week.

Those students with draft lottery numbers below 195 are especially invited to tune in tonight at 91.1 FM.

UMass History Profs. Have Works Published

Four from the UMass history department have had new books published.

They include Professor Archibald R. Lewis, "The Islamic World and the West--A.D. 622-1492" by Wiley; and Professor Lewis U. Hanke, "Aristotle and the American Indians," reprinted in paperback by the Indiana University Press.

In addition, Richard H. Minear, associate professor, is the author of "Japanese Tradition and Western Law," published by the Harvard University Press, and Milton Cantor, associate professor, is the author of "Max Eastman," published by Thwayne. Dr. Cantor is editor of a second book, "Black Labor in America," published by Negro Universities Press.

Professor Robert A. Potash of the history department has been recognized by the Conference on Latin American History for his book, "The Army and Politics in Argentina, 1928-1945." He received honorable mention in the Herbert E. Bolton Prize competition.

Five history department faculty members participated in the annual meeting of the American Historical Association in Boston. Professor George Kirk and Associate Professor Mario dePillis chaired a session, Professor Robert McNeal and Assistant Professor Jane Loy presented papers, and Professor Dean Albertson was commentator at a session.

Study On Smaller Dorms Planned

By ANNE STADNICKI
Staff Reporter

The Board of Trustees voted to conduct a feasibility study for a program which would provide housing for students in small capacity residence halls by the fall of 1972, at the monthly Board meeting last Friday at the Statler-Hilton in Boston.

Highlighting the meeting were fee reductions for Stockbridge students and the parking garage, a first public introduction of the new Vice-Chancellor, and a trustee resignation.

The proposed additional residence halls are based on the Sasaki Housing Survey, which was informally studied by the Board at the special meeting in Hyannis. Six hundred students would be housed in dorms built to contain 50 students each.

Completion of the dorms within an 18 month period would be possible. The flexible program would allow more time for future long-range housing needs to be studied in more detail.

Chancellor Oswald Tippo introduced Thomas B. Campion for the first time at the meeting. Campion was recently appointed Vice-Chancellor for Administrative Services.

The resignation of Louis Martin Lyons of Cambridge opened a position on the Board of Trustees. Appreciation for his contributions was expressed by the Board.

Effective February 8, 1971, the Board approved decreasing the parking fee at the Campus Center garage to .10 per hour from the previous rate of .25. On a long term basis students will be able to park for $10.00 per month.

Receipts have been only 10% of expectations, the Chancellor said, after a review of the first 100 days of operation. The Board had suggested the downward revision of the daily rate in the garage.

A reduction of the physical education fee for Stockbridge students was also voted. The fee was set at $10.00, as compared to the customary $20.00, because these are two year students.

Sabbatical leave recommendations for UMass Amherst and Boston were approved at the meeting.

Of 106 recommendations for promotions at Amherst, 86 were approved, also. Most rejections were postponements, rather, on the basis of premature submission, according to Provost Gluckstern.

The Board passed Selective Merit Increments, 1971, for the Amherst Boston and Worcester campuses.

Guidelines used in setting the salary adjustments were "service of one and one-half years before consideration, a ceiling of $1600. in most cases, and a 'tapping off' of certain administrative salaries."

There was a consensus among the committee members that inflationary factors had perhaps affected the academic salary profile.

The appointment of Harvey Swados as professor of English was approved also.

Approval was given to John W. Denison who was named director of the Stockbridge School and assistant dean of the College of Agriculture.

Concern was expressed by the Board about the academic progress of the first-year medical students at Worcester. Also at Worcester, the trustees approved the appointment of Dr. Donald Tipper as Professor and Chairman of the Department of Microbiology.

Recommendations for recipients of honorary degrees at graduation were approved by the trustees but no names were released.

It was noted that the late approval was due to the more complicated system and more comprehensive canvas employed this year. (Students were involved in the choosing for the first time this year.)

President Wood said that the Trustees did not merely rubber stamp the suggestions, but really studied the nominations carefully.

Phase II of the plans for the Graduate Research Center was voted upon at the meeting. The proposed change for the two towers remaining to be built to function primarily as office space was approved.

Plans for addition to the Infirmary in Amherst and the acquisition of the Post Office Building in Worcester were also approved.

Frederick S. Troy, Chairman of the Trustee Committee on Faculty and Educational policy, proposed a review of several specific aspects of the current academic policies at UMass and "how they are working." He said there had been a breakdown in essential communication at some levels.

The Board also approved a contract with the U.S. Forest Service to establish the Environmental Forestry Research Center at the UMass Amherst campus. It will focus on forestry research primarily in relation to people and the environment rather than wood production aspects.

Eventual plans call for the erection of a Forest Service building, but the research unit will be housed at first in Flint Laboratory.

Trustee Lyons Leaves Board At Age 73

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Asst. News Editor

Louis M. Lyons, one of the most respected journalists in the Boston Area, will step down from the Board of Trustees February 22 at the age of 73, to allow for what he calls a "freshening of the blood."

"I hope that in my place a more contempory member will be placed," he said with firm but gentle conviction.

Trustee Lyons has nearly completed his seven year term on the UMass Board of Trustees. He was appointd by Gov. Peabody at just about the same time he resigned as curator of Harvard University's Nieman Foundation for journalism. The well known Lyons will continue to anchor WGBH-Boston's nightly news commentary.

During his term as the Board of Trustees, Lyons was a friend of the Student at UMass. He pushed for Co-Ed dorms and acted as a "liason" between the Board and students while serving as Chairman of the Board's Student Life Sub-committee.

"I tried to find out what the students had in mind and communicate it to the Board" explained Lyons in an interview the day after the Board of Trustees presented him with a citation for "distinguished service," followed by standing applause by his fellow Trustees with whom he shared "good fellowship and consideration" for some of the most active years UMass Trustees have ever faced.

"I have a great deal of confidence in the Board and in the future of the University," commented Lyons, praising the "excellent" President Wood, the individual Chancellors and the "autonomous" development of the separate campuses.

Trustee Lyons forsees a tuition increase up to $400.00 for in-state student; $6-700.00 for Graduate students and "a little bit more" than that for out of staters.

"No question that there is increasing pressure to move tuition up.." said Lyons adding that the present mood would not approve a tuition hike which "would prevent anyone from getting an education."

Lyons continued saying that he felt Senate President Harrington's bill to increase tuition sharply didn't have the "support" to pass. He did point out that Edward Moore, Chairman of the State Board of Higher Education, also, has sided with those who wouldn't mind seeing the tuition for UMass "substantially higher."

Concerning the relationship of the Trustees to the separate campuses Lyons warned that "the Trustees should not intervene in Administration" affairs but that the Board should "try to understand what is going on" in matters which come to the Boards attention.

In the future, Lyons forsees the eventual appropriation of funds for a University Law School. He would like to see continued development and strengthening of the State and Community College system.

There have not been any names mentioned by either the Governor or University advisors as to who will replace Trustee Lyons. Later in the year, Trustee Gordon will also step down from his seven year term. If Louis Lyons has any hesitations at all about the Trustees they lie in his apprehension about the age of many members of the Board. He regrets not being able to attend the next meeting when the Freshmen in co-ed dorms issue will be re-considered. But he has confidence in the present Chairman of the Student Life Sub-committee, Mrs. Rowland, who, by his own version, he "persuaded" to take over the position.

Ho Chi Minh Trail Hit Hard

SAIGON (AP)-The U.S. Air Force sent as many as 30 B52 Stratofortresses over the Ho Chi Minh Trail in southern Laos yesterday with up to 900 tons of bombs to drop on major North Vietnamese supply points.

The sustained aerial campaign, now in its 114th day, showed no signs of letting up. The Trail is the No. 1 objective of the U.S. Command, since other routes to South Vietnam are closed to Hanoi's supply convoys.

Between 300 and 400 smaller combat planes joined the eight engine B52s in around the clock raids on the 200 mile network of jungle trails.

Secretary of State William P. Rogers told a Washington news conference Friday that North Vietnam was building up large supply stockpiles in the southern Panhandle of Laos, apparently for attacking South Vietnam.

But Western military sources in Vientiane, Laos' capital, reported Sunday that they know of no extraordinary North Vietnamese buildup in the Panhandle.

"We have noted an increase," one Western military officer said, "but it's no bigger than we expect in the dry season." The informants said reports of more than 50,000 North Vietnamese soldiers in southern Laos are "grossly exaggerated." American intelligence estimates that there are between 40,000 and 50,000 North Vietnamese in Laos. But the sources said no more than half are in the southern region bordering Cambodia and South Vietnam.

North Vietnam accused the United States of having bombed villages north of the 17th Parallel just Monday through Friday.

A communique by the North Vietnam government said that "during five continuous days, from Jan. 25 to Jan. 29, 1971, the American imperialists have sent planes of various types, including B52's, to drop explosive and pellet bombs over the village of Huong Lap, north of the 17th Parallel, in the demilitarized zone." The zone divides North and South Vietnam.

The communique also said that "the American Air Force made indiscriminate bombings over a number of communities in Quang Binh Province on Jan. 27."

Quang Binh Province is 55 miles north of the 17th Parallel.

...As Congress Ponders Use Of Cooper Church Act

WASHINGTON (AP)-Hints of expanded U.S. action-possibly air support of a South Vietnamese drive into Laos-coincides with congressional realization of the inherent limitations of restrictions voted on the American role in Cambodia.

But backers of the month old Cooper-Church amendment, conscious of its limitations, are counting on public opinion to prevent Cambodia-or Laos- from turning into a new American Vietnam.

So does the Nixon administration, even as it strives to take the maximum military action throughout Indochina within the Cooper Church limits.

Still there is talk of an effort to expand the amendment that forbids the use of U.S. ground combat troops or military advisers in Cambodia.

Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield said Saturday the expanded U.S. role in Laos and Cambodia would increase chances of passage for the McGovern Hatfield amendment to pull all U.S. forces out of Indochina by Dec. 31. It lost 55 to 39 last year.

Secretary of State William P. Rogers, more than any other administration official, has cited the role of public opinion-and the fear of a negative domestic reaction surpassing last spring's furor over Cambodia-in explaing why the administration won't send combat troops into Cambodia.

"The political imperatives are such that this administration can't get involved this way-because we wouldn't have popular support, because we wouldn't have congressional support," Rogers told the Foreign Relations Committee in December. He was explaining why the administration would not repeat May's dispatch of U.S. ground troops into Cambodia.

This week, after secret testimony to committee members worried about the implications of expanded U.S. air action in Cambodia, Rogers told reporters a new Vietnam there is impossible.

Rogers scotched also, at least for now, the suggestion by Sen. John C. Stennis, D Miss., that the Cooper Church Restrictions might have to be eased.

Apollo 14 Launched Docking Hitch Solved

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP)-Three Americans rocketed out of earth orbit yesterday, encountered and overcame a problem that threatened to wreck the mission, and streaked toward the moon on another search for lunar secrets.

Some 3 1/2 hours into the flight, trouble developed as the command ship attempted to link up with the lunar lander, carried in its third rocket stage.

The capture latches failed to work properly and the ships were unable to lock together.

Astronaut Stuart Roosa struggled with the problem at the command ship controls while Apollo 14 commander Alan B. Shepard Jr. and lunar module pilot Edgar D. Mitchell watched quietly.

NASA officials said the three astronauts were in no immediate danger.

"We better back out of here and think about this one," Roosa said after the first docking try failed.

On the second try, Rossa reported, "Okay, Houston, it held for four seconds and it didn't stay."

"We're unable to get a capture," said Mitchell.

If the space craft could not be docked together, Shepard and Mitchell would not be able to fly the lunar module to a landing on the moon. An alternate mission, however, would call for the astronauts to conduct scientific experiments from orbit of the moon.

Normally after the combined spacecraft are on their way to the moon, the astronauts separate the command and service module, turn around and poke the nose of the ship into the lunar module. The two craft must dock for the lunar module to be pulled from its nest in the S4B.

The capture latches are mounted in a probe head and should engage automatically when the probe head centers in the lunar module receiving apparatus.

Engineers at Mission Control immediately started studying the problem. Experts working next door to Mission Control began studying methods of linking the two craft.

Mission Control said an alternate solution to achieve the linking up would be to retract a probe, bypassing the capture latches, and then attempt to engage the "docking latches."

The capture latches-a preliminary securing action-were the problem. Only 3 of 12 docking latches would need to be engaged to effect docking.

"I got a hard dock," said astronaut Stuart A. Roosa when the command module and the lunar lander finally linked up firmly on the fifth try. The report brought cheers in Mission Control. Had the ships been unable to dock, there would have been no moon landing.

The astronauts-Roosa, Alan B. Shepard Jr. and Edgar D. Mitchell-at one point had suggested the possibility of solving the docking problem by bringing the docking probe into the spacecraft for repairs. This would have required them to don space suits and go into the void of space.

"I'm sure you're thinking about the possibility of going hard suit, bringing the probe inside and look at it as we are," said Shepard.

Mission Control started analyzing the possibility of fixing the problem from outside the craft, but asked the astronauts to try docking one more time. Then, bypassing the balky probe, the linkup attempt worked.

Following instructions from Mission Control, Roosa retracted the probe which failed. He then inched forward and pointed the spaceship into the lunar module docking collar. The main docking hooks engaged and cheers rang out from space and from Mission Control.

Deficit Budget Aim Perking Up Economy

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon sent the new Congress Friday a record $229.2 billion spending budget for fiscal 1972, unveiling massive back to back deficits he said will fire up the nation's slow paced economy.

Casting aside his pre-election advocacy of budget balancing, Nixon wrapped his new spending program into a "full employment budget," pegging federal spending at the level of revenues which would be expectable in times of high properity.

The budget for the fiscal year that begins July 1 carries a red ink figure of $11.6 billion. Aside from that, Nixon disclosed the deficit for the current fiscal year will reach $18.6 billion, the second highest in a generation.

The heavier pace of federal spending enabled Nixon to step up proposed budgets for defense, health, welfare, antipollution programs, reorganization of the government, and his top priority plan for sharing federal revenue with state and local governments.

Budget receipts in 1972 were estimated at $217.6 billion, up $23.4 billion from the current year.

In presenting a budget aimed at expanding the economy, Nixon adopted an economic technique used-but not advertised-by some of his Democratic predecessors.

UMass Building Authority Given Housing Study Task

The UMass Building Authority will conduct a feasibility study to provide housing for 600 single students by the fall of 1972, following up the Board of Trustees' January 29th vote of approval.

John W. Haigis, chairman of the trustee committee on buildings and grounds, proposed the study, which is based on the Sasaki Housing Survey.

One concept to be studied will be of small residence halls with capacities of approximately 50 students each. The idea is to provide an opportunity for small-group cooperative living.

A survey of students last spring indicated that many preferences for housing would be served by such an arrangement.

This program takes into account projected housing needs as well as student preferences as expressed in the report.

The type of residence being proposed would be adaptable to cooperative living if this seemed desirable at any time in the future.

Cost objectives of the project will be approximately $6,100. per student, excluding costs for kitchen and dining facilities. Several alternatives to the dining facilities will be considered, including a kitchen and dining area in each of the 50-student houses.

The small size of the proposed dorms would permit them to be completed within an 18-month period, according to H.J. Littlefield, Director of Planning.

From the questionnaire submitted to students last spring, the UMass administration learned that many students are satisfied with their off-campus housing which features small-group, cooperative living with kitchen facilities available. The Trustees study request is an attempt to broaden the variety of housing options available to students on campus.

An advisory building committee of students and staff will participate and comment on the study to the administration.

Present student housing includes dormitories with mostly double rooms and dining in separate buildings, and the newest dormitory set-up of cluster – double and single rooms for five to eight students, a living room and a bath.

Nearly 100 Students Join NES Ranks This Semester

By BETH GOODELL
Staff Reporter

Campus leaders of Northeastern Educational Services (NES), a storefront tutoring service operated in Springfield, Thursday evening explained their program to nearly 100 students, registered them, and announced a change in their bus schedule.

Tutors returning from last semester, especially, should make note of the new location of the service's bus stop on campus. The bus will now be departing from the Peter Pan bus stop between the parking garage and Bowker Auditorium. Students can wait inside Bowker for the bus, where the bus driver will check to see if anyone is waiting. The bus, which will start operating Monday afternoon, leaves the University at 2:45 and 6:15.

Coordinators briefly explained the program to the students, most of whom are new to the service. They described the atmosphere of the four storefront centers in Springfield and told of the materials and funds available to students. Funds are included in the organization's budget for almost any materials or projects students might like to plan, according to the campus organizers.

Two sheets of instructions and suggestions were given to the prospective tutors to help them plan what and how they will teach the youngsters, to whom they are assigned on a one-to-one basis. Three orientation programs have also been scheduled to further guide students in relating to their tutees. They will be held on the Sunday evenings of February 7 and 21, and March 7, at 7:30 in Room 163 of the Campus Center.

Any student wanting modular credit through the School of Education for his tutoring must attend these three sessions. Five modular credits will be given for attending the orientation sessions, and 15 modular credits for the actual tutoring.

Names of the prospective tutors who signed up Thursday evening will be sent to the Springfield centers to be matched to names of tutees, according to the subject and age of student the tutor wants to help. Tutors should receive their assignments within two to four weeks. Before that, they can, if they desire, visit any of the storefront centers in Springfield.

NES operates on campus from an office in Room 104 of the Campus Center. Tutors should call there at 545-0575 if they cannot make it to Springfield on a day when they are supposed to be tutoring.

Security Meet Asked

"The results of numerous bilateral contacts which have already taken place show that sufficient prerequisites have been created for holding an all European conference and there are no reasons for delay in calling it or advancing any preliminary conditions," said a statement carried by the Soviet news agency Tass.

Hampden Restaurant Offers Atmosphere, Varied Menus

By LINDA A. BALICKI
Staff Reporter

As you walk in the playing of soft music and a cheerful greeting from a hostess as she brings you to your candlelit table assure you that you have arrived at UMass' newest weekend dining spot, the Hampden Restaurant.

A friendly, congenial atmosphere surrounds you as a student waitress takes your order and serves it with prompt and courteous speed. All around there is an aura of gracious, relaxed dining.

Originating from an idea by Richard Ellis, Manager of Hampden Dining Commons, the Hampden Restaurant is an attempt to provide University students with gracious though inexpensive alternative for weekend meals. Its use of student hostesses and student waitresses helps to give one a feeling of friendly welcome.

The menu, which is varied though complete, serves as another plus for the new eatery. Geared to satisfy a range of tastes, including that of a gourmet or a gourmet at heart, it is promptly and deliciously prepared to taste and specification.

As one leaves, one cannot help wondering why such an eating establishment of this variety has not been stated before on the UMass campus. The cheerful parting "Come again" is an invitation which will undoubtedly be accepted many times more by those who take the time and the opportunity to visit this delightful place.

Located on the second floor of the west side of Hamden Commons, the Hampden Restaurant is open from 11 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. and 5 to 8 p.m. Saturdays and Sundays.

The Bells Are Ringing

Yesterday was not a very good day, and while it is generally held that one's personal vendettas should not be bandied across an editorial page, the MDC is the only outlet suitable for recounting yesterday's horrors. Besides, I'm the managing editor.

Anyway, it began yesterday morning when I innocently got dressed and attempted to go into town to buy a newspaper. We live on the third floor of a D.H. Jones slum special, with only one staircase structurally semi-safe. Well, it seems the 2nd floor neighbors were in the process of moving a chair down the stairs and they blocked the staircase for 15 minutes.

This doesn't seem that upsetting in print, but it just set the tone for the rest of the day.

Once I finally got to the front door I found that the glass top of the metal stormdoor was broken. This especially bothered me because I didn't notice that it was broken until I put my hand through it.

But, this small problem aside, I walked out to find the driveway and back yard completely taken over by the motor division of Free University and its subsidiary, Roadarte. A giant silver bus (originally named "silverbus" by its owners) was anchored to the back of the house. And there, right out on the front lawn, blocking my car from the street, was the Roadarte van.

Free University, that loosely knit group of all purpose alternative culturettes, had taken by eminent domain my driveway. In their expressly non-linear fashion, they had communicated with me. They had made me understand that I would have to drive my car over a snow bank in order to get into town.

Finally, I limped into Augies, which is not the sanest of places on a Sunday morning. Therein, a ranking UMass administrator was munching on a Clark bar and buying a N. Y. Times, a Springfield Republican, and a Boston Sunday Advertiser. (He reads the Times for news, his wife likes the Republican's society pages, and he likes the Advertiser's comics).

Not to be outdone, I bought a Herald and a Globe. Reading these two newspapers left me with two lasting pieces of information.

1. Johnny Bucyk is the key to the Boston Bruins' power play, and
2. The U.S. is launching another moon shot today, which means that television viewers across the nation will have to put up with Cronkite, Reasoner and Vanocer interrupting their programs for the next week. There is little else significant about the event.

This series of events brought me into the early stages of the afternoon. My roomate and his friend were hungry. We decided to go to Bell's for lunch. (Cue the obit.)

Now, everybody knows why going to Bell's is a definition of masochism, why that restaurant (pardon the word) is something special. So it goes without saying that I did not enjoy either the reading of my number (five odie oh) or my meatball grinder.

But I have learned to tolerate this much in three and a half years. The one saving grace is the knowledge that my car could always wisk me away from Bell's in the nick of time. Yesterday, even this failed me.

My car wouldn't start. And I was marooned in front of Bell's. I called the Collegian office but they were too busy to pick me up. I finally got back, hoping that someone would just tow the damn thing before Mr. Bell would realize it had been ditched and before he served it to someone as a hamberg pizza.

That left me in the Collegian office, taking out my frustrations on a typewriter. The day would be finished off by working on today's MDC. So laugh, you've already paid for it.

Senator B. Arnold

WASHINGTON—The toughest thing Teddy Kennedy faces for the next two years is trying to figure out who voted for him and who didn't when he was defeated for Senate whip. The final count in a secret ballot was 31 votes for Byrd and 24 votes for Kennedy. Yet when reporters took a poll after the caucus, 26 senators said they had voted for Teddy. It's obvious that out of the 26, two senators were whistling Dixie.

The big question that will haunt Kennedy is who were the two senators who said they voted for him but didn't? While Teddy sits during the long Senate debates, his eyes will be searching, ever searching, trying to find a Judas on the Senate floor.

In the cloak room, the Senate dining room and even the washroom he will never know if the senator who hands him a towel had given him the Byrd.

When crucial votes come up on the floor and a colleague says, "Teddy, I voted for you for whip," how will Kennedy know he isn't talking to a Sen. Benedict Arnold?

One solution would be to make all 26 senators who said they had voted for Kennedy take a saliva test.

But the Senate is a club and the first rule is never to question another club member's word. If Teddy asked the 26 to swear they had written his name on the ballot, he would be questioning their integrity and that's one thing no senator wants to be questioned on.

Another solution would be for Kennedy to have a supper at his house for the 26 senators and wait to see which two senators kiss him on the cheek.

A third solution would be for Kennedy to offer amnesty to the two who secretly voted for Byrd, while professing to vote for him. He could announce that if they stepped forward and revealed themselves, he would forgive them, and take both of them along with him on his next trip to Paris.

Friends of Kennedy have tried to console him by telling him that the gap in how senators voted and how they said they voted, was really Sen. Byrd's problem. If Byrd got 31 votes and only 29 senators own up to having voted for him, two senators are playing both sides of the street. And how can you be a Senate whip if you can't get an honest count from your own party?

But at the moment this is small consolation to Teddy. Every time he attends a fund raising dinner for a Senate friend and watches him eat his chicken and peas, the only thought that will run through his head is "Did he or didn't he?" followed by "And if he didn't, why did he say he did?"

The worst part of Kennedy's defeat, after knowing that he was betrayed, is that everyone has said that this hurts his chances for being a presidential candidate in 1972. Since Teddy has vowed time and time again that he is not a candidate, it's impossible for him to deny that his loss has hurt his chances.

All he can say is "Since I am not a candidate for President, my chances for getting the nomination have not been affected by Sen. Byrd's victory.

"If I really wanted to be President, which I have repeatedly said I don't, then I certainly would not have let a junior senator from West Virginia beat me out of a position that everyone agrees has never really had any importance to someone who aspires for the highest office in the land."

But for the moment, all Sen. Kennedy can do is ask for a desk on the Senate floor which will guarantee that his back will be against the wall.

Rip-off

Earlier this month, Stewart L. Udall, the former Secretary of the Interior had a moment of "absent mindedness." On leaving a chain drugstore in the Washington suburb of McLean, Va., he paid for [illegible] but forgot to pay for [illegible]. Mr. Udall, who now practices law in Washington, was arrested and charged with shoplifting. Protests of "absent mindedness" to the arresting officer, store manager and a justice of the peace brought only replies of "It's out of the question." Last Thursday, Mr. [illegible] appeared in court to face trial, but his case was dismissed when higher chain store management overruled the local people and withdrew the charge. Said Mr. Udall, "Maybe I ought to patronize small stores where people know you."

The Policy of the Press

A crudely-letterd sign taped to the wall adjacent to a desk in the Collegian's business office warned: No Abortion Ads. Next to it, a reprint from the Minneapolis Tribune headlined "College Paper Suspended for Abortion Ad". No abortion ads is a policy of the student owned and operated paper of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

The Collegian is the most influential medium on campus. It is a monopoly, owned by the Student Government Association of more than 16,000 undergraduate students, legally supervised by a Publishing Board of faculty, students, and administrators, run by a core staff of approximately 25 to 35 unpaid students, 7 paid editors, and two full-time secretaries, and financed by the Student Activities Fee and advertisers. The Paper's policies are established by six students--the Board of Editors.

The Paper's policies. What, if any, are the responsibilities of a "free and responsible press" to its diverse and multitudinous owners and interested parties?

In the past years, the Collegian has been accused of being a laboratory for journalism majors, an informing medium, a tool of the administration, a catering service for special interest groups, and a politically biased paper (both left, middle, and right). People have said that it has spineless leadership, that it leads too much, that it has censorship, overpermissiveness, that it is not run by policy, but by personal whim. Members of the administration, faculty, students, and the taxpayers and Legislature of Massachusetts have attacked it and been attacked by it. Personalities have clashed within the Paper, individuals from the community and campus have complained of being slighted; at the same time, the Collegian has won awards and has been praised and thanked sincerely by individuals and groups who have benefitted from its services. Men have been injured by it and helped by it.

Like an amoeba, growing in a vast watery world, with its protoplasm and ectoplasm randomly circulating in an amorphous body, splitting once here and reproducing itself, spliced again by the microscopist's probe to have its vital juices spill out while the nucleus remains intact, so the Collegian has grown in an accelerated sprawl. It has tried to cater to its constituency without asking "which constituency?" and without rationally studying the needs and desires of that mythical body. Editorially, the explosive unthoughtout, un-planned growth has created questions of priorities: the printing of Art Buchwald and Herblock or students' letters, department and community notices that are or are not of general interest, local sports or national sports, 5 College events or better coverage of University programs, pinnings and engagements, cooperation with interest groups of the left, middle, and right.

New editors of the Collegian will be elected by the staff early this month. The questions they must answer are complex, and how well they are answered will influence the actions of all the University.

The first questions that will face the editors are those of overall goals and guidelines for a publicly owned paper. Policies for letters-to-the-editor, for news releases and for the use of the Paper's resources must not only be established, they must be articulated and publicized to the University and its community. The editors must decide who they are publishing for and to whom the Paper should be directed to--the taxpayers of Massachusetts, the student body, the administration and the Trustees (who ultimately approve the Student Activities Fee), the faculty.

While affirming new policies, the Collegian must encourage professionalism within itself--headlines which call the police "pigs", for example, are inflammatory and irresponsible.

As the Collegian is partially financed by a compulsory tax, it is incumbent upon the new editors to find out what the Paper's owners want. This might be done through a questionnaire. And the questions should not only ask what changes can be made in the Paper, but whether or not the Paper should even exist, at least in its present compulsory form.

The line between a free press and a controlled one, especially with a publicly financed press, is a misty one. Not only should it be responsive to its constituency, it should guard its independence and never abdicate it role as a leader.

The new editors must decide how much they want the Collegian to be an agent of constructive change. They must decide on whether or not there should be direct student and staff input in the formulation of policy. Most important, the new editors must decide whether or not the Collegian, the largest student daily in New England and the voice of the largest public school in the State, should take a lead in protecting freedom of the press. Last year, student papers of smaller schools were censored by their Administration and censured by the Legislature. Three years ago, UMass-Amherst's Yahoo was forced to cease publication. There has been continuing controversy on the use of obscenities in the Paper. And, as noted before, the current illegality of abortion ads is not challenged. The new editors must either take a stand for freedom of the press, or they must publicize their rules of censorshhip and explain them to the public.

Learning and "Guts"

To the editor:

How many of we Ed majors have had to contend with such remarks as "You're an Ed major? What a "gut" major!" or "Oh, pass-fail courses? You've got it easy!"

It appears that because of the "pass-fail" system, Education majors are constantly being knocked down. Many students who are not in the field of education fail to realize that we Ed majors experience a great deal of learning and we do work to obtain this knowledge but not for a grade.

Many students who have this attitude toward Ed Majors are those who have taken an Ed course for just an easy "P". Sure, it is not hard to pass with a "P" but what have they learned---probably nothing. We Ed majors certainly realize that it takes a real mature and responsible student to be able to handle a pass-fail course; to learn because we want to learn, not having to be pushed along by a grade.

Bobbi Saltus

Veni, Vidi, Greeky

To the editor:

In recent years, fraternities have become increasingly less popular. At one time, a fraternity member was regarded with great respect, merely because of his membership in the organization. Today, fraternity members are regarded, for the most part, as ultra-conservatives and as coming under the general category of "Animal". The term animal, in this instance, referring to one who drinks beer and then beats up girls, little kids or old ladies, whoever happens to cross his path first.

Freshmen, upon first entering the dormitories, are advised of the animal qualities inherent in every Greek and, from then on, they show no interest in fraternities unless they have a friend in the Greek System. This tradition of telling incoming freshmen of the evils of fraternities has been passed down through the years, so that four years from now, today's freshmen will be telling tomorrow's freshmen that Greeks are animals and that fraternities stifle individualism, but nobody actually knows what the Greek System is all about except for its members.

The pledge period, a controversial matter in itself, is one of the major objects of criticism in connection with fraternities. The pledge period once served as a trial period during which the pledge could show that he was worthy of being accepted. In most houses today, the pledge period is one during which the pledge gets to know the brothers and the brothers get to know him. Physical hazing, paddling etc. has been omitted in most houses, and the pledge period has become a time for people to learn how to relate to one another.

Fraternities, contrary to popular belief, do not stifle individualism. Although new members are elected by present members, the major criterion is how much a pledge wants to join the house, not how athletic he is, how good a student he is, how good-looking his girl is, how much beer he can drink, or whether or not he even drinks beer. Thus, each house is made up of many different types of people.

The reputation of Greeks as animals has been blown out of proportion to ridiculous lengths. Certainly the Greeks can be no more immature than those who take part in the massive panty raids and snowball fights which have been known to occur in Southwest and the other residential sections of the campus.

Although fraternities can no longer claim a 24-hour open house policy as an advantage or any of the other things that fraternities once had and dormitories did not, there are still many advantages to fraternity life. Similar to living in an apartment, joining a fraternity gives one the opportunity to choose with whom he will live. Some say that dormitory life is an experience in learning to live with people, however, there are some people whose personalities simply clash, and this sort of experience can only be one in learning how to live miserably.

Fraternity life is an experience in learning to live with people. The pledge period tends to bring members close together and form a bonding force which is sometimes called brotherhood. By being closer to others in this way, Greeks acieve a deeper understanding of people and learn how to better relate to others.

Fraternity membership also gives one a sense of identity, particularly on a campus as large as that of U Mass, where a student is more apt to feel like a number than an individual. Belonging to a fraternity allows one to belong to an institution within an institution and gives a student a sense of being more than a number, of being a PART of the University.

Anyone can find out more about fraternity life by coming to the Rush functions held every semester and talking to members. Fraternity life can be a very rewarding experience and no one should go through college without at least finding out what the Greek System is about.

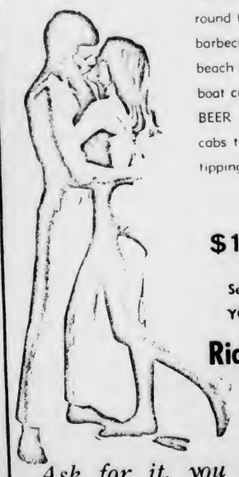
Campus Bus Resumes Operation

The campus shuttle buses, sponsored by the Student Senate, went into operation Friday morning on the route as established earlier this fall. Schedules above have been posted at most stops and complete timetables are available at the Campus Center Information Desk and on the buses. For bus information, call 549-6184.

The only change in the existing route will be the addition of a stop at Cashin House in the New Northwest Complex. This will cause slight changes in the existing time table but by no more than two minutes at any stop.

As in previous semesters, the Student Senate Transit Service will operate a special late evening shuttle service to the University Store Booksale at the Physical Plant Building. This bus will originate at the Physical Plant every half hour from 6:00 P.M. until closing at 9:00 P.M. tonight through Wed. (Feb. 3) night.



On January 26, representatives of the University and the Student Senate Transit Service presented a request to the Amherst Selectmen for permission to operate an additional shuttle route from V Lot near the Alumni Stadium to North Village by way of Fearing Street and North Pleasant Street.

If this request is approved and if the Student Senate grants additional funds to operate this route, service will begin as soon as equipment is ready. Service is not expected to be able to begin operations prior to February 15, 1971.

Book Distribution Point Centered At UMass Library

About 600,000 books are being distributed to the 28 state-supported institutions of higher education by UMass in a special project for the Massachusetts Board of Higher Education.

The operation, funded by two special legislative appropriations to the Board in 1969 and 1970, totaling $4.5 million, will improve the collections of all libraries in the public higher education system. The UMass library agreed to be the central purchasing and processing point for books destined for libraries at all 28 schools.

Dr. Edward C. Moore, Chancellor of the Board, said the Board has filed a request for another appropriation for 1971, and hopes this will become a continuing state project. The 28 state schools still need more than three million volumes to reach minimum standards set by the American Library Association.

The first books were selected from Books for College Libraries, a book that lists 57,000 titles essential to four-year colleges. More recent selections were made from tapes listing books that have been cataloged by the Library of Congress since 1969. The University library, using computers, prints out the selection lists, combines the selections from the 28 libraries into one master list, and places the orders. Computers are also used to keep up-to-date records of what books the colleges have received from those they have ordered, and to produce catalog cards and book labels.

Chief designers of the time-saving system were Boylan and James Kennedy, an associate director of the UMass library, who worked in cooperation with the chief librarians of the other state institutions.

UMass was chosen as the book center because of its computer capabilities, according to Patrick McCarthy, Deputy Chancellor of the Board of Higher Education, who is overseeing the project.

Nationwide attention has been drawn to the experimental project, which has developed a successful way to bring the libraries of a number of institutions of higher education up to standard. New Jersey officials have visited the UMass library to discuss ways of setting up a similar project.

The Board estimates savings in the millions of dollars for the several projects, through handling each book centrally. The savings are made through ordering and processing many copies of the same book at a time, through use of computers, and through the larger discount realized through large bulk purchasing. Another benefit is that book dealers and publishers have been much more reliable in filling mass orders than when libraries order one or a few copies of a book at a time.

Sigma Alpha Epsilon

A movement in education is taking place and it is affecting society as well as the university community in many ways. Many of our institutions are being challenged and the fraternity system is among them. Fraternities can go one of two ways: they can resist change and eventually fade away, an anachronism in a swiftly changing world picture, or they can join the movement and become a vital part of education and character development.

At Sigma Alpha Epsilon, we feel we are working towards this change. Our realistic approach to the total development of today's college man leads us to believe the old conservative stereotyped fraternity is out dated. The fraternity of today must offer a new atmosphere where a man is no longer a number and he can mature and feel a sense of belonging.

COME SEE WHAT WE HAVE TO OFFER AND WHAT YOU CAN CONTRIBUTE!

Gymnasts Rout Syracuse To Remain Undefeated

By MICHAEL CUSACK
Staff Reporter

The UMass varsity gymnasts continued their winning ways as they soundly defeated Syracuse University, 155.25-134.70, Friday night before an overflow crowd in the Boyden Auxiliary Gym. Their win upped their record to 3-0, an undefeated slate which the Redmen would like to keep intact next weekend when they face perennial power Penn State in a crucial meet.

Superior Redman strength and depth were evident throughout the meet as UMass took five out of six firsts, swept all six second places, and placed third in four events. In addition, Redman all-arounds took the top two places in that event.

Leading the Redmen again was senior Norm Vexler, who placed second in three events, side horse rings, and parallel bars, as well as winning the all-around event. Co-captain Tony Vacca also turned in a strong performance as he placed second in floor exercise and vaulting, and captured third place in parallel bars and high bar. His efforts netted him second in the all-around event.

First place winners for the Redmen were John Calabria in floor exercise, Rick Riley on sidehorse, Steve Cary in vaulting, Dave Genest on parallel bars, and co-captain Scott Stover on high bar. Other outstanding performers for UMass included Jack Berner in floor exercise, Jay Aronstein on rings, and Tom Myslicki on high bar.

In the first event, floor exercise, UMass jumped to an early lead that didn't change hands throughout the course of the meet. The Redmen swept all three places with Calabria's 9.1, Vacca's 9.0, and Berner's 8.7. High scorer for Syracuse was Gary Cushman with an 8.1. The score for the event read: UMass 26.8, Syracuse 22.3.

UMass' Riley, who is undefeated this season, posted a 9.1 on sidehorse to lead all scores in that event. Vexler's 8.4 took second while McDonnel of Syracuse was third with an 8.25. Though the Redmen took first and second in this event, they must come up with a strong third score if they are to be successful in their tougher meets which are coming up. UMass scored 25.1 points in the event to 20.6 for Syracuse, bringing the running score of the meet to 51.9 to 42.9 in favor of the Redmen.

The still rings event saw the Orangemen capture their only first place as George Stalter easily won the event with a score of 9.35, highest of the meet. However, relying on the 8.9 and 8.8 score of Vexler and Aronstein, the Redmen won the event total, 25.0-23.65, increasing their lead at intermission to 76.90-66.55.

Though UMass was sub-par in their vaulting, they took the top two places with Cary's 9.0 and Vacca's 8.5. Mark Guancial of Syracuse scored an 8.35, which was good for third. Again, the Redmen won the event total, 25.60-24.40, widening their lead to 102.50-90.95.

The Redmen swept the top three places in parallel bars with Genest winning first with a score of 8.9. Vexler was second with an 8.75, while Vacca and Cary tied for third with scores of 8.4. High scorer for Syracuse was all-around McDonnell with an 8.35. The event score was UMass 26.05, Syracuse 22.85, bringing the running score of the meet to UMass 128.55, Syracuse 113.80.

In the final event, high bar, the Redmen again swept the top three places. Stover, returning to competitive action after a knee operation, won top honors with a 9.2. Myslicki placed second with an 8.85, while Vacca was third with an 8.65. UMass scored 26.7 in the event to 20.9 for Syracuse, bringing the final score of the meet to UMass 155.25, Syracuse 134.70.

The undefeated Redmen travel to Pennsylvania next weekend for two meets. Friday afternoon, Feb. 5 at 2:30 p.m., the Redmen will meet heavily favored Penn State. Saturday afternoon, Feb. 6, the Redmen will meet the University of Pittsburg. The original schedule has been changed to accomodate the Russian National Team, which will be performing at Penn State.

The next home meet for the Redmen will be Friday, Feb. 12 when the Redmen will take on defending league champs, Springfield College. Due to heavy spectator interest, the meet will be held in Curry Hicks Cage, beginning at 8:15 p.m.

Ailing UMass Dumps NU, 61-47

Daily Collegian
Sports
VOLUME XCVIII, ISSUE 77
MONDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1971

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

With two flu-ridden starters on the bench, the UMass basketball team made a few changes and coach Jack Leaman pulled a few suprises to down a pesky Northeastern five before 4200 fans at the Cage Saturday night in what seemed like a slow motion ball game, 61-47. The Redmen are now up to 12-2 while the Huskies lost their second straight, dropping them to 10-4.

For the average UMass basketball fan, it must have seemed strange seeing the local heroes play an entire contest with both Mike Pagliara and Ken Mathias on the bench. Due to illness neither was able to see any action against the Huskies although the two were dressed and ready if things got too tight.

But thanks mainly to an All-American who has started every game of his varsity career and a sophomore transfer who had never even played a varsity contest before, things never really got out of hand.

Julius Erving, everybody's All-American, silenced a few skeptics and returned to form against the Huskies as he netted 28 points and pulled down 26 rebounds. After suffering through a few poor shooting nights, the junior leaper hit for 10 of 19 attempts from the floor and it seemed like he grabbed every rebound in the first half.

Most people have come to expect this type of heroics from Erving. The man who made the difference in this battle was Tom McLaughlin, a transfer from Tennessee who just became eligible to play on the day prior to the game. With an unbelievable display of poise, class and real talent, McLaughlin played all but one minute of the fray and netted 14 points, ten in the second half, hitting on 7 of twelve attempts, and made about 4000 quick friends in the process. He also put on a great defensive show blocking two shots.

Northeastern played its usual deliberate game on offense, as the score indicates, and its grabbing, scratching, clawing style on defense. For about the first 14 minutes of play, the Redmen had trouble with both.

UMass was only able to net one field goal, an Erving tap-in, in the first seven and a half minutes of play as the Huskies broke, or rather crawled, to a 9-5 lead. After Erving tipped in another, Jim Moxley, the Huskies high scorer with 17 points, netted one, Rick Vogeley, who started in place of Mathias, scored from fifteen feet.

The Redmen kept narrowing the lead behind the shooting of McLaughlin and John Betancourt. Senior guard Bob Dempsey, who has seen only limited action this season, came into the ball game with about nine minutes left in the half and really got the club moving.

McLaughlin scored from ten feet and Betancourt connected with a Dempsey feed as the Redmen finally moved into the lead at the 4:13 mark of the half. They never trailed again. Outscoring the Huskies 16-4 in the last seven minutes, the Redmen took a comfortable 31-22 edge at halftime.

The second half was all Erving and McLaughlin. The duo accounted for 26 of the team's 30 points in the second stanza and simply dominated play. Each time the score got close, McLaughlin would score from outside or Erving would lay one in.

At the 9:01 mark, McLaughlin netted a layup but was called for an offensive foul. Coach Leaman complained too vehemently, according to the official, and was hit with a technical foul. When he continued to argue, the referee hit him with another one. Moxley sunk the two technicals and the foul shot and when captain Kevin Shea hit a jumper, UMass led by only three, 44-41.

However, McLaughlin scored from twelve feet and Erving dropped a layup and a free throw to give the Redmen some breathing room, 49-41, which lasted the rest of the way. The final excitement of the contest came when McLaughlin dribbled downcourt and hit Erving, of course, for an easy layup with a great pass and the co-captain was fouled. Erving completed the three point play and the game was iced with 3:40 to go, 55-45.

McLaughlin received a huge ovation when he left with one minute to play. He could make a big difference for the Redmen the rest of the way, starting Tuesday night at Worcester.

LAYUP LINES - Chris Coffin played a strong floor game with eight rebounds and five assists... Northeastern shot a horrid 29% in the game with Jack Maheras and Shea the leading culprits at 2 for 11 and 4 for 14, respectively.

Frosh Drop Green Again, 84-74

By STEVE FERBER
Staff Reporter

Committing only eleven personal fouls, the Little Redmen glided past the Dartmouth frosh for the second time this season. The 84-74 victory put the Little Redmen back on the winning track from which they had been derailed last Thursday night by the BU frosh. The ten point win also marked the sixth time this season that the Little Redmen have won on their home court, as last Saturday night's contest left the frosh at 8-1 for the year.

While dropping Dartmouth to 7-3, the UMass frosh were led by Al Skinner who scored 25 points in an excellent all-around effort. Billy Raynor, Dartmouth's star guard, had a 24-point night, but the key to the contest was the free throw line.

Thirty times the home team let one fly from the free throw line, and 22 times the ball found its way in. Dartmouth, on the other hand, only had 11 chances, and their eight points from the charity stripe was the biggest of UMass pluses.

The contest began with a quick Dartmouth spurt, with UMass turnovers quite plentiful. With leads fluctuating between four and six, the Dartmouth frosh stayed on top until, with minutes to go in the half, Art Levine hit from the corner for a 34-33 Redman lead. Seconds later, Levine connected for two free throws and the home club was never headed.

A nine point halftime lead dwindled late in the second half. UMass would appear ready to break the contest open, only to have Raynor close the gap with some quick hoops. Turnovers were the key here, as numerous violations and sloppy passes killed the Redmen, and, if not for an excellent game in other departments, it might well have been Dartmouth on the winning side. Despite the fact that they were outrebounded by the margin of 44-33, the Dartmouth frosh managed 22 more shots than there counterparts, and only the abundance of turnovers could account for this strange statistic.

Often UMass would build the lead to ten, when a turnover would interrupt their progress and turn the game back into a nip and tuck contest. Twice late in the game, turnovers nearly proved disasterous as with just under eight minutes left a beautiful tip-in by Skinner put the score at 66-56 in favor of the home squad. Suddenly the score was 66-60 as Raynor's two baskets were the direct results of Redman turnovers. Then with 3:34 left in the game and the score 73-63, UMass gave up the ball two more times and a Greg Hannah basket made it a six point difference and the Little Redmen had a lot less breathing room.

Then the cool Rich Pitino put it away, as he looked left and whipped a pass to his right side underneath the basket to John Olson. Olson converted and with less than two minutes to go the 77-68 lead was insurmountable.

In rebounding from their first loss of the season, Rich Pitino displayed some brilliant passing, shooting passes to Olson and Skinner inside, and feeding Peter Trow on the outside. If Pitino's 13 assists weren't too much for the Little Green, there was always the Redmen's shooting percentage. Skinner's 10 for 15 evening was just one of the contributing factors to a 55% shooting night for the UMass frosh.

Despite the fact that the teams were never more than 11 points apart it seemed as if UMass had control throughout the game. Everytime Dartmouth would streak to within five, either Skinner would convert a Pitino pass or tip-in a rebound, or Trow would drive the baseline or Levine would hit from the outside.

Trackmen Display Fine Talent At BAA

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

BOSTON-Intersession's crash training program showed promising results here Saturday night as the UMass track team came away with one relay victory, a second place relay performance and three fine individuals efforts at the B.A.A. games at Boston Garden.

In the mile relay the team of Jerry Spellman, Steve Levine, Mike Teasdale and Al Mangan took top spot in their heat against Providence, Springfield, Merrimac, and Central Connecticut. Their winning time of 3:31.4 gave them a victory margin of some 35 yards.

The Redman quartet of John Maloney, Larry Paulson, Ron Wayne, and Dave Evans came within three yards of victory in the College two-mile relay. Colgate was the winner in this race as its anchor man held off a late Evan's surge on the last turn for the victory.

In this race UMass defeated such top rated relay units as Maryland, Georgetown, Dartmouth, and Holy Cross. Top time splits were turned in by Evans and Wayne who ran 1:56.1 and 1:56.3 for their half miles.

Individually Wayne, Ed Shaughnessey and Dick Dyer turned in the big performances. Wayne competed in the New England half mile run and came in fifth in a strong field in the time of 1:56.7. For the evening he ran two strong races over this distance.

Shaughnessey came in second in the high jump with a leap of 6'4" tying the top mark for the evening but missing first place on fewer misses. Last year he also placed in this event.

Dyer placed fourth in the long jump with a jump of 21'11". Winning this event was Maurice Gliton of Maine at 23'. In next month's Yankee Conference championship these too will be at each other again in this event.

On a final appraisal coach Ken O'Brien was very pleased with his trackmen's performances. He felt the two freshman, Teasdale and Maloney, showed good poise and maturity in their first big competition at the Garden.

O'Brien will have to wait until the middle of this week to find out if any of his athletes qualified for this Saturday's K. of C. meet at Madison Square Garden. In the meantime, the entire team will be preparing for their first dual meet of the new year at Dartmouth on February 10th.

Survey Shows Discontent, Suggests Remedies

(Editor's Note-This is the second of a five-part series compiled for the Daily Collegian. The series deals with recent changes in Health Service practices prompted by the results of student surveys over the past two years.)

The changes recently instituted at the University Health Center (Infirmary) such as telephone doctors' appointments are the direct outcome of an accumulation of dissatisfaction from both UHS staff and its student patients.

This dissatisfaction centered upon the frequent long waiting time to see physicians. Too often the student patient complained that by the time he sat down in the doctor's office, justifiably annoyed; and for other reasons, so was the physician - already harassed with a too-heavy workload and a procession of disgruntled patients.

Evidence to substantiate the extend and sources of the problem was collected via three student opinion questionnaires. The first, voluntarily completed by students in the Health Center (Infirmary) waiting room, was done in December of 1968 and then again in February 1970. The third was a campus wide random sample of all UMass students - both those who had and had not used the infirmary. These surveys, like the entire out-patient project, were conducted with interdisciplinary cooperation. Mrs. Jane Zapka, health educator on the UHS staff, was largely responsible for executing the surveys. The Office of Institutional Studies, in Whitmore Hall, sponsored the campus wide random sample and helped with the data processing, and Dr. Eugene B. Piedmont of the Department of Sociology served as Consultant.

The 400 plus respondents to the second voluntary out-patient questionnaire showed that nearly 60% of the patients who had used the UHS did so as many as 5 times per semester. Some 60% had used the appointment system (as it then operated), and 80% found it preferable to "walking-in" and waiting for a turn. Better than half felt a 15-30 minute wait was "reasonable" and over another quarter were tolerant of a 30-45 minute delay. (In terms of the average private physicians' regular office practice, such waiting times are very common.) Eight of ten students felt they had been dealt with courteously, while between 80-90% were satisfied with the treatment administered, and 65% had even received satisfactory explanations of their treatment. And, quite significant for the future of health care in America as a whole, only 16% were not willing to be treated by a competent non-physician practitioner.

The most common complaint was that the waiting time was too long (54% felt that the waiting time was not reasonable in previous visits) or, alternately, that more physicians should be available.

The random sample of all U. of Mass. students, conducted in April 1970, revealed pretty much the same picture. Of the 938 respondents (57% of those contacted), 80 percent of all students had used the UHS during the past year, 70% as out-patients. About 28% of patients were seen after a 15-30 minute delay, 30% after a 30-60 minute wait. About 42% regarded their wait as "too long, but understandable," while nearly equal percentages saw it as "not too long" (14%) and "unreasonably long" (16%). Well over half (53%) said they "would be willing to tolerate" a 15-30 minute wait, and another 10% a 30-45 minute delay. Fifteen percent thought they should be seen within 15 minutes. An almost equal proportion (38%) cited, as their major complain, too long waiting time and limitations in the range of services provided. For example, many students wanted dental care, eye glass prescriptions, and birth control information.

Since staff physicians' dissatisfaction was an important in instigating this study and changes, an attempt was also made to guage the nature and extent of their concern. Thorough, and often lenghty, interviews were conducted with each of the 12 staff physicians late in the Summer of 1970 by George R. Gross, also a medical sociologist in the Department of Sociology.

Now that the various changes have been operational for 2 months, part of its evaluation will consist of re-interviewing the physicians (and perhaps nurse practitioners too). Their feelings and opinions will be compared, using the changed out-patient system as the critical independent variable.

In the same way, the two earlier student surveys will be re-done. Later this month student patients in the waiting room will again be asked to complete a form, and in the Spring semester another campus-wide random sample will be drawn. As with the physician interviews and the engineer's work sampling studies, the "before-after" comparisons will determine whether or not the system changes will be continued and in what form.

This inter-disciplinary approach to solving a pressing set of personal problems from an organizational perspective is, according to Dr. Piedmont, the direction of things to come in "health care delivery" research.

Apollo Halfway

SPACE CENTER, Houston AP-The Apollo 14 astronauts flashed past the halfway point Monday of their quarter million mile voyage to the moon, with doubts dispelled that a pesky docking apparatus would block their lunar landing.

The spacemen, Alan B. Shepard Jr., Edgar D. Mitchell and Stuart A. Roosa, awoke from a day long sleep only a few hours after officials announced that a spacecraft docking problem had apparently cleared itself.

Mission Control engineers said the problem with a docking mechanism that failed to work properly Sunday had apparently worked itself out and space officials gave a go ahead for Shepard and Mitchell to guide the Apollo 14 lunar module down into the forbidding Fra Mauro lunar highlands Friday.

Apollo 14 sped past the half way mark at 7:08 p.m. EST. The spacecraft was then 125,350 miles from both the earth and the moon, and was flying through space at about 3,200 miles per hours.

The astronauts retired about 7:50 a.m. EST Monday morning after a difficult 19 hour day. They awoke about 6 p.m. EST and reported they felt refreshed.

Although the world was kept in suspense on whether Apollo 14 would land on the moon, there apparently was no doubt in the astronauts' minds when they settled down for a 10 hour rest period early Monday.

At a news conference Monday, Mission Director Chester Lee firmly announced an extensive analysis of the docking mechanism uncovered no problem now but failed to explain why it did not operate properly Sunday. He said the mission would continue as planned.

Ecuador Tells U.S. To Withdraw

WASHINGTON (AP)-Ecuador demanded Monday night the withdrawal from its territory of the United States military mission.

In a note signed by Ecuadorian foreign minister Jose Maria Ponce Yepez, Ecuador said the action was taken in retaliation for what it termed "coercive measures" adopted by the United States two weeks ago in the fishing rights conflict.

On Jan. 18, the United States announced suspension of military sales to Ecuador and threatened to suspend economic aid following a series of seizures of American fishing vessels.

Ponce Yepez described the action as "characteristic of the bitter imperialistic tradition of the United States."

Ponce Yepez, who is here for an Organization of American States meeting on ways to combat terrorism in the hemisphere, said the demand for withdrawal of the U.S. military mission was contained in a note given to the U.S. government at 6 p.m. Monday.

The Ecuadorian action came one day after a special meeting of OAS foreign ministers passed a resolution calling on the U.S. and Ecuador to work out their differences in the fishing rights dispute through negotiations.

Ecuador which claims a territorial limit of 200 miles from its coast, has seized and fined 17 American fishing vessels since Jan. 11. The U.S. position is that all waters beyond 12 miles are international territory.

This was the second time in the past 20 months that a Unitzd States military mission has been evicted from a Latin American country as a result of a fishing rights dispute.

Peru, which also claims a 200 mile limit, ousted the American military mission in May of 1969 following its seizure of several American vessels.

Hub Fire Drives Many Out Of Homes

BOSTON (AP)-More than 200 persons were driven out of their homes in 8 degree weather Monday night by a fire which swept through a row of brick tenement houses in the crowded North End of Boston.

Little flame was seen but dense clouds of smoke filled the neighborhood on Salem Street not far from the North Station.

An American Red Cross official said between 150 and 200 persons found shelter temporarily in a Knights of Columbus hall near the fire scene, and an undetermined number of others were taken to other shelters. No injuries were reported.

About a half dozen buildings were involved in the fire. Most of them were four or five story brick structures.

Dozens of fire trucks blocked the narrow streets and with hundreds of spectators crowding in, a massive traffic jam developed.

GIs Mass Near Laos

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. George Aiken quoted the State Department Monday as saying U.S. and South Vietnamese troops have been massing on the Laotian border "for a large operation we might be undertaking."

Aiken said he was assured no U.S. soldiers would cross into Laos.

Aiken, senior Republican on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said he was told of the troop buildup Friday, but said the mystery operation has been shrouded since by what he called "the tightest censorship since World War II."

In Moscow, Soviet Premier Alexei N. Kosygin was quoted by Tass as saying "an outrageous invasion of the southern provinces of Laos is underway."

The Soviet news agency quoted the government newspaper Izvestia as saying an invasion of Laos had been carried out by South Vietnamese.

Aiken's statement was the first U.S. acknowledgement by an American official that a massive offensive in northwestern South Vietnam might be underway.

The Vermont senator's report was followed by Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott's statement that no U.S. troops would be allowed to cross the South Vietnamese border.

Chairman of the Student Senate Budgets Committee, Kevin Kulakowski, has announced that all student organizations must submit their requests for next year's budget to him by Friday, February 5, if they want any funds for next year.

Opinion Invited On Legal Reforms

Atty. Richard M. Howland

By ANNE STADNICKI
Staff Reporter

Student commentary will be invited concerning the proposal to reform the University legal system after the Ad Hoc Committee on Judicial Review submits its draft to the Student Senate, according to Attorney Richard M. Howland, Student Senate Legal Counsel.

The proposal has not yet been adopted, but still remains in the planning stage, Howland said. He hopes to bring the final committee draft of the Conciliation and Discipline Act before the Senate this week.

Explaining the proposed extension of the Student Court's jurisdiction, Howland said that the act would allow a police officer the option of having any adjudicatements referred to the General Court rather than the Northampton district court, prior to arrest in the case of a misdemeanor.

"If an arrest is necessary, the option is not the student's but the police officer's," continued Howland.

He said that the act would in effect be a request to the University police to voluntarily offer the opportunity to send the offender through the University judiciary rather than to the Hampshire County District Court in Northampton.

"Once the words of arrest are pronounced, however, the case must go to the district court," he emphasized.

The proposal would be a beneficial measure for UMass because offenders would not be subject to a criminal record, and could not be fined or confined by the University, Howland said. He added that it would apply to all individuals on the campus grounds, the staff, faculty, administrators, students and all outsiders.

Howland explained that there is no philosophical requirement that courts must be resorted to, in the concerned cases.

"A person has a right not to be subjected to any discipline except a judge, but he may choose another discipline, such as the University judicial system," he said.

It is in the interest of the Commonwealth to resolve differences, settle disputes and cause behavior to be reasonable to the public, he continued. The proposal would offer a different course to resolve differences without violence, he said.

Howland is one of eight members appointed by the Student Senate. He listed the other members as Randy Dahl, of the administration, Sam Goldman and Dick Hartzler of the faculty, and Henry Bouffard, Sally Norris, Bob Rochford, and Rick Verrochi, of the student body.

Two or three weeks will be allowed after the Senate approval to allow the entire student body time to express a favorable or disfavorable opinion and make suggestions, Howland said.

Sen. Byrd To Oppose Elimination of A.R.C.

WASHINGTON (AP)-Sen. Robert C. Byrd, (D W. Va.), Senate Democratic whip, assailed Monday the Nixon administration proposal to eliminate the Appalachian Regional Commission program.

"I will vigorously oppose any efforts to abolish the Appalachian Regional Commission," Byrd said, adding that any such effort "would be foolish."

President Nixon's aides have said that his revenue sharing program would involve terminating the Appalachian program and similar regional development programs.

Chairman Jennings Randolph, (D W. Va.) of the Senate Public Works Committee, already has expressed his opposition to the idea and has announced that he and Sen. John Sherman Cooper, (R Ky.), will introduce legislation this week to extend the Appalachian program for four years.

Randolph also has announced hearings on the bill starting Feb. 8.

Byrd said the Appalachian program was a new concept in federal state relations, has been successful in the five years it has been operating and hasn't yet had time to realize its full worth.

"Many important projects, such as highway construction are underway or in the planning stages, and it would be foolish, in my judgment to change signals now," he said in a statement.

The Appalachian region includes all or parts of 13 eastern states. There also are five other similar regional development programs underway.

Bodies Still Missing In Brighton Disaster

BOSTON (AP)- Workers Monday continued efforts to locate three other men trapped in a building which collapsed nine days ago in the Brighton section.

One body was recovered early Monday. It was taken to the city morgue pending identification.

The four men were trapped inside when two sections of the $5 million condominium under construction collapsed at 2000 Commonwealth Ave. They were identified last week as James Cingolani, 26, of Quincy; Ciraco Diorio, 45, of Roslindale; Michael Papasedero, 29, of Dedham, and Daniel Tintindo, 44, of East Mansfield.

Sections of the building collapsed while concrete was being poured on balconies of the upper floors.

About 100 neighborhood families, which had been forced to find housing elsewhere because of disrupted utilities, returned to their homes Sunday.

Adoptions By Singles Successful, Satisfying

MILL VALLEY, Calif. (AP) - Raymond F. Jurasin is a 34 year old bachelor school teacher who found he "liked the kids so much he hated to see them go home." So he got the idea of adopting one.

Now he has 2 year old David and, if all goes well, the adoption will be permanent in a year.

"I've wanted a child for a long time, but have been too busy teaching to get married," said Jurasin.

"I've been registered with the San Francisco Department of Social Services for three years, but they were not able to find anyone for me," he went on.

"Then, four weeks ago, a friend told me of a boy available in the Riverside area.

"I'd already been approved in San Francisco, so I went down and signed up and brought him back."

The boy, David Rhodes Jurasin, had a black father and a white mother, Jurasin said, adding, "I had specified I wanted a hard to place child."

Adoptions by single persons have been legal in California since 1965.

Faculty Fellow Program May Overcome Problems

By ANN GURNETT
Staff Reporter

The Faculty Fellow Program, in operation since the creation of the Residential College program, has become a foundering ship as of late. Designed on the same basis as Faculty Fellow programs in operation at Ivy League colleges, notably Yale, the program ran into problems from the start.

Although none of the problems encountered was enough to cause major difficulties, they accumulated in number and magnitude until, this year, the program itself was on the brink of nonexistence.

The program was begun simultaneously with the opening of the Orchard Hill dormitory complex. Although these dorms were not planned as residential college, they were ultimately considered as such.

According to Prof. Howard Brogan, the lack of foresight in planning has been one of the major drawbacks in the successful operation of Orchard Hill as a Residential College.

"The Faculty Fellow program itself was modeled after those in operation at Yale, with minor differences," he said." At Yale, each student is required to belong to a residential college, each of which has its own Dining commons, Hall facilities, fellows, activities, and insignia-each college even has its own commencement exercises. This results in a strong bond between students and fellows of the same college."

"I had hoped we would progress in this direction," Brogan continued." However, one of the failings of our program is the diversity of goals of the faculty involved. Some fellows want Orchard Hill to become an autonomous college; some, including myself, would prefer a semi-autonomous status, with the advantages of both a small private school and a large university. Also, dorm preceptors and counselors have failed to recognize the vital part faculty fellows can and should play in the operation of a residential college."

"Many of those who would make the residential colleges, the Hill and Southwest, semi or completely autonomous, would also plan a liberal arts-oriented curriculum which would inherently discourage science majors," he continued. "There has also been talk of making some courses compulsory, which would make it virtually impossible for science majors to participate in such a program."

The possibility for new blood to flow through the veins of an old project has arisen lately in the form of a motion presented to and passed by the Faculty Senate. The motion, proposed by Prof. Brogan, calls for a restudy of the entire Faculty Fellow- Residential College idea by a board consisting of six faculty, two administrators, three undergraduates and one graduate student. This committee would be established by the Faculty Senate and would be "charged with recommending to the Chancellor any administrative changes which seem desirable because of the expanded function of these units...and the development by this administration and faculty of each college of a distinctive curricular as well as co-curricular program, recommending to the Chancellor the additions and adaptations to the Physical Plant necessary to carrying out these programs, and terminating the Committee's supervisory role at this point."

It is possible that this committee can, through major reforms, give the whole idea of residential colleges a new complexion However it is up to the students, in the final analysis, to decide if they really want a Faculty Fellow program.

In The Nation And In The World

Nixon Economic Message Aggressive, Confident

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon pledged to Congress Monday to cut inflation sharply, scale down high unemployment, and bring economic prosperity to the nation by mid 1972.

He said his administration would achieve these goals with a great economic leap forward this year and with an attack on inflationary forces in the economy without turning to wage price controls.

"I intend to use all the effective and legitimate powers of government to unleash and strengthen those forces of the free market that hold prices down," Nixon said in his annual economic message.

He promised - with cooperation from the private sector - to bring "full prosperity without war, full prosperity without inflation."

The 1972 targets, set out by his Council of Economic Advisors in the report, are these:

- An unemployment rate "in the 4 1/2 per cent zone." Nixon earlier had set a goal of reaching full employment, defined as 4 per cent joblessness, by mid 1972. Unemployment in 1970 started at 3 1/2 per cent of the work force and wound up at 6 per cent.

- An inflation rate that is "declining to approach the 3 per cent range," as measured by the price rise yardstick of the Gross National Product. In 1970, inflation by GNP standards reached 5 1/4 per cent, highest in 19 years.

- A tremendous $88 billion leap in output of goods and services in 1971, bringing the GNP up to $1.065 trillion, a figure higher than many economists have predicted.

Nixon coupled his forecasts with his strongest rejection of wage price controls or guide lines to date.

"I do not intend to impose wage and price controls which would substitute new, growing and more vexatious problems for the problems of inflation," he asserted.

"Neither do I intend to rely upon an elaborate facade that seems to be wage and price control but is not."

As to what he will do to check rising wages and prices, Nixon pointed his finger to the past.

He noted that he tried to bring down oil, lumber, copper and steel prices by increasing - or threatening to increase - their supply in the marketplace.

And he pointed to his call for labor and management in the construction industry to come up with a voluntary plan to hold down wages and prices. That call was made under the threat of government intervention.

"The key to economic policy in 1971 is orderly expansion," Nixon said. "While continuing to reduce the rate of inflation, total spending and total output should rise as rapidly as possible to lift the economy to full employment and full production."

Gambrell Appointed Russell Successor

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP)-David H. Gambrell, chairman of the Georgia Democratic party, was appointed Monday by Gov. Jimmy Carter to fill the unexpired term of Sen. Richard B. Russell.

Gambrell, Carter and other state officials planned to fly to Washington for swearing in ceremonies Tuesday.

Russell, dean of the Senate and adviser to presidents, died Jan. 21 of chronic lung disabilities.

Gambrell, a stocky, darkhaired adviser to Carter, was among those first mentioned in speculation about a successor.

Gambrell said he is now inclined to seek his own term in the Senate in 1972, after Russell's term expires.

Gambrell has refused to label himself as to his ideology, saying only that he is a "pragmatist."

He says his views on race likely will differ with those of Russell, who led the southern bloc in the Senate which opposed all civil rights legislation.

"The passage of time has changed a lot of things," said Gambrell.

"He (Russell) stayed firm where he was, but I think he'd expect a young person to have different views."

Refusing to describe himself as either a hawk or a dove, Gambrell says he feels reduction of American armed forces in Southeast Asia is going as rapidly as is safe.

Gambrell, 41, is an honor graduate of Harvard Law School.

Connally Denies Accepting Private Foundation Funds

WASHINGTON (AP) - John B. Connally Jr. denied Monday he violated the Texas Constitution by accepting at least $225,000 from a foundation while governor. He asked for a new Senate hearing on his nomination as Treasury secretary so he can publicly rebut a story suggesting he did wrong.

The Finance Committee will reopen the hearing Tuesday.

Connally told Sen. Wallace F. Bennett, (R-Utah) he earned fees as executor of the estate of Sid R. Richardson who died in 1959. Connally did not say now much.

He spread the fees over a 10 year period, Connally told Bennett, to minimize the tax impact. He said since his services occurred before he became governor he did not violate the constitutional prohibition on outside income from corporations or persons.

Bennett said he did not ask Connally the total amount received as executor. The senator said he assumed it was $75,000 a year. At 10 years, that would make Connally's fee $750,000 or about 1 per cent of the Richardson estate.

From all indications, after Tuesday's hearing, the Finance Committee will go into executive session, question Connally more about his finances and then vote overwhelmingly in favor of his nomination.

Connally took the offensive as senators began demanding aswers to questions raised by a New York Times story Monday about the Sid R. Richardson Foundation's payment of $225,000 to Connally between 1966 and 1969.

The newspaper contended Connally had consistently denied, in answer to reporters' queries while he was governor, that he got compensation from anyone or any foundation or performed any services outside his job of governor.

At a two hour, 25 minute Finance Committee hearing last Thursday, no one asked Connally about his ties to Richardson, a millionaire oilman who hired him in 1951 and whose estate he helped administer.

The Richardson Foundation got most of its $86 million in assets from the estate in 1962.

After reading the Times story, Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield suggested the committee might want to reopen its hearings.

Sen. William Proxmire, (D-Wis.) who earlier sent his own investigators into Texas to probe Connally's finances, set forth specific questions he wants Connally to answer before the Senate debates his nomination.

Proxmire said he wants to know if, as the story stated, Connally received compensation from the Richardson Foundation in 1966 which might have violated the Texas Constitution.

"These issues raise very serious questions," Proxmire wrote Sen. Russell Long, (D. La.) chairman of the Finance Committee, who already has said he will vote to approve Connally.

"New Navy" 'Old Story

CORONADO, Calif. (AP) - The oldest living officer in the U.S. armed forces, retired Adm Richard H. Jackson, says the "new Navy" with its long hair and beards isn't really very new at all.

Jackson, who will be 105 in May, said: "It's always been a 'new' Navy. For instance, beards and longer hair were popular when I was a young officer. It's kind of a cycle...I think we fitted in our time and the Navy fits in theirs today. That's the way it should be." Young people don't have his unqualified approval, however.

"They think they know it all, but a lot of old salts around know they don't," he said. "It takes a lot of years to learn the difference between opinion and experience."

Jackson was born the year President Lincoln's assassination at Florence, a farm town in northwestern Alabama. He entered the Naval Academy in 1883 at 17 and after graduation served two years as a midshipman on the USS BOSTON and USS TRENTON.

In 1889 aboard the TRENTON he led 20 seamen into the yards to form a human sail as the ship foundered in a hurricane off Samoa, allowing it to be beached instead of sinking with great loss of life.

A few months later, he placed 25th in examinations for a commission as an ensign. But there were only 23 vacancies. Jackson entered the University of Virginia Medical School and won a degree in one year.

But the Navy hadn't forgotten his heroism. It persuaded Congress to pass a special act commissioning him.

During the Spanish American War, Jackson commanded a coal burning torpedo boat engaged in numerous minor skirmishes over two years.

Jackson retired in 1930. His health is frail, but his eyes still sparkle, he has most of his hair and a flourishing mustache. He eats three squares a day and has a nightly nip of brandy. Jackson lives in a comfortable two story house across the street from a golf course in this San Diego suburb. He watches a lot of television. His favorites: underwater adventure shows and travelogues.

Draft Counselor's Corner

Deferments And Who Qualifies

By GILBERT J. SALK
Staff Reporter

(Editor's note - Beginning this week, this column will appear each Tuesday and Thursday in the MDC)

As more and more young Americans become concerned about the cancerous growth of militarism in the United States, the question of alternatives to serving in the armed forces assumes greater and greater importance. Men are seeking ways to avoid supporting the abhorrent war against Vietnam, and both men and women are disturbed by the disruption and channeling of their lives caused by the Selective Service. Draft Counselor's Corner will provide information about alternatives through general information and by answering questions submitted by readers. Note: We recognize that the draft does as much to disrupt the lives of women as it does the lives of men. Therefore, a special effort will be made to provide information for women also.

STUDENT - At best a temporary deferment. As long as you are regularly enrolled as a full-time student and making satisfactory progress, you qualify for a I-S(H) for high school students or a II-S for college students deferment. You may retain this deferment until you either graduate, withdraw, or fall behind in your studies. Generally speaking, graduate students are no longer eligible for II-S deferments.

MEDICAL AND PSYCHOLOGICAL - There are two deferment classifications. L-Y and IV-F. The IV-F is a nearly permanent classification meaning that you are not qualified for any service. It is becoming increasingly difficult to obtain a IV-F. The I-Y means qualified for service only in time of war or national emergency. It is usually given subject to a six-month or annual review. Many people with medical histories which do not interfere with their daily lives qualify for I-Ybecause the rigors of military training and duty may aggravate the condition. If you think you may qualify for a I-Y consult your doctor and a qualified draft counselor. Many people have been able to "arrange" physical or psychological reasons for disqualification. This works, but it's not a good idea to rely on such outs without adequate preparation.

HARDSHIP - If being drafted would cause extreme economic, physical, or emotional hardship on dependents or other members of your family, you may qualify for a III-A. The fact that this deferment is not requested more frequently than it is points up the blatant racism of the SS in practice. I would guess that a large majority of core-city draftees qualify for III-A deferments. Draft boards, required by law to place a registrant in the lowest classification for which he qualifies, never follow proper procedure in determining hardship when it is indicated on the classification questionnaire.

SOLE SURVIVING SON - If you are the sole surviving son in your family, and your father or one of your brothers died as a result of military- related injuries, you are IV-A and may not be drafted.

MINISTERS AND MINISTERIAL STUDENTS - If you are a full-time divinity student or a practicing clergyman, you qualify for a IV-D. Some legal interpretations as to who qualifies for a IV-D are yet to be made. (The law requires that a minister must spend at least 100 hours a month practicing to qualify. As yet, the law does not believe, apparently, that one can serve God unless one is wearing a collar.) This is an area still open to challenge in the higher courts.

OVER AGE - If you're over 35, you are V-A, over age. To all practical purposes, you are over age once you have your 26th birthday. There are some exceptions, but, in general, life begins at 26.

CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS - This is not a religious or pacifist deferment. People with religious and/or pacifist backgrounds are of course eligible for the I-O or I-A-O classifications, but others may also qualify. The law provides CO status for those opposed to participation in war (Note: it does not say opposed to war) for religious, moral, philosophical, or ethical reasons. My experience is that nearly everyone who takes the time to think about it is a conscientious objector. (In fact, it seems to me that the Selective Service attacks the problem backwards. Those who want to serve in the military should be asked to request status as conscientious participators, and made to prove that their conscience and training require that they kill people.) The I-A-O classification is for those willing to serve as noncombatants in the military, usually as medics; the I-O is not required to serve in the military, but must work for two years "in the national health, safety, or interest." Never request CO status without first consulting a draft counselor.

These are the major legal alternatives provided by the SSS. If you want more information, or if you don't qualify for any of these deferments, see a qualified draft counselor. You may also want to consider some extra-legal alternatives.

NON-REGISTRATION - Legally, you should register with the SSS within five days after your eighteenth birthday. Failure to do so carries a maximum sentence of 5 years, but in practice you are usually given the alternative of registering late. The advantage, of course, is that the SS does not have your name. Consider, however, that most schools automatically report your academic status to your local board, and if the board finds that you're not registered it could be a hassle. The complications are similar if you get busted for anything. Generally, non-registration is not a viable alternative for people moving within middle class institutions.

RESISTANCE - This includes resigning from the SSS by returning your draft card, refusing to report for induction, ripping off or trashing local and state boards, and similar methods of non-cooperation and interference. You should expect to get busted and sentences can range up to 5 years, so you should have a clear idea of exactly what you hope to accomplish, whether the resistance method you choose will achieve your goal, and whether it's worth trading time in jail for.

EMIGRATION - Canada and other countries have been reasonably friendly to American political refugees seeking escape from the draft or the armed forces.

The moral, emotional, and financial questions raised by emigration are very complex, and we will devote considerable space to this in the future. However, one simple fact is that emigrating before you must report for induction is not a crime, and it leaves you free to return openly to the States to visit friends and family.

Mobe Plans Open Meeting

Richard Nixon said last June, "The only American activity in Cambodia will be air missions to interdict the movement of enemy troops and material where I find that it is necessary to protect the lives and security of our men in South Vietnam." But on January 21st Associated Press reported that "American advisers and South Vietnamese officers were traveling and periodically setting foot on the ground despite Pentagon assertions to the contrary." And on January 24th the New York Times reported that American officials have disclosed that they were using a broad range of U.S. air power there including logistical support and helicopter gunships" despite the fact that Nixon himself vowed last June to employ no U.S. logistics support or troops in Cambodia.

A spokeswoman for the Student Mobilization Committee said today that "because Nixon is unlikely to blunder into another formal announcement of U.S. escalation of the war in Southeast Asia as he did last spring, it is up to the Antiwar Movement to expose American military activity in Cambodia, Laos, and Thailand as well as in Viet Nam, and to build antiwar actions this spring that will force the administration to withdraw all U.S. troops immediately."

To plan these actions the Student Mobilization Committee has called an open meeting for tonight, Tuesday, February 2nd at 8 PM, room 174 in the Campus Center. The film "Confrontation at Kent" a documentary of the clash between students and National Guardsmen last May, will be shown.

Massive demonstrations to bring all the troops home immediately have been scheduled in Washington, D.C. and San Francisco on April 24th by the National Peace Action Coalition, a coalition of antiwar groups throughout the United States. Claire Moriarty, chairwoman of the UMass SMC said today "It is significant that groups from the Womens Liberation Movement, Black and Third World groups, labor, and G.I.'s, formerly indifferent or even hostile to the Antiwar Movement, have already pledged their support and active participation in the April 24th demonstrations. For the first time we are the majority!"

Plans for local antiwar actions include a demonstration at the Springfield Induction Center to end the draft which is scheduled for reconsideration by Congress this spring.

Job Hunt Starts For Veterans

WASHINGTON (AP)-Employers and cities across the nation are responding to a campaign to find jobs for veterans, drive officials said Monday.

Progress was reported at a news conference called to announce the formation of a 100 member advisory committee in the jobs for Veterans program.

Chairman James F. Oates Jr., of Chicago, and Secretary of Labor J. D. Hodgson said the advisory committee includes members of President Nixon's Cabinet; federal officials, business men, and representatives of veteran, labor and minority groups.

Oates said local task forces are being formed in major cities and the services of 2,400 federal employment offices and 70 veteran assistance centers are being used to link veterans with jobs.

Letters have been mailed to 900,000 employers asking their cooperation, Hodgson said.

Of the first 30,000 cards returned in response to the letters, it was reported, 40 per cent of the employers indicated interest in hiring, and training veterans.

"The nation has an obligation to these veterans," Hodgson said. "Many of them do not know how to get jobs and job training because they have been in service.

"They must be helped to get jobs and promptly," he added. "There is universal acceptance by the nation that we must find employment for these men," Oates said. "and we have need of their skills."

Local Ecology Groups To Combat Vt. Nuclear Plant

By DAVID CASTALDI
Staff Reporter

Members of local conservation and environment groups met Sunday in the Student Union Ballroom to discuss a plan of action for dealing with the problem of the Nuclear Power Plant in Vernon, Vermont.

Co-sponsoring groups included: "Save New England", Connecticut River Ecology Action Corp., (C.R.E.A.C.) and the Coalition for Environment Quality (C.E.Q.).

Mr. Larry Bogart of the National Anti-Pollution League spoke on the health and safety hazards created by such nuclear power plants as the Vernon, Vermont site. Mr. Bogart quoted Dr. John Goffman of the New York City Council, and author of "Population Control through Nuclear Pollution", in saying that such a power plant anywhere near New York City was "insane", and that such a power plant would cancel out all public health advances made over the past quarter century.

Mr. Bogart appealed to all citizens of New England to challenge the legality of such a plant in view of its poor location and the possible hazardous effects of radiation, and air and water pollution. He spoke of a citizens group on Long Island that recently discovered that the Vernon power plant was without any previous operating history and was without adequate testing of its component and systems.

"Adequate safety testing cannot be done, he said, and the AEC (Atomic Energy Commission) has spent millions for research in testing the integrity of such systems but it will not be until late '74 or '75 before tests will be able to completely check the safety of such power plants". There have to be fantastic precautions because we're dealing with fantastic poisons, and no matter what precautions are taken, an accident could always happen, he continued. All concerned citizens should question whether or not such a plant is necessary, desirable, and what the long-range effects will be, said Bogart.

According to a fact sheet issued by "Save New England", the nuclear hazard of power plants is related to the siting of power reactors for the generation of electricity. The radioactive effluents and fallout from the opeation of these nuclear plants, together with the water-heating effects of the reactors are a genuine cause for public concern. A nuclear reactor operating for any particular length of time constitutes a danger to people and property in the surrounding vicinity.

The accumulation of immense amounts of radioactivity in the reactor core constitutes a potential radiation threat since one high-power reactor operating for one year burns as much nuclear fuel as would be consumed in the detonation of more than 1000 Nagasaki A-bombs.

Following the passage of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, New England was singled out as a logical market for nuclear power because of its distance from the Appalachian coal fields.

In 1970, 10 major reactors of untested size and design were built in addition to one small plant at Rowe, Mass. which began operation in 1962. Plans are to build 17 more units in the next 10 years. (General Electric and Westinghouse account for 78% of all nuclear power plant because Rowe was a small unit, it was inadequate and plans were made for the formation of new plant sites. Reactors become a threat to environmental safety when they are clustered together and are built four or five times larger than the Rowe plant. Precautions are taken to prevent the escape of deadly radioactive ashes when fuels are being used, but engineers maintain that there is always a possibility for release unless all reactors are located deep underground. Such a precaution has not been taken in the case of any of the 104 reactors being built.

Since the cancellation of large reactors originally planned for the outskirts of Boston, utilities have stepped up their commitment to nuclear power in other parts of New England. Mr. Bogart feels, however, that these public utilities will not enter into any sort of agreement to assume responsibility for possible damages which may result from such sites as the Vernon plant.

A proposal to build a large reactor at Seabrook, New Hampshire has been deferred because of citizen opposition and increasingly unfavorable economics. Utilities are, however, going ahead with plans for nuclear plants at Ipswitch, and Salisbury, Mass., Rome Point, Rhode Island, and Lake Champlain, Vermont. Citizens concerned about the effects of radioactivity on ecology have organized to oppose any new construction and to see that standards are enforced in the case of plants now under construction.

Nuclear plants necessitate pumped storage hydro-plants for emergency backup and as an energy sponge to store power generated during periods of low consumer use. Such pumped storage plants threaten to pollute the Deerfield and Connecticut River Valleys and Salisbury, Mass. area.

Mr. Bogart contends that the AEC does not have to make a decision concerning the safety of large nuclear power plants. This responsibility rests solely with the owners of the plant, and AEC is only a government regulating agency that attempts efforts at safety but is without a system of "checks and balances". Furthermore, he doubts the possibility of AEC refusing to grant an operating license for the Vernon plant.

A coaliton of about 30 organizations, however, will petition the AEC to postpone the public hearing on the license. They are also working for support to present a court case against the operation of the Vernon plant and there are hopes to form abroad, workable base for future action against such plants which threaten our ecology.

THE NUCLEAR POWER PLANT at Vernon, Vt. has been the subject of much discussion and some criticism lately. Opponents of the project claim it will pollute the atmosphere with radiation and raise the temperature of the Connecticut River. (MDC photo by P. Lempart)

Debris Spotted In Search For Downed Plane

BURLINGTON, Vt. (AP)- Officials coordinating the search of Lake Champlain for a private jet with five men aboard missing since last Wednesday reported the discovery Monday of some unidentified debris and two or three small oil slicks on the west side of the lake, southeast of Port Kent, N. Y.

Authorities hoped to gather samples from the slicks to determine whether they were composed of jet fuel.

The debris turned up in infrared photographs taken of the lake Sunday by two Air Force Phantom jets from Shaw Air Force Base, S.C.

A two man submarine was expected to arrive Monday night to aid in the search. Another two man sub was reported enroute from Florida, but wasn't expected to arrive until Wednesday.

Bitter cold continued to hamper the search Monday, and officials feared that might interfere with operation of the submarines. Much of the lake now is solidly iced in, and whether a submarine could be towed to the lake's center for launching was uncertain.

The plane, a twin engined AeroJet Commander, was owned by Cousins Properties, Inc., of Atlanta, Ga., which has vast real estate interests. The firm is in charge of a local urban renewal project, and those aboard the missing aircraft had been in Burlington on business associated with that project.

Man's History Presented In Acclaimed Film Series

The famed "Civilisation" film series will be shown locally, free to the public, starting at 7 p.m., Tuesday, February 2, at Hampshire College, and at 7 p.m., Wednesday, February 3, at Amherst College. The 13-film series is being provided by the National Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C., and sponsored by the National Endowment for the Humanities and Xerox Corporation.

The series was done by Kenneth Clark, an Englishman who travelled more than 80,000 miles documenting the events, ideas, and arts of Western man. Produced originally for the British Broadcasting Corporation, "Civilisation" has enjoyed great popularity at the National Gallery and, last fall, as a series on National Educational Television.

The first of the films, "The Frozen World," will be shown in the Main Lecture Hall of Hampshire's Academic Building on Tuesday, February 2. This showing will be repeated the following evening, Wednesday, February 3, in Buckley Recital Hall, Music Center, Amherst College. All showings are at 7 p.m., and all films are about an hour long.

Thereafter, successive episodes in the "Civilisation" series will be shown in pairs, with each pair of films presented at Hampshire and Amherst Colleges on successive Tuesdays and Wednesdays.

February 9 the program is "The Great Thaw" and "Romance and Reality"; February 16 includes "Man--the Measure of All Things" and "The Hero as Artist"; and the final program of the month features "Protest and Communication" and "Grandeur and Obedience."

Director's Film's Highlighted

Cinemung will present over the next three weeks a series of the most esteemed films by the great American director, Josef von Sternberg.

Sternberg, the leading representative of the Germanic film tradition during the Thirties, has slowly achieved recognition as the unexcelled master of the visual image. Critics of the day had difficulty accepting his highly stylized acting, cryptically ironic dialogue and austere plots. What they failed to realize was the extent to which he subjected all facets of filmmaking to the expressions of his creative vision.

Even Fellini, the currently outstanding pictoral stylist, cannot match Sternberg's sustained and fluid visual unity -- Fellini's films, by comparison, break up into a

Andrew Sarris, writing in Film Culture, summed it up thusly -- "The critical sentiment in the Thirties was that films were supposed to be short, snappy, and to the proletarian point. Von Sternberg was thus considered slow, decadent, and self-indulgent, and gloriously ambiguous Marlene Dietrich was judged too rich for the people's blood. This was a time for bread, not cake. Today, Von Sternberg and Dietrich look more dazzling than ever while most of the cinema of the bread lines looks excessively mannered. Time invariably vindicates form over topicality, and poetry always outlives journalism."

FEB. 3: THE SHANGHAI EXPRESS (1932) with Marlene Dietrich (8:00 P.M.) The last collaboration of Sternberg and the legendary photographer, Lee Garmes (others were MOROCCO and DISHONORED). Sternberg's most successful statement of his fatalistic conception of love.

UNDERWORLD (1927) with George Bancroft (9:30 P.M.). Ben Hecht's script helped make this the first great gangster film.

FEB. 10: MOROCCO (1930) with Gary Cooper and Marlene Dietrich (8:00 P.M.) Dietrich's first American film, it also established Cooper as a romantic hero. Perhaps the quintessential Sternberg film.

THE LAST COMMAND (1928) with Emil Jannings (10:00 P.M.). The story of a Czarist general reduced to the role of a Hollywood extra. Sternberg's ambiguous, first sound film prompted Preston Sturges to call it the only perfect film he had ever seen.

FEB. 17: THE BLUE ANGEL (1930) with Emil Jannings and Marlene Dietrich (8:00 P.M.). Justifiably ranked with the greatest films ever made.

DISHONORED (1931) with Marlene Dietrich (10:00 P.M.). Dietrich as a self-consciously role-playing lady spy. Like some of his other efforts, the film mocks itself.

All showing will be in Thompson, room 104.

Managers wear many hats at Brigham's

Our managers' challenge is to successfully wear them all, at one time or another...they must be adaptable and versatile and are expected to accomplish all the simple and complex tasks that happen during a typical day of a Brigham's sandwich shop manager. In spite of this most of them love it...and find it pays very well ($10,000 to $20,000 average manager's salary).

Brigham's operates over 110 ice cream and sandwich shops in the southeastern New England area and will be adding 25 more this year. More bright people are needed to help us continue this fantastic growth rate.

New Trustee

For the past seven years Louis Lyons has been one of the University's most active, most sincere and most visible trustees, and his departure from the board this month will be hard to take. But as Governor Sargent gets ready to appoint a new Trustee, he should take several things into consideration.

First, the nominee should be one with whom students can identify. Mr. Lyons has proved that age is not necessarily a barrier to understanding, but the Governor should realize that, in most cases, it is difficult for a man in his mid-50's to be considered a friend by students.

The Governor's last two appointees, Trustees Abrams and Shailer, are considered by most students who know them as the most approachable and most understanding of any board members. Both of these men are youthful professionals, who appear as though they actually value student opinion.

The Governor should look for a man with the qualitites displayed by these men. Mr. Lyons, trustee Crowley and Trustee Troy when he looks for a man who has some common ground with students. He should look for men who are not so captivated by their own success that they find listening difficult. He should look for a man who can laugh at himself and for a man who doesn't demand perfection from students.

Above all, Governor Sargent should appoint a man who, while aware of the traditions of American higher education, be neither ruled by nor bound to them. Rather, he should be a man responsive to today's students and an innovator in creating a more rewarding education for the students of the Commonwealth.

The new university, the University of Massachusetts in the 1970's, cannot be led by men of soggy vision and deaf ears. For the University to grow, to expand and to provide a more rewarding and fulfilling education for its students, it must have human leadership.

The University deserves a solid committment on the part of the Governor to make his search for a new trustee more than a backroom political payment

Nixon's Game Plan

WASHINGTON - It is now clear to everyone in Washington what President Nixon's Game Plan for 1972 will be.

It was all decided at a top secret meeting of leading Republican strategists in Bebe Rebozo's basement at Key Biscayne. Everyone spoke his mind.

"It's obvious," one Republican pol said, "that attacking students, while very popular with the electorate, does not produce votes."

"We also know that permissiveness and pornography are not the gut issues we thought they were," another strategist said.

"We damn sure can't raise the law-and-order problem after being in office for four years."

"And we know the Southern strategy laid one of the big eggs of all time."

"We've got to come up with something that the people really feel strongly about."

"But what's left?" someone asked in desperation.

"Gentlemen," a party member said, "we have taken a survey and we have discovered the one thing that bothers the American people more than anything else."

"What is it?"

"The U.S. government."

"The government?"

"That's correct. The people are even madder at the government than they are at their own kids. They blame the government for everything that is wrong in the country. Wall Street, labor, the farmers, the ethnic groups and even people in civil service are sore at the government."

"Are you suggesting Nixon run against the government?"

"Exactly. I propose we attack the government with the same vigor we attacked the Doves, the intellectuals and Sen. Goodell. Our game plan will be to prove to the American people that the government is not responsive to the needs of the people."

"But we are the government," someone protested.

"At least, we will have been the government for four years."

"All the more reason to attack it. If we say the government is no good, there isn't a person in this country who will not support us."

"We'll need a slogan. What about 'Power to the People'?"

"That's an inspiration."

"We could call for a revolution," someone said excitedly.

"Can't you just see Agnew going out across the country making chopped meat out of the bureaucrats?"

"We could hold anti-government demonstrations with Bob Hope, John Wayne and Frank Sinatra."

"Billy Graham could organize a march on Washington."

"We could have Ronald Reagan burn his Social Security card."

"Martha Mitchell could stage a sit-in at the Pentagon."

"The possibilities are endless, gentlemen. Then we're all agreed that the strategy for '72 is an all-out attack on the American government?"

There wasn't a dissenting voice in the room. President Nixon, who was waiting nervously in the next room, bought the idea immediately.

A few weeks later he fired the first salvo when he said, in his State of the Union message, "Let's face it. Most Americans today are simply fed up with the government at all levels. They will not...and should not...continue to tolerate the gap between promise and performance." Everyone in Bebe Rebozo's basement smiled.

Madness In Their Method

Last Friday, I wrote an article dealing with my own moral dilemma about the grading system. I do not know whether it is moral for me as a teacher to give grades.

The following article is from a book called Student As Nigger by Jerry Farber. He makes a very persuasive case for abolishing grades completely. I strongly recommend the book to everyone who wants to understand what the educational system is doing to/for them.

Please give me some feedback, pro or con, on my essay and this article. Write to me at the paper c/o Bleeding Rose, Bob Zelman.

It's not what you're taught that does the harm but how you're taught. In fact, for most of your school life, it doesn't make that much difference what subject you're taught.

The real lesson is the method. The medium in school truly is the message. And the medium is, above all, coercive. You're forced to attend. The subjects are required. You have to do homework. You must observe school rules. And throughout, you're bullied into docility and submissiveness. Even modern liberal refinements don't really help. So you're called an underachiever instead of a dummy. So they send you to a counselor instead of beating you. It's still not your choice to be there. They may pad the handcuffs -- but the handcuffs stay on.

Which particular subject they happen to teach is far less important than the fact that it is required. We don't learn that much subject matter in school anyway in proportion to the huge part of our lives that we spend there. But what we do learn very well, thanks to the method, is to accept choices that have been made for us. Which rule they make you follow is less important than the fact that there are rules. I hear about English teachers who won't allow their students to begin a sentence with "and". Or about high schools where the male students are not permitted to wear a T-shirt unless it has a pocket. I no longer dismiss such rules as merely pointless. The very point to such rules is their pointlessness.

The true and enduring content of education is its method. The method that currently prevails in schools is standardized, impersonal and coercive. What it teaches best is -- itself. If, on the other hand, the method were individual, human and free, it would teach that. It would not, however, mesh smoothly into the machine we seem to have chosen as a model for our society.

It's how you're taught that does the harm. You may only study geometry for a semester -- or French for two years. But doing what you're told, whether or not it makes sense, is a lesson you get every blessed school day for twelve years or more. You know how malleable we humans are. And you know what good learners we are -- how little time it takes us to learn to drive a car or a plane or to play passable guitar. So imagine what the effect must be upon our apt and impressionable minds of a twelve-year course in servility. Think about it. Twelve years of tardy bells and hall passes; of graded homework, graded tests, graded conduct; of report cards, GPA's, honors lists, citizenship ratings; of dress codes, straight lines and silence. What is it that they're teaching you? Twelve years pitted against your classmates in a daily Roman circus. The game is Doing What You're Told. The winners get gold stars, affection, envy; they get A's and E's, honors, awards an ege scholarships. The losers get humiliation and degradation. The fear of losing the game is a great fear; it's the fear of swats, of the principal's office, and above all the fear of failing. What if you fail and have to watch your friends move past you to glory? And, of course the worst could happen; you could be expelled. Not that very many kids get swats or fail or are expelled. But it doesn't take many for the message to get across. These few heavy losers are like severed heads displayed at the city gates to keep the populace in line.

And, to make it worse, all of this pressure is augmented by those countless parents who are ego freaks and competition heads and who forcibly pass their addiction on to their kids. The pressure at school isn't enough; they pay the kids for A's and punish them for D's and F's.

But can you feel any of this? Can you understand what has been done to your mind? We get so used to the pressure that we scarcely are conscious of it without making some effort.

Why does the medium of education affect us so deeply while its purported content -- the subject matter -- so often slips our minds? This is partly because the content varies from year to year while the form remains more or less the same; but also because the form -- a structure of rules, punishments, rewards -- affects us directly in a real way, while the subject matter may have no such immediate grasp on our lives. After all, don't we tend to learn best what matters most? Under a coercive system it isn't really the subject that matters; what matters is pleasing the authorities.

Snow And More Snow

"Snow fall is expected to taper off during the weekend" was the forecast of the weatherman.

"The troop withdrawal program is expected to continue and most of our troops will be withdrawn from Southeast Asia within the near future," Sec. Laird declares.

Rushing inside the protective walls of the dormitory, I stopped to kick my shoes against the wall to knock some of the snow off. Some other people came into the dormitory after me and I saw them doing the same thing. I stopped to examine this minor incident. Somehow I could not explain to myself why I was becoming a little uneasy.

Still uneasy, I came to my room and rid myself of some "extra coating" that I had put on to protect myself against this gastly weather. Surely I was more relaxed when I was stripped to my indoor clothes, but I still could not explain why the feeling of uneasiness arose in the first place. I was desperate for a possible explanation. If the question had been why was the dining commons food so bland, I would not have worried so much about it. But this was another matter.

I hate this weather, I concluded. Why do the seasons have to change in the first place? Why do I have to put up with it? The answer to this was not as simple as the first question, but none the less, to some extent, the inevitability of the human condition seemed to make its point stick. And I had to accept that if I choose to live in Amherst, I had to take the weather as it is. There was nothing I could do about it except to prepare myself for the changing conditions and to keep a close watch on the weather report assuming of course that its forecasts remain forecasts. But what happens if the forecasts don't take into account the unforeseen events or if the bad weather condition warnings come too late to remedy the damage it has done, or if forecasts did not come true at all?

My unconscious, I think is smatter than my conscious mind. I realized that I bought not only summer and winter clothes but also an umbrella, snow shoes, ice skates, and a portable radio to listen to music outdoors when the weather permitted. My unconscious may be smarter than my conscious but it could not explain that in an endeavor to free myself from physical, political, social and cultural, self imposing limitations, why had I forgotten to take this aspect of my freedom into account? In fact the dictatorship of the changing climate on my behaviour, was unforgiveable. I thought the awareness of this phenomenon was worth spending the time, essentially because my unconscience had been reminded once again to keep its eyes open against creeping "influential factors" that may hamper the development of my "ethical sense" and my sense of reality.

My uneasiness persisted but lessened to a degree. I tried to look for contentment in chance by turning on the radio. The familiar voice of the newsman said:

"Mr. Nixon was asked at his recent news conference as to how much desent will be tolerate in his party considering the systematic plan to keep Goodell out of the senate, and the firing of interior sec. Hickel?

"Mr. Nixon replied that I encourage dissent in my administration and we need such people in the Republican Party."

My uneasiness was sparked off again but this time it was a pointer towards my previous uneasiness. I jumped to my feet in a sense of urgency.

A weekend has passed and my freedom is still being "snowed in", and yet my original calm response to weather changes was not different in essence, than Nixon's casual mention of the government policy towards dissent. -----and at this time it is still 'snowing' in "free-land".

F Lot Bot

To the editor:

Recently I had a guest from home come up to visit me. Not being a student at this school, and seeing more than forty empty spaces in the lot next to F lot, my friend unknowingly violated the parking regulations of our school by occupying one of them.

Now while I have never questioned the right of the campus police to ticket or tow cars when they become an obstruction or a nuisance to the well-being of our campus community, and while I do acknowledge that they have a difficult and thankless job to do, I was rather upset and confused by the seemingly illogical action of ticketing a car which was neither a nuisance nor an obstruction, especially since the car belonged to a guest.

Perhaps the rationale is that the new garage isn't doing so well financially, but I couldn't very well afford to park a car there for three days. The rates may be low to some, but to many students, including myself, they are prohibitive.

In any case the rationale is not the truly acceptable one of preventing the overcrowding of F lot because anyone who lives in Southwest knows F lot looks like a desert on most weekends. Why charge a guest five dollars to park on a desert? Now I'll offer to pay the ticket because I'd be much to embarrassed to let my friend bear the burden. Please stop ticketing F lot on the weekends. It serves no purpose but to hurt people like me.

Gay Minority

To the editor:

Within the past few weeks, members of the newly formed Amherst chapter of the Gay Liberation Front have become increasingly visible on the UMass, Amherst, and Smith campuses as well as at some of the local off-campus hangouts. We are becoming more open because we can no longer justify to ourselves meekly accepting the artificial sex roles society imposes upon us.

The incident prompting the writing of this letter occurred Saturday night at the Drake when some of us, after dancing together, became aware of the intensely hostile reaction of a few onlookers. Such reactions are by no means uncommon, although generally just discreet laughter at the expense of the faggots will suffice to "prove" that you're not one of "them".

Remember this, all you super-masculine queer beaters. The most hostile of you are invariably the ones most insecure about your own sexual identity; why else would you be so threatened by homosexuality?

Well that's your hangup, not ours. We're gay and we're proud. We will have no part of your sexist, role oriented social structure that ultimately oppresses not only gay people and women but everyone. But neither will we allow ourselves to be excluded from any activity or denied any right or privileges for no reason other than being gay.

Gay people may be a minority, but a very substantial minority. We will no longer stand for the intense oppression we have suffered for thousands of years. We will be ourselves, we will be natural, we will be gay.

The Draft

To the editor:

As you might already know, the Selective Service Act of 1969 will be up before Congress this spring. An organization is being formed in Amherst by the name of Selective Alternatives to the Draft. We feel that organizations such as the Peace Corps and VISTA should be included as selective alternative service to the draft. Recently, at the University of Nebraska, President Nixon stated that as a means of "enlisting the dedication and idealism of...young Americans," (he would combine the Peace Corps and VISTA into a new super-agency and) "those willing to give their lives and their energy can work at cleaning up the environment, combatting illiteracy and malnutrition, suffering and blight, either at home or abroad." We find the President's idea quite pleasing and see this 'super- agency' as an alternative to the draft. Senator Edward Kennedy, Senator Edward Brooke, and Congressman Margaret Heckler are being sent letter asking for their support.

S.A.D. about our present draft system; well so are we. We need help, suggestions, and contacts. If you are willing and wanting to help please call us at 253-9968 or come see us behind the Mobil station up town at:

UM Faculty Roundup

John W. Denison of the UMass veterinary and animal sciences faculty has been named director of the Stockbridge School and assistant dean of the College of Agriculture here.

The assistant professor of veterinary and animal sciences will replace Dean Fred P. Jeffrey, who retires Feb. 21 after a 27-year career at UMass.

The Stockbridge School has a two-year curriculum emphasizing technical education in such subjects as animal sciences, arboriculture and park management, wood utilization and nine others. It has 625 students and is the oldest and bestrated institution of its kind in the country.

Dr. Denison is a 1950 graduate of the University of Maine with M.S. and Ed. D. degrees from UMass. He joined the University faculty in 1961, as an instructor in poultry husbandry. Before that he owned and managed his own commercial poultry farm and worked as a poultry specialist for Wirthmore Feeds.

He received the Stockbridge School outstanding teacher award in 1966 and was honored that same year by the Stockbridge Alumni Association with an "S" award for his contributions as a teacher and advisor to students.

At the University he has been vice-president of Alpha Zeta honorary fraternity, wrestling team coach, advisor to the Animal Science Club, a faculty fellow in the Residential College Program, a member of the University Calendar Coordinating Committee and the Stockbridge Advisory Committee, as well as a number of other University and community activities.

Harvey Swados, outstanding author and commentator on society, has been appointed professor of English here.

Prof. Swados has been a visiting professor of English since September at UMass and will continue to teach courses in creative writing. A graduate of the University of Michigan, he has held academic positions at Sarah Lawrence College, the State University of Iowa, San Francisco State College, the University of Oregon, Columbia University, and State University of New York at Buffalo.

His latest novel, "Standing Fast" (Doubleday), concerns a group of American radicals from the era of Hitler and Stalin up to the assassination of President John F. Kennedy. A review in the "New York Times" says the novel is "a document of such accuracy and integrity and compassion that we should not only buy it and ponder it, but we should as well, as a result, feel ashamed of not having lived it."

Other books by Professor Swados include: "Out Went the Candle," 1955; "On the Line," 1957; "False Coin," 1960; "Nights In the Gardens of Brooklyn," 1961; "A Radical's America," 1962; "Years of Conscience--The Muchrakers," 1962; "The Will," 1963; "A Story for Teddy and Others," 1965; "The American Writer and the Great Depression," 1966; and "Radical At Large," 1968.

The newly tenured professor has received several honors, including the Guggenheim Fellowship, Sidney Hillman award, fiction award from the National Institute of Arts and Letters; and a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts. He is also listed in "Who's Who In America."

"The Craft of Dying" is the title of a new book by Dr. Nancy Lee Beaty, assistant professor of English at UMass.

Published by Yale University Press, the 175-page volume examines the cumulative influences of Renaissance, Reformation, and Counter-Reformation upon the gospel of reconciliation preserved in liturgical tradition. It is subtitled, "The Literary Tradition of the Arts Moriendi in England."

Dr. Beaty is a graduate of Wellesley College and Yale University. A native of Rye, N. Y., she joined the UMass faculty in 1964 after serving as principal of the Thes/niki International High School in Thessaloniki, Greece.

Forestry, Environment Center Established

A pioneering center for research on forestry and the urban environment has been instituted at UMass.

The Board of Trustees has approved a contract with the U.S. Forest Service to establish the Environmental Forestry Research Center at the Amherst campus. It will be the first such unit of its kind in the U.S., and will focus on forestry research primarily in relation to people and the environment rather than wood production aspects.

U.S. Representative Silvio Conte (R. Pittsfield), a strong supporter of this type of research, was a major force in obtaining the unit for the State University.

The effect of forests, parkland, greebelts and indivual trees on the quality of life in predominantly urban areas will be a major concern. Research is planned in such areas as the effect of forests on air pollution and noise abatement, the recreational and aesthetic aspects of forests, and the genetic improvement of tree species for urban use, according to Prof. Arnold D. Rhodes, head of the UMass department of forestry and wildlife management.

Carrying out the research will be UMass forestry faculty, Forest Service staff and UMass graduate students. The unit will be organized along the lines of the federal-state Cooperative Fishery and Wildlife Units now operating at UMass Amherst.

Eventual plans call for the erection of a Forest Service building. For the present, plans are underway to house the research unit in Flint Laboratory, using space formerly occupied by dairy and animal science laboratory facilities.

The contract is through the Massachusetts Agricultural Experiment Station, the agricultural research facility at UMass. The center is being set up under the Northeastern Forest Experiment Station of the U.S. Forest Service in Upper Darby, Pa.

UMass Cops Kodak, DuPont Grants

E.I. duPont de Nemours and Co. and the Eastman Kodak Company have announced grants to UMass.

The duPont company has granted a total of $7500 under its 1971 aid to education program, in grants of $2500 each to the chemistry, chemical engineering and polymer science and engineering departments.

A $6500 unrestricted direct grant to the University has been made by the Eastman Kodak Company. The total is based on years of service and years of academic work by UMass graduates that have joined Kodak.

UMass Offering Special Opportunities For Viet Vets

UMass is offering special opportunities to Massachusetts veterans from the Vietnam War period who want to enter the University.

The help includes special consideration in admissions areas and granting transfer credit for some service schooling or experience. UMass-Amherst now enrolls more than 1100 recent veterans as undergraduates, or more than seven per cent of the undergraduate total in Amherst.

The biggest aid to veterans in gaining admission to the University is in the use of the Scholastic Aptitude Tests (SAT) scores of the College Entrance Examination Board. Experience has shown that SAT scores are valuable in selecting top students and in identifying those at the other extreme who cannot do college level work. There is a large group in the middle, however, whose success can only be predicted by other factors. It has been found that veterans, because of their maturity, motivation and experience are able to compete with other University students academically, even when their college board scores are 100 points lower than the average student.

Average SAT scores for high school graduates admitted to UMass-Amherst approximate 550 in both the math and verbal areas, according to David P. Lawrence, associate dean of admissions, who works closely with veterans. "We have found that veterans who score within 100 points of the average high school graduate are able to compete successfully with the high school graduates," he added.

Another area of accommodation for veterans is in overlooking poor grades obtained prior to military experience. "The degree of maturation that takes place in the service motivates most veterans to be successful even though they may have had undistinguished academic records in high school," Lawrence explained. "We apply this even to those who have had an unsatisfactory experience at another college before their service. If they can score 450 on their SAT's we will give them an opportunity."

In addition, the University accepts for transfer credit courses of the U.S. Armed Forces Institute (USAFI), that are basically comparable to UMass courses, if the student obtains a grade of C or better. It is also possible for a veteran to receive credit for service schooling through the College Level Examination Program (C.L.E.P.), sponsored by the College Entrance Examination Board.

Massachusetts veterans are also encouraged to try the community college route to a UMass degree. "Any Massachusetts veteran who completes a two-year liberal arts program at any one of the Massachusetts community colleges and is recommended by that college will be granted admission to UMass as a junior with full transfer credit," Lawrence explained.

Another benefit to veterans is the tuition waiver, provided under Massachusetts law. Any veteran whose home of record was Massachusetts when he entered the service is entitled to apply for four academic years of tuition waiver at any Massachusetts supported institution of higher learning.

Veteran status, as presently defined at UMass, includes anyone who served 180 days continuous active duty, any part of which occurred after January 31, 1955, or anyone released from active duty after that date for a service-connected disability.

The program does not bar veterans from outside the state but actually admits very few. Those from out of state are not encouraged to apply unless they are superior in academic background and test scores.

Parking Proves Problem Near New Dorms

All students, staff and faculty in the new Cashin Dormitory and Thatcher Way areas. We are requesting your cooperation in facilitating the movement of heavy trucks on Thatcher Way and the access roadway to Cashin Dorm.

In the new Cashin Dorm area there is no parking allowed within the dormitory area. We may be forced to tow illegally parked vehicles to allow access to delivery and service vehicles. Please stay out of this area at all times. Temporary parking is available at Tilson Farm.

In the Thatcher Way area construction work is taking place. Again we are requesting that all vehicles be parked on the side of Thatcher Way away from the dorms (east side of Thatcher Way), as posted, and to keep the roadway open at all times.

We may be forced to tow illegally parked vehicles to allow access to delivery and service vehicles. Please help us keep the areas clear so campus work can proceed smoothly.

It's Back To The Boats In New Bedford Strike

NEW BEDFORD, Mass. (AP) - New Bedford fishermen will be back at work on the seas Tuesday following an agreement between their union and the Seafood Dealers Association.

Austin P. Skinner, secretary treasurer of the New Bedford Fishermen's Union, said agreement was reached Monday after fishermen and boat owners "flatly wouldn't accept" an earlier proposal offered by the dealers during the weekend.

Fishermen and boat owners have been tied up for nearly three weeks in the dispute over the size limit of yellowtail flounder, weighing and unloading practices, and new weighing system.

The new agreement proposes a three quarter pound size limit on yellowtail flounder, scheduled meetings on a monthly basis between the dealers and fishermen, the sale of yellowtail by count and location of catch, and a search for a scale beneficial to the weighing and unloading of fish.

COME TO THE Student Mobilization Committee MEETING

Last year this man promised to withdraw the troops. And he did right into Cambodia. And while he keeps talking his planes are bombing Southeast Asia more than ever. Only now he calls it 'protective reaction.'

If the U.S. got out of Vietnam the American prisoners of war would follow. But this man uses the POW's as an excuse to keep the war going.

He seems to have forgotten his old promise to end the draft. But as Congress prepares to continue military conscription, which expires this June, we haven't forgotten.

Today more people than ever oppose the war. Fewer than ever believe what this man says. Just ask any soldier. Now's the chance to organize the antiwar majority to force immediate withdrawal.

Grapplers Salvage Tie, Pin Catches Yale, 17-17

By BOB GANLEY
Staff Reporter

The UMass wrestling team had to come from behind in the last two matches to salvage a 17-17 tie with Yale on Saturday afternoon. After jumping off to an early 9-0 lead, the Redmen lost the next five bouts and trailed 17-9 going into the 190 lb. match. However, George Zguris won a crucial 4-3 decision with a minute of riding time and then Carl Dambman, needing a pin to get the Redmen to tie, obliged his teammates by pinning his opponant in the first period.

For UMass it was just a case of getting rid of the cobwebs caused by a forty day layoff. Dave Amato, Dave Reynolds and Sheldon Goldberg all won decisions to get the Redmen off to a good start, but things then turned sour. Clay Jester and Brian Urquhart lost tough decisions and then a pin and two more decisions put the Redmen behind. But Zguris and Dambman came through in the clutch and preserved the Redmen's undefeated record in New England.

UMass is now 5-1-1, with the only loss coming to West Chester State. The 17-17 tie with Yale equalled the score of the Yale-Springfield meet and gives an indication of how tight the upcoming UMass-Springfield meet should be.

The results:
118 Dave Amato (M) decisioned Drake Lamen (Y) 6-3
126 Dave Reynolds (M) decisioned Bob Penner (Y) 8-5
134 Sheldon Goldberg (M) decisioned Alan Yamashita (Y) 7-1
142 Terry Brown (Y) decisioned Clay Jester (M) 5-2

Rugby Club Begins Fourth Year

The UMass Rugby Club begins its fourth year this term with a general meeting Wednesday, February 4. The ruggers finished the fall season with a winning record and look forward to continued success. Graduation at mid-year depleted some strengths of the club. Mike Bull, the sensational center half has returned to England. Wing forwards Frisbee and Devir and wing Alan Brown have graduated. The team looks towards new recruits to bolster the weakened positions.

The spring season features a trip during spring vacation through Virginia to play Washington and Lee, Old Dominion, and the University of Virginia.

The ruggers open the regular season against the Hartford Wanderers on April 4. During the spring they will play among others Holy Cross, Amherst and Williams, closing the season with the New England Tournament, again to be held at UMass on May 17-18.

Veterans and newcomers are invited to the meeting to be held in Goessman 259 at 8:00 p.m. on Wednesday, February 4. Features of the meeting will be a discussion of spring activities, election of officers and a rugby film.

Redmen Battle HC Tonight

Daily Collegian
Sports
VOLUME XCVIII, ISSUE 78
TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1971

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

Tonight at Worcester Auditorium, the UMass basketball team faces perhaps its most challenging battle of the season when it takes on the Crusaders of Holy Cross at 8 p.m. The Cross stands at 12-4 on the year while the Redmen are 12-2.

Besides the fact that the Crusaders are one of the best teams in New England, UMass will be faced with other problem in this encounter. The Redmen will probably be without the services of senior co-captain Ken Mathias who has not fully recovered from the illness which kept him out of the Northeastern game. It is extremely unlikely that the 6'7 forward will see any action at all.

Mike Pagliara, the other flu victim on the team, has recovered somewhat and will play although it is not known how much. All of this adds up to a giant-sized problem for coach Jack Leaman. When asked whom he would start against the Crusaders, he leaned back in his chair and somewhat optimistically said, "John (Betancourt) and Julius (Erving) will be out there. After that it's anybody's guess."

With this in mind, the Holy Cross game looms even more important for the Redmen. Even with a full complement of players, UMass would have its hands full with the Crusaders. With things as they are the game should be a real battle.

Holy Cross presents the Redmen with a lot of problems. The Worcester team is a balanced, deep unit which can hurt its opponents in several areas, and can score a lot of points. The Crusaders are averaging over 86 per game and scored 138 against St. Michael's.

Leading the Crusaders is co-captain Bob Kissane. The 6'9 All-American candidate is playing as well as ever although his stats might indicate differently. He is "only" averaging 17.8 points and 10 rebounds per game but this drop from last season is easy to explain. Kissane is supported by a better all-around cast then he was a year ago.

The main addition is 6'6 forward Jim Schnurr. UMass fans will remember Schnurr from the way he demolished the Redman frosh last year. This season he is performing just as well for the varsity as he is scoring 12.2 point and grabbing 10.5 carams a game.

To support these two, the Cross has three more players averaging about 10 points per game. They are co-captain Jack Adams, forward Stan Grayson and guard Kevin Stacom. All are starters. Adams is the team leader and floor general and has started 64 of Holy Cross' 65 games since he joined the Crusaders.

Grayson is best noted for his defensive ability. For this reason, Grayson will be covering Erving and this match-up should have a great deal to do in deciding the outcome of the game. Stacom is another sophomore who broke into the starting unit and is an excellent outside shooter.

If that starting five sounds imposing, Holy Cross becomes even more so when you consider who they have sitting on the bench. For openers there is a kid named Buddy Venne who three years ago led Massachusetts schoolboys in scoring with a 37.7 average. Last year he scored 17 per game but he has been pushed from the starting lineup by Stacom. Another backcourt man available for action is sophomore Bruce Grentz, the team's best dribbler.

Helping out up front are 6'8 Gene Doyle and Don Sasso. Sasso was a starter last year but has been hampered by injuries and had an operation just prior to pre-season practice. He is recovered now, however, and could play against UMass. Doyle also ran rampant against the UMass frosh last season and he too has stepped into an important varsity role.

With so much balance, depth and height, the Crusaders should be tough to handle, especially since the game is to be played in Worcester. However, the game is one that the Redmen almost must win. With a loss to Providence already in the backgrond, UMass can hardly afford another NE loss if they are to retain their No. 1 in New England ranking given them by UPI.

Colby Stops Pucksters, 8-2

A much-improved Colby College hockey team snapped UMass' winning streak at seven games with a decisive 8-2 win at Colby Saturday night. The loss gives the Redmen a season record of 7-1 while Colby brought its record to 4-8.

Colby has benefited greatly from the eligibility of forward Steve Self who has scored 15 goals in the 10 games which he has played, including a hat-trick against the Redmen. Another evident improvement in the Colby squad is the switch of former forward Dennis Pruneau to defense where he is doing an excellent job.

Dan Reidy opened the scoring for UMass on a powerplay goal as he took a pass from Al Nickerson and flipped a backhander by Colby goalie Scott Ryerse.

The home team then exploded for eight straight goals before the Redmen were able to retaliate with a meaningless goal by Fran Mulcahy with only 18 seconds left.

Dan Reidy

Colby got goals from John Bowey, Dave Williams, and Bill Callahan in the first period to take a 3-1 lead at the end of one.

Dan Fitts scored the only goal of the second period for Colby with Self and Mike Lemoyne each picking up his second assist.

Self then scored three goals in succession in the third period. The first came on a breakaway after he had stolen the puck from Bob Bartholomew. Twenty seconds later a Self slap-shot from the blue-line somehow eluded P.J. Flaherty in the UMass nets. Lemoyne got his third assist on this goal.

Self completed his hat-trick against goalie Peter Erickson who had replaced Flaherty. Lemoyne again assisted.

Frosh Hoopmen At HC

By STEVE FERBER

With an injured floor leader, the UMass freshmen travel to Worcester to face the Holy Cross frosh tonight at 6:15. The visiting Little Redmen will face a Holy Cross squad that has recently been defeated by the Dartmouth frosh, 93-49, the latter being the freshmen's latest victim.

Rich Pitino, the freshmen's backcourt star, injured his right hand early in the Dartmouth contest last Saturday night. In the last few days his finger has swelled and although not broken he was unable to practice either Sunday or Monday. Despite his injury, Patino will play and will join teammates Peter Trow, Al Skinner, Art Levine and John Olson in their bid for victory number nine.

The Little Crusaders feature a 7'0 center, John Budris. Alongside Budris will be Jim Maley at 6'5, and Macom Moulton at 6'4. The backcourt duo will consist of 6'1 Dan Gunn and 6'0 Dave Mapp.

Despite the fact that the Holy Cross frosh have had a poor season, and appear easy victims for the visitors, the UMass frosh have had hard times in Worcester, going 1-4 over the past 5 seasons. Something might well be done to close the season series tonight.

Matmen Host Chiefs For NE Supremacy

By BOB GANLEY
Staff Reporter

The basketball team may be in Worcester tonight, but Curry Hicks cage will be anything but silent as the biggest wrestling match of the year in New England will on tap at 8 p.m., when the UMass Redmen host the Chiefs of Springfield College. The Redmen are ranked number two in New England, but that will change if they win tonight. Springfield is currently 4-5-1 and ranked number four but both are deceiving.

The Chiefs are undefeated within the six state region, with easy wins over MIT and Dartmouth and a tie with Yale. The losses have come at the hands of Ashland, 16-17, Penn State, 6-32, Courtland, 14-19, East Stroudsburg, 7-28, and California Poly, 0-38. Cal Poly went on to knock off national powerhouse Oklahoma, Ashland was third in the college nationals last year, and Penn State and East Stroudsburg are both among the top teams in the eastern part of the country. Springfield's other victories have come over Cornell, 24-10, and CW Post, 34-8.

Coach Homer Barr is trying to round his Redmen into shape for tonight's important meet. The Redmen are 5-1-1 and have the bulk of their schedule ahead of them. Barr was not at all happy with the team's 17-17 tie with Yale on Saturday, but attributed the sluggishness of the team to a 40 day layoff. "We weren't in shape against Yale and we still have a couple of weight problems, but I am expecting a very close meet tonight," Barr said. "This is without a doubt the biggest meet of the season for us and I know it is a big one for Springfield," he continued. "They have a tough team, but they have certain weaknesses and I hope we can capitalize on them."

Barr wouldn't elaborate on the weaknesses of Springfield, but he did say that it was mandatory for the Redmen to win two out of the first five matches if they hoped to have a chance.

If there are still any doubts of the strength of the Chiefs, let it be said that they have won the New England championship for twenty straight years and this years team is no exception. Mickey Lint and Steve Gaydosh are defending New England champions, while Tom Pollard won that honor two years ago. A fourth champ, Bob Meyer, has been knocked out of the starting lineup by sophomore Ray Ferraira who won the freshmen New Englands last year. Other wrestlers to watch are Stan Southender and freshman Doug Leroy.

Coach Barr will start almost the same unit which tied Yale on Saturday. The only exceptions are Ed Carlsson at 177 frosh Tom Gartland at 150 and either Tom Young, Kent Mignocci or Mike Brauner at 167. This may be the most important match in the history of UMass wrestling, and the Cage is being used to accomodate the anticipated large crowd. If you want to listen to the hoop game, bring a radio, but remember, the basketball team isn't the only number one team to play in the cage this year.

Starting lineups:

UMass	Weight	Springfield
Dave Amato	118	Bill Metts
Dave Reynolds	126	Ray Ferraira
S. Goldberg	134	Tom Pollard

Students Shape UMass Future Today

By BETH GOODELL
Staff Reporter

Long range planning tor the University has become the full time occupation of four undergraduates this semester. Compensation in the form of salaries has just been granted them and they are now attempting to get University Special Credit tor their efforts.

The task before these four students is, as they describe it, " the development of a philosophy of education tor this University." Along with several other students, they belong to the Student Senate Ad Hoc Long Range Planning Committee. It was set up last semester by the Senate in response to student dissatisfaction with a Long Range Report written by the Faculty Senate.

Chairman of the student committee, and one of the full time members to be compensated, is Nick Apostola. A sophomore, he is a senator from Greenough. The other full time members, also sophomores, are Brett Senator Dan Stearns, JFK Senator John Stevens, and Lee Lehto, a non-Senator.

In justifying the committee's request for compensation, Senators Stearns and Stevens compared their task with that of the Faculty Senate when it was preparing its report last year. A number of faculty members were released from teaching duties to handle their project for two semesters. The students also want to be able to work exclusively on their planning report.

The entire ad hoc committee is involved in the semester's project, but in the past month and a half the members say they have found that four of the most active must work full time. They have now been budgeted up to $2500 from the Provost's Office to be spent from February 1 to June 1. The funds will pay the salaries and expenses of the four staff members and a full time secretary. This will not cover the expenses of printing the report, however. The committee plans to request funds for printing from the Student Senate. The Administration has no money left in the printing budget.

The four students are still attempting to get Special Credit for their efforts. They say that Mr. Putnam Barber is giving them each three credits through Sociology 386. They also hope to get two credits from Mr. Howard Gadlin in the Psychology Department, Mr. Samuel Goldman of General Business and Finance, and Mrs. Miriam Chrisman of History. Each student would receive 12 credits in this way and take one other regular semester course.

The students expect their report to call for more changes than the Faculty Senate's did.

Committee members Stearns and Stevens characterize the Faculty Senate's Long Range Report as good but just "pragmatic", dealing with specifics instead of generalities. They would like to include more of a "philosophy" in their report, hoping that "a more comprehensive one will be more viable." They feel there is a need to promote an atmosphere conducive to change instead of making recommendations for specific changes.

There will be four stages to the committee's efforts. First of all, there will be a period of research. The committee will be doing a lot of reading and will interview numerous authorities in the field of education, as well as investigating legal issues involved such as the technicalities of faculty contracts. They will be in close touch with people at all levels of the University and of the state school system throughout Massachusetts and New England.

The second stage will consist of formulating a philosophy of education which would answer the question of 'Why does the University exist?" This is where they feel the Faculty Senate failed; the students interpret the faculty's report as an acceptance of the status quo as its academic philosophy. The students want the University to "change with the times" instead of remaining at the status quo.

In the third stage, the committee will be faced with formulating recommendations to change the University according to the philosophy it is developing. Stearns and Stevens foresee the general nature of these recommendations as dealing with "flexibility and innovation, encouraging change for the next ten years."

The committee's final step will be to write a formal report of the semester's investigation , philosophy, and recommendations. It will technically be addressed to the Student Senate but is directed to the University community as a whole, according to Stearns and Stevens.

The committee expects to complete its work by the end of the semester but may not be able to print its final report until during the summer.

UMass Committees Need More Students

By ANNE STADNICKI
Staff Reporter

An urgent need for at least fifty more interested students to involve themselves on University committees has developed, according to Student Senate Vice President, Pat Beharry.

She made the announcement yesterday in conjuction with a plea for three students to fill the semester-long vacancies on the University's master planning committee. Numerous other committees desperately require student expertise and ideas, she said.

Some knowledge in the planning field is recommended for the master planning positions, but honesty, integrity and a sincere interest and desire to help are the only qualifications for most openings, she explained.

"There is a growing respect for the student voice in all aspects of the campus, and this makes participation even more meaningful," said the Vice-President.

She emphasized how important involvement is to the Communications Board, the Faculty Senate Student Affairs Committee, and subcommittees of Student Senate standing committees. Non-senator participation is welcomed and vital to much of the Senate's activity, she said.

No great demand is made on the student's leisure time, claimed Miss Beharry. A committee such as Master Planning might involve two or three hours per week, she estimated.

"Many students don't realize how much they have to offer the University," she continued. "They don't know how great a contribution their opinions are."

She said that many students probably want to work but don't know where to start or to whom to go. No student should be apprehensive about approaching any member of the Student Senate, she said. Questions are steps toward solution of problems, she explained.

"Committees are just the place to air a criticism or satisfy an interest," Miss Beharry said.

She offered as an example Director of Planning Horace J. Littlefield's committee on the building of future dormitories. This is a vital part of a student's life, she said, and here is an opportunity for any live interested students to pass judgement on what type of dorms will be built, or even if there should be any more constructed.

The anonymity of a large University makes it easy not to be involved, easy for students to develope the idea that "they" don't need him, she continued. That this was not true at all was her conclusion.

Student government provides the greatest opportunity to affect the University, Miss Beharry said. She said that one unfortunate outcome of this situation was that the same people tended to become involved on the various committees.

This year she has tried to avoid such a development but it has resulted in the great number of vacancies now open on the committees, she said.

"I would rather see a position vacant than filled by someone who doesn't care," she added.

She continued, "Too few students accept the responsibility for making decisions, as well as carrying them out."

Pointing out her own satisfaction achieved in working for and with the University and other students, Miss Beharry said every student should be so fortunate as to experience involvement.

She declared that "so many starts can be made" even if the student is not around to witness the result of his efforts.

"What can be done this spring could have a great impact on the governance of this University," she continued, expressing optimism at what student action can and has accomplished.

Combining the fresh input of volunteers, and the seasoned experience in government and specific fields of veteran "student leaders" is the key to interaction and results in the University community now, the Vice-President said.

The Judicial review and reform committee was pointed to as a fine example of student and administrative efforts. A good perspective on the issue was achieved, said Miss Beharry.

"Perspective is the crucial element in involvement," she emphasized. Students can provide a very good perspective on what affects them at the University, she said.

Kelley Drops 18 Thousand In Three Yrs.

BOSTON AP The admitted planner of the $542,000 cash robbery of a Brink's Inc., armored truck in 1968 testified Tuesday that he does not know what happened to about $8,000 of the money.

John J. "Red" Kelley of Watertown, who has pleaded guilty to his part in the robbery, testified in Superior Court that he received $50,000 for payment to a former Brink's employe who allegedly aided the bandits.

The former Brink's agent, Andrew DeLeary, 32, of Saugus also has pleaded guilty in the case.

Kelley said he took the $50,000 to his Watertown home and had continuous possession of the money until he gave it to DeLeary.

DeLeary had said he received only $42,000 or $43,000.

"Do you know what happened to the other $7,000 or $8000?" defense Atty. Ronald J. Chisholm asked Kelley.

He said "No."

Town Blocks Students From Voting

"Fearful of a student takeover of town government, Amherst election officials are refusing to register students as voters attending three institutions of higher learning in the town", reported veteran political observer, Neil Perry in yesterday's Greenfield Recorder.

According to Perry's article "similar action is being taken by election officials in cities and towns throughout the state". But, some towns, including Holyoke, students are being registered, wrote Perry.

"The Amherst action could prompt a court suit by students to secure local voting rights granted by Massachusetts voters in a statewide referendum last November," continued Perry who works as a staff reporter for the Greenfield Recorder.

"We consider college students dependents of their parents," Amherst Town Clerk Esther Dimock said this week. "If they wish to vote, they should register in their parents' place of residence."

Mrs. Dimock said she will enroll only college students who are "year-round" residents.

Under recently enacted federal and state law, 18-year olds are allowed to register and vote in federal elections and 19 and 20-year olds are permitted to register and vote in local and state elections.

But state law is "unclear and vague" on residency requirements as applied to college students, according to Atty. Richard Howland of Amherst, counsel for the UMass Student Senate.

"It's like the old South," Atty. Howland complained. "The standards for registering voters are flexible and subject to different interpretation by local officials. There are no guidelines and local registrars are denying students the right to vote by applying their individual interpretation of the law."

Adding to the confusion is the spectre of more than 20,000 students enrolled at UMass and Amherst and Hampshire Colleges in Amherst - with the potential power to outvote the less than 5,000 registered voters in Amherst affairs.

"We really need help on this one," Amherst Town Manager Allen L. Torrey said. "We have checked with our town counsel, but hopefully guidelines will be established soon, either by the courts or by the state legislature."

Throughout the state, town clerks and registrars have applied different standards in registering full-time college students.

As in Cambridge and Worcester, Greenfield officials have refused to register "non-residents" attending Greenfield Community College" unless they are older and out of the service."

"We consider those who go to the Community College as transients," Town Clerk Josephine Y. O'Connell said this week. "While they are temporarily in college here, their legal residence is considered to be with their parents."

The criteria, according to Mrs. O'Connell, is whether a college student intends to "continue to live in Greenfield."

But in Holyoke, Registrar's Clerk Andrew Stathis said his office registers Holyoke Community College students who satisfy the legal age requirement and the state's six months' residency rules. More than 200 students under 21 have registered to vote in Holyoke since Jan. 1, Stathis added.

The Secretary of State's office acknowledged Monday that state election laws are unclear. "It's a matter of intent," a spokesman said. "If the local registrar determines that a student intends to make that town his permanent home, the student can be registered to vote. Otherwise, the student is considered a resident of his parents' community and should be registered there."

David E. Matz of Amherst., chairman of the Amherst branch of the American Civil Liberties Union, said he has been in contact with Atty. Howland, but added that no decision to challenge Mrs. Dimock in the courts has yet been made.

Complicating the Amherst issue, according to Atty. Howland, is the fact that while Mrs. Dimock has publicly announced she will sot register "non-resident" college students, some students have been registered when a request to register was made.

"She announces the standards, and then does not always apply them," Atty. Howland said. "This effectively discourages students who would normally go to the town hall to register." He added that approximately 40 students a day have gone to the Amherst town hall to register to vote.

The legislative committee on election laws, under Rep. Allan McGuane, D-Greenfield, and Sen. James F. Burke, D-Plymouth, has discussed prospective changes in state law to provide guidelines for registrars, Chr. McGuane told The Recorder.

"We have had negative legislation filed this year which provides that college students who live in dormitories not be permitted to vote locally, while students living off campus, and listed in the town street list, be permitted to do so." Chr. McGuane said.

He said his committee is now working to achieve uniform guidelines for election officials, adding he believes the power to set voter requirements should rest with the state legislature and not in local registrars' offices.

THE VOTING SNAFU - Even the above citizen, were he a UMass student who's parents lived, say, in Whittier California, would not be allowed to vote in an Amherst election. The election law interpretation by the town is now being debated.

New England Governors Boost Revenue Sharing

WASHINGTON (AP)-Four New England governors urged support Tuesday for federal revenue sharing.

Led by Gov. Francis W. Sargent, the state chief executives told members of the New England congressional delegation at a meeting they wanted to display bipartisan support for the general concept and worry about specifics later.

To a man, the governors said they have taxed their constituents almost as far as they dare in a losing effort to provide the services demanded by the people.

They said the federal government, with its vast resources and ability to operate at a deficit must come to the states' assistance.

"Most every state in the nation has a populace that is really fed right to the teeth with local property taxes," Sargent said.

Gov. Thomas Meskill, a onetime mayor and a former Republican congressman from Connecticut, said "the cities have gone about as far as they can go. Property taxes in some cities are reaching the point of confiscation."

He said he inherited a $250 million debt from the previous administration and must erase it by the end of the current fiscal year, June 30.

Gov. Frank Licht of Rhode Island said "if we do not get some relief...the crisis will move onto disaster proportions."

Licht, a Democrat, said a study showed that between 1950 and 1967 only 47 per cent of the increase in major state taxes was due to economic growth and 53 per cent resulted from legislative enactments.

Gov. Kenneth Curtis of Maine, a Democrat, was the other state executive at the meeting, held in the Capitol. Several members of the region's congressional delegation attended and most voiced qualified support of revenue sharing.

However Rep. William D. Hathaway, D Maine, said he opposes revenue sharing and Rep. James A. Burke, D Mass., indicated his displease with the idea, claiming the federal government cannot afford it. He said the states would have to be willing to give up some other form of federal assistance before getting any bloc grants under a revenue sharing proposal. Rep. Fernand J. St. Germain, D, R.I., told the governors that under a revenue sharing proposal some states would actually get less than they are now getting from the federal government.

"What do you do when your state is losing money in the program? he asked.

Sargent said he hoped any revenue sharing plan would allocate money on the basis of current expenditures as well as population. Under such a formula, he said, the New England states would generally fare well.

Curtis appeared the least desperate of the tour in painting a bleak fiscal picture.

He said that if revenue sharing is not approved he might settle for a compromise under which the federal government would assume a larger part of a state's welfare costs.

All the governors stressed that welfare costs and education are the most pressing state needs.

Govs. Walter Peterson of New Hampshire and Deane C. Davis of Vermont were not present. Sargent said they also support the revenue sharing concept.

In The Nation And The World

Spacemen Roll Toward Moon

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) - The Apollo 14 astronauts awoke chipper from a daylong rest Tuesday night and with a cry of "Jolly good!" sped on straight and true for an arrival Thursday in lunar orbit and an exploration the next day on the moon.

The astronauts, Alan B. Shepard Jr., Stuart A. Roosa and Edgar D. Mitchell, reported from space that they had each seen bright, flashing lights in the darkness of their spacecraft shortly before they had gone to sleep.

The bright flashes were thought to be caused by cosmic rays that can penetrate the walls of the craft, pierce the astronauts' eyes and contact the optic nerves Scientists have said such rays are not strong enough to cause harm.

"I think we have seen only three types of flashes so far," said Mitchell He said one was verybright, such as a super star, another was a streak, and the third was "reminiscent of lightning flashing in behind clouds."

The astronauts were asked by scientists before launch to study the cosmic ray phenomenon. Other astronauts who have flown to the moon and back have also reported the flashes, but no one before has attempted to make any observation of them.

A busy work day awaited the spacemen.

The flight plan called for Shepard and Mitchell to open a tunnel in the lunar module, Antares, attached to the command ship, Kitty Hawk. They then enter Antares and check out its system, making sure it's ready to land on the moon on Friday morning.

Earlier, before they began their rest period, the astronauts looked back in awe at their mother planet and said they already saw ahead the brownish gray texture of the moon.

Mitchell looked for long minutes at the earth, receding behind him, and told Mission Control, "It's most inviting and magnificent a view."

"I'm very glad we have earth as a home planet," he said. "I hope we can keep it so it is inviting."

Mitchell picked out several land areas, including India, China and Australia, and then turned into a weather forecaster.

"Is there still semisizable tropical storm off the east coast of Australia? Mitchell asked. "I seem to be seeing about half of a very large circulation of air mass."

Later capsule communicator Fred Haise, also an astronaut, reported there was indeed a weak cyclonic storm west of Australia.

The astronauts started a sleep period shortly after 10 a.m. EST Tuesday and were scheduled to be awakened at about 7 p.m. Earlier, an astronaut aboard the fleeting craft looked toward the moon.

"How big a moon are you seeing there," asked Haise.

"Sort of a half," said an Apollo 14 crewman. "And for size it appears about like an orange held just short of arm's length."

A few minutes later, he added, "The moon starts to take on a little bit of brown and grayish colors about this point as opposed to being so very bright as it appears from earth. You can start to see a little bit of texture."

A 10 second rocket burn Monday night changed the Apollo 14 flight plan slightly and assured it of an on time rocket into lunar orbit at 2:01 a.m. Thursday. The lunar landing is scheduled for 4:16 a.m., Friday

Mission Control said the burn Monday was not as precise as had been planned and Apollo 14 will be slightly outside the predicted point of arrival in moon orbit. This was not considered a problem, however, because later rocket firings will refine the flight path.

Apollo 14 fleeted moonward at an ever decreasing speed as the gravity pull of earth clutched at the spacecraft. The speed will continue to drop until the moon wins a gravitational tug of war with earth.

At midday Tuesday, Apollo 14 was clipping along at 2,200 miles an hour. Its speed was dropping by about 50 m.p.h. The craft picks up speed Wednesday night a few hours before it whips around the far side of the moon at 5,503 miles per hour.

Nixon Wants Cost Reform For Medicare Program

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Nixon administration wants to insert new cost sharing provisions in medicare and medicaid to shift more of the miltibillion dollar burden to those who benefit from the programs.

While officials decline to provide specific figures at this stage, it is expected savings in government spending could involve in excess of $300 million on medicare alone.

Secretary of Welfare Elliott L. Richardson told the House Ways and Means Committee Tuesday the administration would like to "limit expenditures of federal medicaid funds to those for whom they can be most effective and are most needed.

"Accordingly, we will be proposing the introduction of cost sharing plans for medicaid and medicare," Richardson said in closed door testimony which was made public.

During a break in the session, Committee Chairman Wilbur D. Mills, D. Ark., told newsmen it appeared possible that the administration's proposals might involve greater expense to patients under both programs, but that Richardson had not clarified the point.

One purpose of the changes, Richardson said, is to eliminate the abrupt cutoff of medicaid when family income reaches a certain level.

He said the administration thinks it is possible significantly to reduce the total cost of medicaid, which, along with medicare, has been soaring.

In addition to cost sharing, Richardson proposed other measures to cut costs:

- Incentives to the states to use outpatient services rather than hospitalization where appropriate, and to limit price increases of nursing homes and similar services.

- Help for them to develop better systems of surveillance, claims processing and review.

- Further incentives for the states to use full care health maintenance organizations that emphasize preventive medicine.

- Authority for the secretary to set limits on charges and better systems for disallowing excessive increases in doctors' fees.

Postal Hike Announced With Eight Cent Stamp

WASHINGTON (AP) - The U.S. Postal Service unveiled Tuesday a rate increase package headed by an eight cent letter stamp that officials said would put the mails on a sound financial basis for the first time in decades.

In addition to a two cent increase in regular first class postage, there would be a one cent hike in the cost of airmail stamps, an eventual doubling of newspaper and magazine rates, and a one third increase in rates for advertising.

The proposed new rates must be cleared by the independent postal rate commission established by the postal reorganization legislation of last year. If the commission does not act within 90 days, temporary increases may be put into effect after 10 more days.

Since the proposal went to the rate commission Monday, the earliest date for an increase is May 11 - 100 days. However, postal officials said the temporary increases are likely to go into effect "on or about May 15."

Asst. Postmaster Gen. James W. Hargrove, wjo outlined the rate package at a news conference, said the proposals will allow the postal service to "operate on a sound financial basis for the first time in many years."

Laird Slams Volunteer Army

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird rejected Tuesday the idea that frontline soldiers in an all volunteer Army would consist primarily of blacks and other disadvantaged, minority citizens.

"This will not be the major problem," he said. "We will have a well rounded, well trained military service" if Congress provides sufficient pay and education incentives.

He estimated it would cost an additional $5 million a year for servicemens salaries if the nation is to attract and keep sufficient volunteers so the draft can be ended safely.

Laird gave his views before a skeptical Senate Armed Services Committee as he presented the administration's plea for a two year extension of the draft and 50 per cent pay hike for lower grade enlisted men as part of the plan to eliminate the draft by mid 1973.

Committee Chairman John C. Stennis, D. Miss., said going into the marketplace to compete on a salary basis for men would attract a great number of "dropouts, misfits, ne'er do wells, whatever you want to call them."

BOARDER CONTROVERSY-Nations across the globe were "confused" yesterday be reported U.S. troop movement near the Laotian boarder.

Nations "Confused" Over U.S.-Laos Action

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Confusion mounted yesterday over what is happening in Laos amid claims from both sides of the Iron Curtain that South Vietnamese troops with U.S. support had invaded the little kingdom through which Hanoi has been funneling supplies to battlefields in South Vietnam.

In Moscow, Premier Alexei Kosygin said South Vietnamese troops had invaded Laos and charged that the United States "is still advancing down the road of aggression."

He said "new reports coming in today" have shown that South Vietnamese troops with the support of their "American masters spread the military actions in southern Laos."

"The peaceful public of the whole world protests angrily against this new American venture," Kosygin declared at a luncheon in honor of visiting Syrian strongman Hafez Assad.

Japan's Kyodo News Service reported from Saigon that 4,000 to 5,000 South Vietnamese air borne troops parachuted into southern Laos on Monday, but there was no substantiation from any other source.

The Japanese news service claimed that the paratroopers were supported by U.S. planes and helicopters and would try to cut North Vietnamese supply routes in Laos. Kyodo said well informed sources in Saigon asserted that the U.S. Air Force was assisting in the operation, but that no U.S. ground troops were participating.

The dispatch said between 7,000 and 20,000 enemy troops were reported to have infiltrated into southern Laos recently, and that the South Vietnamese would be operating for a week or 10 days on the Bolovens Plateau-95 to 125 miles south of the former U.S. Marine base at Khe Sanh in northern South Vietnam.

Laotian officials in Vientiane, as well as foreign diplomats in the Laotian capital, speculated that a South Vietnamese invasion of the country could trigger a coup and a military response from Red China.

Foreign diplomats said the Red Chinese might feel their security threatened by a South Vietnamese invasion into Laos, which borders the Chinese mainland.

In Washington, Secretary of Defense Melvin Laird refused to comment on reports that allied forces had launched a massive assault against a Communist buildup in the border area of south Vietnam and Laos.

But he declared that no U.S. ground troops have been sent into Laos and pledged that none would be sent, in keeping with congressional structures.

Meanwhile, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee called on the Nixon administration to tell about military operations near Laos, and said it has invited Laird and Secretary of State William P. Rogers to testify about the situation "as soon as possible."

U.S. Food Aid Funds Used For Weapons

WASHINGTON (AP) - The State Department told Congress Tuesday that $693.1 million in Food For Peace funds have been converted into military assistance for Korea and South Vietnam, and other countries since 1965.

Undersecretary of State John N. Irwin, testifying before the Senate House Economic Committee, said the conversions were made with U.S. permission over the past six years from local currencies generated by the program.

Irwin released statistics showing that in the period 1965-70, South Vietnam converted $446 million in Food For Peace funds for military purposes and Korea got $221.3 million.

The money derives from the sale of American foodstuffs for local currencies. Irwin said the money can be used for any purpose that the receiving country sees fit, consistent with its wellbeing and security.

Sen. William Proxmire, (D-Wis.) the committee chairman, noting that such funds are not subject to the usual congressional authorization and appropriation, told Irwin:

"If a country needs these funds for security reasons, it should make the case on that basis, rather than to pervert Food For Peace to food for war."

Sen. George McGovern, (D-S.D.) the first director of the Food For Peace program, testified Congress must move quickly to consolidate all provisions of existing law which affect U.S. military assistance to other nations to improve its ability to supervise the programs properly.

Fulbright, Senate Press Nixon For More Details

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate Foreign Relations Committee, frustrated at having to rely on news accounts for information about a reported U.S. backed offensive in Indochina, asked the Nixon administration Tuesday for a report as soon as possible.

Chairman J.W. Fulbright, (D-Atk.) said Secretary of State William P. Rogers and Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird were being asked to appear "in public session if they will, in the near future or if not, in private session to clarify what our policies are."

Fulbright announced also plans for what could become the committee's most far ranging public hearings on Vietnam since the Johnson administration.

Administration officials, senators and war critics would testify on ways to end the Indochina conflict at hearings which Fulbright said might start later this month.

For the moment, senators were finding it difficult to comment on the reported push by South Vietnamese troops, backed by U.S. air power, in the northern party of South Vietnam and in Laos.

There are these straws in the wind:

- In Tokyo, Kyodo News Service reported from Saigon that 4,000 to 5,000 South Vietnamese paratroopers jumped into southern Laos on Monday, but there was no substantiation from other sources.

"No comment," said a Pentagon spokesman. Kyodo said the paratroopers were supported by U.S. planes and helicopters and would try to cut North Vietnamese supply routes.

- The Soviet news agency Tass quoted Premier Alexei N. Kosygin as saying South Vietnamese troops had invaded Laos and said the United States "is still advancing down the road of aggression." Kosygin said new reports Tuesday showed the South Vietnamese with the support of their "American masters spread the military actions in southern Laos."

- Secretary Laird was on Capitol Hill and was asked, "What's going on in Laos and in Vietnam, what can you tell us, sir?"

Laird replied: "We had a very pleasant hearing this morning before the Senate Armed Services Committee on the extension of the draft for two years."

Connally Gets Comm. Nod

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate Finance Committee gave 13-0 approval Tuesday to the nomination of John B. Connally as secretary of the Treasury, acting after the former Texas governor testified earlier government service cost him nearly $500,000.

The action apparently ensured easy Senate confirmation for Connally who would become the only Democrat in President Nixon's Cabinet. The vote was originally announced as 11 to 0, but two other senators recorded their votes later.

The Ombudsman shall be appointed by the President of the University upon the recommendation of a joint selection committee consisting of three faculty members appointed by the Secretary of the Faculty Senate, two under-graduate students appointed by the President of the Student Senate, one graduate student appointed by the President of the Graduate Student Senate, and the Dean of Students. The Ombusman shall be a faculty member at the University and shall receive appropriate released time from other duties to enable him to adequately perform his functions. If circumstances warrant, a student co-ombudsman may be appointed and an appropriate salary established. Only students enrolled on a full-time basis at the University shall be eligible for this position. If a student is appointed, his jurisdiction shall be determined solely by himself and the Ombudsman.

The Ombudsman shall be appointed for a term of two years. In case of a vacancy in the office, a successor shall be appointed to serve a two-year term connecting upon the date of his appointment. No Ombudsman may serve more than two consecutive terms in office.

III. STAFF

The Ombudsman shall be provided with the necessary staff and services to enable him to fulfill his function.

IV. FUNCTION

The function of the Ombudsman shall be to assist any petitioner in the procurement of a just settlement of a grievance. All members of the University community are expected to cooperate with the Ombudsman in the discharge of his duties.

V. PROCEDURES

Every complaint or grievance by a petitioner to the Ombudsman shall be submitted in writing.

If in the course of his duties it appears to the Ombudsman that under existing channels there is an adequate remedy or right of appeal, or if it appears that, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, any further action is unnecessary, he may in his discretion refuse to pursue the matter further.

If in his opinion the subject matter of the complaint is frivolous, or vexatious, or is not made in good faith, or the complainant has no sufficient personal interest in the subject matter of the complaint, the Ombudsman shall not be required to investigate the complaint.

In any case where the Ombudsman decides not to investigate or further investigate a complaint, he shall inform the complainant of that decision and shall state his reasons therefor in writing.

Every investigation by the Ombudsman shall be conducted with due respect for the privacy and reputation of others.

No person shall be entitled as of right to be heard by the Ombudsman, except that before any report is issued, persons or organizations adversely affected by such report must have been afforded an opportunity to be heard.

VI. REPORTS

The Ombudsman shall issue a report in every case where, after making any investigation, he is of the opinion that the decision, act, or omission which was the subject matter of the investigation:

a. Appears to have been contrary to written rules; or

b. Was unreasonable, unjust, oppressive, or improperly discriminatory, or was in accordance with any rule that is unreasonable, unjust oppressive, or improperly discriminatory; or

c. Was based wholly or partly on a mistake of fact or interpretation of rules.

The Ombudsman may recommend that:

a. The matter should be referred to the appropriate authority for further consideration; or

b. An omission should be rectified, or

c. A decision should be cancelled or changed; or

d. Any practice on which the decision, act, or omission was based should be altered; or

e. Any rule on which the decision, act, or omission was based should be reconsidered; or

f. Reasons should have been given for a decision; or

g. Any other steps should be taken.

The Ombudsman shall report his opinion, and his reasons therefore, to the appropriate organization or person, and may make such recommendations as he sees fit. In any such case he may request the organization, or person involved, to notify him, within a specified time, of the steps that it proposes to take to implement his recommendations.

If within a reasonable time after issuance of the report, no action is taken which appears satisfactory to the Ombudsman, he may send a copy of his report and recommendations to the President of the University.

The Ombudsman shall in any case inform the complainant of the result of the investigation and recommendations.

The Ombudsman shall submit a written report at the beginning of May of each year to the Faculty, Graduate Student, and Student Senates, to the President of the University, and to the Board of Trustees of the University on the general functioning of his office. Copies of this report shall be made available for general distribution. In addition, from time to time he shall issue such other reports as he may determine necessary.

UM Infirmary Clinic Under Study

(Editor's Note-This is the third of a five-part series compiled for the Daily Collegian. The series deals with recent changes in Health Service practices prompted by the results of student surveys over the past two years.)

When something is too small to see, too big to examine all at once, or too complex to completely comprehend, it is often helpful to build and study a model to learn more about it.

A systems analysis team has done just this in connection with the outpatient clinic at the University Health Services. In this case the models were built on a computer.

The results of this modeling have provided more appointments for students and more time with the physician without increasing appreciably the time the student spends waiting to be seen.

The analysis team included Edward J. Rising, Ph.D., Professor of Industrial Engineering, Robert Baron, Graduate Student in Industrial Engineering, Barry Averill, Assistant Director of the Health Services, and Robert Gage, M.D., Director, University Health Services. This team, working with a Faculty Research Grant from the Graduate School, constructed a simulation model of the outpatient department of the Health Services as it operated last year. After studying the model, the team came up with several innovative approaches to scheduling physicians so walk-in patients could be seen between scheduled appointments.

The new ideas were shared with members of the staff of the Health Services who made several additional suggestions. All the ideas looked promising. Therefore, a new simulation was constructed incorporating the new ideas. This enabled the staff to identify and select the scheduling strategy that made the most appropriate use of the professional staff within the limitations of the present building.

Following the studies, considerable time and effort was expended in adapting the facilities to accommodate the new approach and to implement the new system during the fall of 1970.

The improved system permits the Health Services to offer 50% more appointments to students at times when student "walk-ins" are the lightest. This approach tends to balance the number of students requesting to see a physician at any given time, which uses the physician's time more efficiently and keeps the waiting time from rising prohibitively during normally busy hours.

Unfortunately, because of inherent space limitations, the new system cannot eliminate the waiting time entirely. Continued use of the appointment system by students for non-acute illnesses and examinations will help keep the waiting time as short as can be expected until the new addition to the Health Center is completed.

The system is still under investigation and the team plans to continue to work actively in developing solutions to these and other problems as they arise. "We are glad that our work has shown results so soon, but we still have a great deal to learn, and a great deal to do", explains Professor Rising. "Efforts of this sort are becoming more important since modern medicine is moving towards more group practices in organized clinical settings."

The use of computer simulation modeling as a tool in decision-making has great potential in improving methods of health delivery care here as well as in other components of the health care system. "Further benefits will accrue to the students as additional facilities are available", states Mr. Averill. "Use of this technique will help in planning the necessary expansion of the University's health program without the substantial increases in costs which have been experienced elsewhere in the health field."

Pax Domini Sit Semper Vobiscum

I hereby resign from the Daily Collegian. Edward abdicates again.

The world will little note nor long remember what I said here. Nevertheless, it has been important to me, and by logical extension, I at least harbor the illusion that some one else reads what I write. It is to those people who have read my stuff regularly that I address myself today. Hi, readers.

I could have quoted at least a thousand more songs, including some from the Top Ten. I haven't run out of songs to quote, or of opinions, or words. I've just run out of columns.

It has meant a lot to me, people telling me they liked what I wrote, people telling me they didn't like what I wrote, people sitting in the Hatch, reading what I wrote as I walked by, people writing me letters about what I wrote. Even people asking why I didn't write, when that occured. The people in the Daily Collegian office have been friendly, and have been friends. At one point I even started to get into journalese.

Having a column in the MDC has been occasionally an ego trip, and for a long time it was a satisfying feeling. The feeling, however, is gone. After this column, I'm gone.

Before I go, I should like to thank everyone who deserves thanks. I'd like to mention Peter Massa and Jackie Parmentier. Right after this, I hand in my soapbox, so I'll run the risk of boring people, and wax philosophical one more time in print. If you will indulge me, then, a capsule version of the Ed Bryant philosophy, and then will you please walk me to the corner.

Granted, there is a lot of crap in life. Nevertheless, life is worthwhile.

Dropping the walls is worth it.

People have a tendency to cheat themselves. Don't cheat yourself.

Bobby Orr is good, sure, but Reggie Leach will make everyone forget whatshisname.

I am not Prince Hamlet, nor was meant to be. But we have our similarities.

Take New Guinea, Madagascar, and Kamchatka on your first turn, and you've got the game.

If I have but one hour to strut the stage before I am heard no more, I don't want to do it sitting around on my ass.

Thou shall not kill.

That's about it. Waiting is. Goodbye.

Forgotten Laughter, Forgotten Prayer

By W.H. AUDEN

If you are thinking about making the world better for the future, what kind of knowledge about the past will you need? This can vary. I think that at this particular point in history, the things we have to study--and here we need the help of historians--are the various European revolutions, starting, let us say, with the Papal Revolution, then coming on to the Reformation, the English Revolution, the American Revolution, the French Revolution, the Russian Revolution. Those things have to be studied; we can learn from them. The rejection of the past, I think, is all nonsense.

I must say I agree very much, about tradition and the past, with a remark by Chesterton, when he says, "Tradition means giving votes to that obscurest of classes, our ancestors. It is the democracy of the dead. Tradition refuses to surrender to the arrogant oligarchy of those who merely happen to be walking around."

I think that a lot of people have fotgotten two of the three worlds I think essential for life. A number have forgotten how to laugh--and by that I don't mean the Voltariansmile of reason, I mean belly laughter, which I shall talk about in a moment as the spirit of carnival--and how to pray.

If I talk about prayer, I think the petitionary side of it is purely a preliminary, superficial thing, because it is quite involuntary. Naturally, we are always asking: Can I marry the girl I love? Can I sell my house? or whatever. But a prayer really begins at the point at which one listens to a voice. I am not going to argue with people about this; I would call it the voice of the Holy Spirit, you could call it the inner light. The only things you cannot call it, you cannot call it reason, and you cannot call it the superego, because the superego could never say anything new.

On the other side is what I would call--connected with laughter as I think of it--the spirit of carnival, as exemplified in the Saturnalia, in medieval carnival, and the Roman carnival brilliantly described by Goethe in February of 1776. In the world of the vita activa there is no question of equality. There is a special kind of equality in the case of prayer. In the case of carnival, there is complete equality.

Essentially, what is carnival about? Here the great writers about it are Rabelais and Dickens. It is a common celebration of our common fate as members of our species. Here we are, mortal, born into the world, we must die, and this applies to everybody, so that there is a mixture. This is what laughter also implies, because laughter is both an act of protest and an act of acceptance.

There is joy in the fact that we are all in the same boat, that there are no exceptions made. On the other hand, we cannot help wishing that we had no problems--let us say, that either we were in a way unthinking like the animals or that we were disembodied angels. But this is impossible; so we laugh because we simultaneously protest and accept.

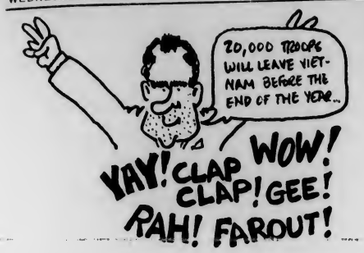
It seems to me, for example, that the hippies are trying--and quite rightly because this tends to disappear in a technological civilization--to revive the spirit of carnival. Unfortunately, it will fail, I think, insofar as they reject the active life of work in between.



Trying to think about what changes have come about through astronomy and physics in our position in the physical universe, I look at it this way. It is true--and from a Christian point of view this seems to me essential--that it is absolutely right that the physical universe should exist etsi Deus non daretur (as if God did not exist). It has to be purged of all kinds of polytheism, which is then expecting, on the earth, God to do for us what we are supposed to do for him. Just as Adam was put in the Garden of Eden to dress it, we are here to look after the universe. By that I think that one has to help the universe realize goals which it cannot realize itself.

If I want to use an analogy, I say that in regard to the inorganic universe, I see our relation rather like that of a sculptor. No sculptor whom I have spoken to thinks of enforcing his forms on nature. He thinks: "I lay bare, I realize in a stone, a form that is latently there."

I think we might have a decent world if it were universally recognized that to make a hideous lampshade, for example, is to torture helpless metals. And that every time we make a nuclear weapon, we corrupt the morals of a host of innocent neutrons below the age of consent.

In Case Of Accident

To The Editor:

Due to the vagaries of the weather this time of year or other less palatable reasons, there seems to be an escalation of motor vehicle collisions of both single and multiple varieties. I would appreciate your calling your readers' attention to some rather simple rules in the event of an accident.

1. See to the care of any injured person being very mindful of other vehicles that won't know you have had an accident unless you warn them in time. Many people get hurt after accidents worse then they do in them.

2. Cause someone to summon assistance if required while the injured are attended to.

3. Summon police, if required.

4. If it is necessary to move vehicles for the protection of others, (including following cars) do so. If not, wait until police have looked at the situation. In Vermont, for instance, if you move your car you may lose your right to recover from the other party - But sacrifice that possibility fast if someone else can get hurt because you leave the car in the street.

5. Take down names of witnesses and parties to the accident and their addresses. You must let others know your name, address, and license number it you are in an accident. Don't talk about insurance or responsibility for the accident. Leave that until a later time, your insurance company's advice and your lawyer's advice. Restrain the impulse to confess or get a confession.

6. If you have time, make a diagram of what happened.

7. When things have calmed down, at home or whatever, call your insurance company and get their advice.

8. Do not authorize repairs or other expenses, except towing when required, without asking your insurance company and/or your lawyer about who's going to pay for them. If you incur expenses that aren't necessary before asking you run a high likelihood that it'll come out of your pocket.

9. Try to keep priorities in order and don't panic (that's easy to say). After all once you whack someone or something or get whacked its a good time to stop and relax. Get your wits about you and try not to litigate your perfect case when there is no judge. You might also keep in mind the fact that there is not a damn thing you can do to get "unwhacked".

All of these elaborated rules can be summed up in three sentences: First, take care of people and property to avoid new or increased harm. Second, jot down the facts, names, addresses etcetera as best you know them or can remember them. Third, act to repair damage and assess costs only with the advice of your insurance company and your lawyer.

Very truly yours

Glickie

To the editor:

Right on, Don Glickstein. There is always an intellectual snob ready to pounce on "Love Story." or "Mary Poppins." They seem to think they have a monopoly on taste, simply because they look down on the "masses." It takes guts to stand up to them. I salute you.

When all is said and done, what really counts is that you put on a good show.

Sincerely,
Pablo Fanques

Nickie

To the editor:

Congratulations to Bob Pena and Nick McGarry, who were chosen in the NFL Draft by Cleveland and Boston respectively. I was glad to see Nick get drafted even though he wasn't allowed to play this year.

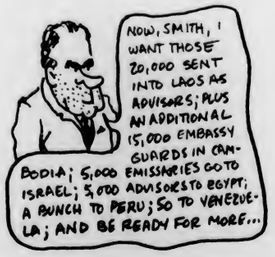
You people at UMass have a lot to look forward to. Next year you'll have two UMass stars in the Super Bowl: Greg Landry and Nick McGarry. Right on, guys

Respectfully,
Randy Vataha

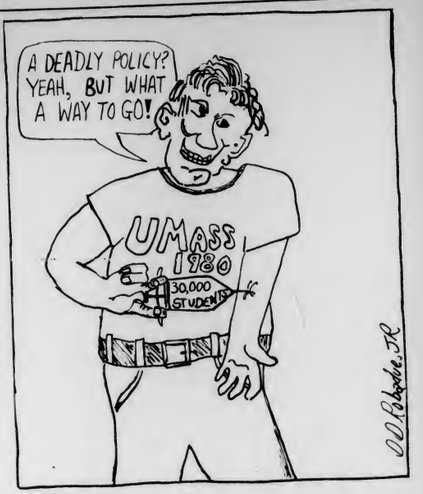
P.S. Nick, be sure you tell Plunkett his hair looks good on the day of the game. He throws best when he's happy.

Temporary I.D.'s

To the editor:



Having just re-entered the University after several years I was quite happy about the warm and helpful meetings I received from my advisor Dr. William Randall. I continued to receive polite and efficient handling of my affairs all through registration and course changes. The new friends I encountered at the Hatch reinforced my thoughts about students; all were sincere and helpful.



All glad tidings were shaken Saturday night as my wife and I tried to attend the Northeastern game. I was not admitted as a student because I had a temporary I.D. The man at the door said "temporary I.D.'s float around here by the hundreds." I then presented him with my drivers license which has my picture displayed. Still no go. More than twenty-five others were turned away from this game because of the same reason. My questions are: why with other proof of identification aren't these temporary I.D.'s accepted at the games? Why hasn't this situation been rectified before? Why does it take 6 weeks to get a permanent I.D.? This process could be accomplished in five minutes per renewal of driver licenses.

I am an undergraduate paying fees for support of University teams. If it is University policy to issue temporary I.D.'s for six weeks which aren't viable why not faster service on permanent cards now.

We enjoy sports and don't want to be held back for a useless green card called a temporary I.D.

Hopefully,
Bill Ibsen

We Are All Feminists

Only a couple of years ago very few people even knew what the word feminism meant (except that it had something to do with Jean-Paul Sartre's "girlfriend"). But today the Women's Liberation Movement is, in a very real sense, a household word. Feminism is discussed on the women's pages and elsewhere in major newspapers. Professors are not quite so blatantly misogynist as before. Abortion laws, job discrimination, and childcare practices are everywhere under attack.

Of course the media has lionized the feminist movement: it's cute or outrageous or laughable; PLAYBOY even thinks it's sexy. But what is most significant is that feminism is serious and growing. In just the past two years feminist groups have sprung up in nearly every city in the United States. Even the YWCA has been transformed!

The size and organization of the Women's Liberation Movement was made clear last August 26 when no fewer than 40,000 women demonstrated in New York City alone around three demands: free twenty-four hour community controlled childcare, equal pay for equal work, and free abortion on demand. The demonstrations on that day amassed thousands upon thousands of women throughout the United States, stunning even the women who had organized the actions. Since then, Black and Third World women, high school and university women, and countless women who had until recently considered themselves "just housewives" have begun to identify with the Women's Liberation Movement.

These women have joined the Women's Liberation Movement not because they hate men, but because they hate the institutions that have deprived them of adequate birth control information and devices, that have deprived them of abortions, that have deprived them of any number of jobs and educational advantages; they hate the low wages and long hours, the subservience, the submission expected of them. That is, they hate the institutions that deprive them of the dignity and respect normally accorded only to white males between the ages of 21 and 59.

If women on this campus can obtain birth control devices, if they can by hook or more accurately by crook get abortions, if they are free of childcare worries, they still have to contend with the fact that their college education will earn them only 48% of the wages of their male counterparts (however mediocre these men might be). They still have to contend with a society that sanctions marriage and motherhood as their only "legitimate" occupation. (and for those men who are now groaning "If only I could sit home all day drinking beer and watching the soap operas...."--they have only to do it. If all the old men who support the War in Southeast Asia would get up and go there and if all the young men who are so keen on the rewards of home and family would go there, then the rest of us would be free to choose what we want to make of our lives. As it stands now that choice is simply not offered to most women.)

At any rate, regardless of their relatively privileged status (compared to, say, Black women on welfare in New York City) women at this university suffer economically, politically, socially, simply because they were born female. This situation is compounded if the woman is Black or gay.

In order to begin to free ourselves -- liberation is not something you ask for -- women at the university have formed a Women's Liberation group to discuss the problems that confront us as women and to devise solutions. Every woman who has ever had an abortion, every woman who has ever been raped or assaulted, every woman who has ever lost a job because she is a woman, every woman who is dissatisfied with her role as baby-sitter cum sex object, every woman who has ever been patted on the head or pinched or whistled at by some cretin simply because she is a woman -- that is, every woman is invited to come to the first Women's Liberation meeting of this semester. It will be held in the women's center (in the Free University, where the old bookstore used to be) at 6:00 pm tonight, Wednesday, Feb. 3. We will be discussing the politics of Women's Liberation and what we expect from the Women's Liberation Movement in general and from this group, this semester specifically. Bring suggestions, arguements, questions. Bring your friends. Bring your sisters.

Student Meditators Meet Minds in Mahar

By DENISE MAGNELL
Monday Issue Editor

"An Introduction to the Principles and Practice of Transcendental Meditation" will be the topic of a SIMS- sponsored lecture in Mahar Auditorium tomorrow night at 8:00 p.m.

The featured speakers of the lecture will be the regional coordinator of SIMS, Joseph Clarke, and another SIMS representative, Phil Goldberg.

SIMS the Students International Meditation Society, is a non-profit, educational organization which teaches transcendental meditation both through group and personal instruction.

Viewed by Mr. Goldberg as "progress in self-development which any man can practice with no intellectual ability or particular beliefs required", he maintains that transcendental meditation "expands the conscious capacity of the mind...relieves deep-rooted stresses and strains...offers very deep rest to the body...generally makes life more enjoyable."

Transcendental meditation, based on the premise that "no man has a right to suffer," has been offered as a course labeled the "science of creative intelligence" at many universitites and colleges across the nation including Stanford, University of Colorado (presently), the University of California at Berkeley, Goddard. At Harvard and Yale the course is still in the proposals stages. Not offered under the auspices of any particular department, the course is usually taught on a one-semester basis.

Presently the physiological effects of the meditation are being studied at UCLA.

According to Goldberg, it is thought to "represent a fourth state of consciousness unique from the other three (sleeping, waking, dreaming) in heart rate, respiration rate, and brain waves.

"It indicates a state of restful alertness, with the body resting and the mind alert," he added.

By taking time to meditate twice a day, morning and evening, he feels that transcendental meditation can be utilized "not as an escape, but as an enhancement."

Goldberg is one of 360 students of the Maharish Mahesh Yogi of India, founder of the Movement, who recently completed a 3-month course, the first of that time length to be taught by the Maharishi in the U.S. From there the students travel to all parts of the country spreading the teachings of the Maharishi.

Providing instruction only at the International Academy of Meditation in India prior to last summer, Maharishi Mahesh Yogi will be in the United States until next winter. At this time there are several thousand members of the Society, a great many of whom are Americans.

Seniors Quizzed Ignorant Of Class Budget Freeze

Results of the recent questionnaire referendum completed by some 1200 students on Registration Day show that most of the respondents are unaware of the fact that senior class funds have been frozen nor that the senior class officers are responsible for a total budget of $70,000.

The questionnaire, which was sponsored by the senior class officers also showed that while seniors do not favor the present concert format on campus, the majority showed a favorable response towards a Free Spring concert.

Seniors also indicated that while they were not interested in becoming involved in making decisions concerning class government that they do favor class sponsored scholarship funds, Senior Day, Class Gift and the Speakers Program. The majority also indicated that they had participated in the class elections and felt that class governments were most important in the Senior year.

In addition, the majority felt that while they did not favor the $5.00 alumni tax paid for receiving the Alumni magazine, those who were not in favor of class governments do strongly favor an approximate $5.00 refund for unnecessary overtaxation.

Seniors were also asked to indicate the number of people who they felt should represent the 3,300 members of the class in the handling of the $70,000 class budget. The greatest number of seniors indicated that they felt that a representation of between 33 to 60 people would be an adequate and fair representation. Other numbers favored were 5 to 15 people or 16 to 32 people.

Representatives of the class indicated that the results were favorable an substantial in indicating the feelings and opinions of the members of the Senior class.

Nigerian Ambassador Opens Black Art Center Sunday

Objects selected for exhibition will be illustrative of a particular period and technique, and will reflect the powerful imagery and charismatic qualities of black art.

Like most university art galleries and museums, the Black Cultural Center Art Gallery will be dependent upon financial donations and works of art in order to expand its collection. One of the notable works now in place in the gallery is a Bambara sculpture donated by Dagmar Reutlinger, Curator of the Herter Hall Gallery, University of Massachusetts.

In addition, the gallery has also received a notable collection of African sculptures from the Afro-American Studies Department. Mr. & Mrs. Robert E. Cole of Amherst, and other donors who deserve individual acknowledgement but wish to remain anonymous.

The Black Cultural Center Art Gallery at UMass (formerly Mills House) will be offically opened on Sunday, February 7. The guest speaker at the opening ceremony will be His Excellency Joe Iyalle, the Nigerian Ambassador to the United States.

The gallery is on the first floor of the redecorated southside of the center. On the same floor as the gallery, is the slide projection room and the office of the gallery staff.

The gallery will be used for the exhibition of an extensive collection of Afro-American and African arts and crafts from all periods. In this capacity, it will serve a dual purpose of fulfilling a cultural need of the Amherst community, and in offering students and scholars in the five college area works of art of a high quality within a museum setting.

The first exhibition will feature works of sculpture, painting, fabrics, fabric designs, drawings, and selected artifacts from several African states.

The exhibition is co-sponsored by the Afro-American Studies Department and the Black Cultural Center and will be opened to the public on Monday, February 8, and continue to February 28 from 9:00 A.M. to 5:00 P.M. daily. There will be a definitive catalog available written by the faculty of the Afro-American Studies Department of the University alter the exhibition.

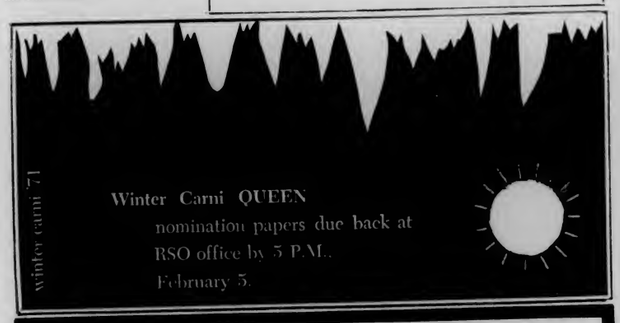
CC Garage Drives Prices Downward

Campus Center parking garage rates have been slashed across the board in an effort to increase the occupancy levels of the structure, which has been open since last summer.

The hourly rates for all cars, regardless of their ownership will be reduced from $.25 for the first hour and $.15 for each additional hour to $.10 per hour, next Monday.

Monthly student rates will fall from $14.00 to $10.00 and faculty rates will dip to $15.00.

Don Wykiski, of the Campus Center urges all season ticket holders to contact him to make necessary adjustments and extensions.



According to Wykoski, the occupancy levels in the garage have "been rising nicely", but, in order to meet projected levels the management of the Campus Center decided to institute the decrease in rates.

There may always be an England, but will it ever be more accessible than this summer? The UMass Oxford Summer Seminar says "no" and is still accepting qualified applicants to prove it. And these are definitely not limited to English majors.

The cost is $850; this includes round trip air fare, 3 nights in London, tuition, room & board at Trinity College, Oxford. Tickets are also provided to a theater scene that encompasses Shakespeare, ballet, and the best of the contemporary productions.

There is a limited amount of financial aid available. Successful applicants should contact the Financial Aid Office in Whitmore for an evaluation of their needs. In addition, they may request that their needs be brought to the attention of Mrs. Barbara Burn, Director of International Programs. Mrs. Burn has funds appropriated by the Student Senate to help UMass undergrads who study abroad in programs providing degree credits.

It all begins with a handsake and an introduction... Then, before you know it, you're a pledge... There's the annual football game against the brothers... The brothers win, the referee is paid off, and the pledges learn a little more about the fraternal bond... At the end of the pledge period, you're close enough to beat anyone... And you're initiated brothers... Then, there are quiet moments alone with your date after a big weekend... Frantic final minutes before a Homecoming float is ready to roll... And, at house meetings, a chance to make decisions that shape the fraternity's future... On the intramural field, a discouraging loss... But, win or lose, you still seem to walk away a team... But there's a lot of hard work to fraternity, too... Work spent fixing up the house for a parents weekend... Work to constantly improve the values of the house... Academic success... Maybe a house office... Or a pinning... And then graduation... Somehow when you leave you seem to understand what words like this can't express... The fraternity idea... It's something more than floats, parties, exchanges, house meetings, athletics and academic achievement. There are no words for this, just experience... And the fraternity experience ends as it began... With a handshake.

Come see for yourself...

Major Issues Discussed By WFCR News Series

Seven live Wednesday night broadcasts over radio WFCR (88.5FM) will bring public discussions of Vietnam, environment, and world peace into living rooms from Feb. 10 to March 31 as UMass presents another Great Decisions program.

The program is being sponsored by Apple Corps, a student group from the Orchard Hill residence complex, and each of the 7:30 p.m. Wednesday sessions will be in the Noah Webster House lounge, with a live audience.

Great Decisions is a public opinion program of the Foreign Policy Association, a national, non-partisan, non-profit organization founded in 1918 to inform the public on international efforts. In the discussion study booklet are opinion ballots which may be sent to Congressmen or the Secretary of State.

Professors from the Five-College area will be moderators and panelists for the seven forums. Questions will be welcomed from the live audience which is urged to obtain copies of "Great Decisions 1971," study material for the sessions from the N. H. Webster House library weekday evenings or by phoning Valerie Foster at 546-6862 or Prof. Luther Allen at 545-1782. Prof. Allen of the UMass government department, will moderate all but the first discussion.

Dates and topics:

Feb. 10--"Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia: Which way to peace and when?" Moderator: Terence Burke, UMass geography department; panelists: Luther A. Allen, UMass government department; John H. Fenton, UMass government department; John Fitzgerald, UMass graduate student; and Russell Johnson, secretary of peace education of the American Friends Service Committee in Cambridge.

Changing Life Styles

By GILBERT J. SALK
Staff Reporter

CULTURNATIVES is a new weekly column which will deal with some of my ideas about how to create and support alternative life styles. If you feel at all trapped by the dominant culture in America today, some of the ideas and information presented here may help you decide how you can break out and start living your own life.

Obviously, Neither I nor anyone else can tell you what you should do--that decision is yours to make for yourself. But the problem for many is that they either do not know that there are any viable alternatives or that they feel it is impossible to really live a style of life which is truly rewarding. I hope that CULTURNATIVES will encourage people to think some more about what their potential is, about how oureducational, economic, military, and social institutions all conspire to limit the uses to which we put our potential, to achieve that potential.

I feel very strongly that the thing that makes most of our ideas for change "impossible" is our belief that change is impossible. We don't do enough to try to change our personal environments. The first change that has to be made is an internal one. We have to believe that we can do the things we set out to do. Then "no" is not an acceptable answer. We insist upon knowing why not, and the reasons become things which can be argued down, circumvented, or ignored. They can be dealt with.

People talk about buying land, for instance. However, they usually don't do it because they don't have the money and can't raise it. But suppose you are one of those people. Do you have five friends who also want to buy land but don't have the money? Suppose you all agree to save $1000 this summer. Suddenly you have $5000, which will buy a whole bunch of acres in Vermont.

After that, money becomes even less of a problem. Houses can be built from scrap lumber ripped off from construction sites. Or you can put an ad in some papers offering to tear down old barns for cheap. You get paid and have free wood. And barn beams make much better frames for houses than a lot of the stuff you buy new.

If you're hassled by not knowing how to build a house, do not despair. The key word is access, and it is easily available. If you haven't discovered The Whole Earth Catalog or The Mother Earth News yet, get on the stick. Whole Earth is a digest of access, summarizing books, magazines, tools and almost everything else you will need to build your alternative, be it a house, free school, well, commune, food co-op, or whatever. Opening any issue of it is like being five years old on Christmas morning again. It's a total, self-contained trip--a Sears catalog for nonconsumers. Locally, you can buy copies of it at the White Light Bookstore in Amherst.

The Mother Earth News tells you how to use the stuff you found in Whole Earth, and how to make do without what you don't have. It turned me on so much when I saw my first issue of it that I sent away for whole bunches of them to push myself. So you can get copies from me. (If you don't like me, it's also carried at White Light.) It's heavy on recycling, human systems, organics, life support. It's good enough to almost make up for not having any imagination, and if you do have an imagination.....

In the coming weeks, CULTURNATIVES will deal many different aspects of cultural alternatives. If you're into it and want to rap, or if you want Mother Earth News, stop by the Draft Counseling Office in 418E Student Union. You'll have to take your chances because draft counseling comes first, but if we're free, we'd enjoy sharing ideas.

Here's an exciting opportunity.

Albums: Short Takes

Jerry, Joe (and other delights)

By DON GLICKSTEIN
Fine Arts Staff

The Jerry Lee Lewis Gospel Album, Jerry Lee Lewis, Mercury SR 61318 Gospel should not make one sleep, even if it is country gospel. Gospel should be spiritual, emotive and should force the listener to get off his pew to praise the Lord. In a word, Jerry Lee Lewis sounds like a first year drama student who is an atheist, acting the part of a sick preacher shouting in vain, "My God's not dead!"

The Man Who Sold the World, David Bowie, Mercury SR 61325 This is an important album (he, he) with profound lyrics (e.g. "Well, I said hello and I said hello and I asked 'Why not?' and I replied 'I don't know' ") and noteworthy melodies bordering on the atonal.

Tea For The Tillerman, Cat Stevens, A & M SP4280 "Where do the children playaaa?" Cat Stevens sings in a voice that is reminiscent of both Neil Young and James Taylor. Tea is a pleasant album that could have been improved had not Stevens' voice and a choir been dubbed in places. At times, the crescendas are anomalous to the esoteric lyrics. Whereas Dylan and Brel run the spectrum of human conditions, Stevens speaks ks of his own identity crisis. This is fine for the artist and his close friends, but it is not universal; and that is the difference between a ' classic album and a mediocre one.

SISYPHUS, Cold Blood, San Francisco Records SD205. So many groups today sound so much the same because in the mix of genres--rock, soul, folk, blues--a band's distinctiveness and uniqueness is somehow lost. Cold Blood is no exception to blandness. Lydia Pense, the female vocalist, seems to have lost some of her excitement from the first album, and her singing-screams makes one appreciate Janis Joplin all the more. The rest of Cold Blood sounds like a Blood, Sweat, and Tears type group--tight and solid, but in no way sensational.

Joe Speaks, soundtrack from the movie "JOE", Mercury SRM-1-607, music by Bobby Scott.

Comedy is tragedy, and it certainly is a tragedy that this comedy album was released. Consisting of the three songs of the movie and miscellaneous words of wisdom from the crude mouth of Peter Boyle, Joe Speaks is a compilation of every obscenity and cliche of the silent majority. Some people can exaggerate the subtleties of cliches and make them sound aesthetic and profound--Erich Segal is currently an outstanding example--but Norman Wexler, the scriptwriter of "Joe" is not as gifted. As a result, Joe Speaks, after the initial laugh, becomes a monotonous piece of plastic. "Hey Go", although IT is sung by Bobby Scott, who tries his handest to emulate Brook Benton and even Nat King Cole. Hey Joe, the album, is as bad as "Joe", the movie.

Films, Music This Weekend

The second in a series of films entitled "Experiment in Revolutionary Aesthetics..." The American Underground Film" will take place in Thompson 104 this Friday evening, February 5 at 7. And others will be $1.50 and may be obtained at the Fine Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall, 545-0202. Tickets also will be available at the door.

They include "The Critic" by Ernest Pintoff; "Two" by Rene Taylor; "Timepiece" by Jim Henson; "Now That the Buffalo's Gone" by Berton Gerlshfield; "Chinese Firedrill' by Will Hindle and "The Bed" by James Broughton. In addition a group of animated films will be shown.

The UMass Music Faculty Recital Series resumes activity this February 7, Sunday, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium with a public recital featuring soprano Dorothy Ornest.

Miss Ornest, a well-known musician in this area and a member of the Music Faculty, will perform the complete song cycle by Franz Schubert "Die Schone Mullerin". She will be assisted at the Piano by Estela Kersenbaum Olevsky, also a music department faculty member.

"Die Schone Mullerin" is a cycle of twenty songs based on texts by Wilhelm Muller, a contemporary of Schubert and a leading German Romantic poet. The difficulty of this work has led to its infrequency in concert programs.

Swanson Appointed

Famed Cytologist Named UM Prof.

Dr. Carl P. Swanson an internationally known cytologist, has been named professor of botany at UMass.

Dr. Swanson is not only one of the world's best known names in cytology, the branch of biology that deals with the living cell, but is also one of the pioneers in the aspects of cytology dealing with radiation and chemical mutation.

He will join the UMass staff in September of this year to aid in the development of interdisciplinary courses relating science to technology and the humanities, participate in some honors courses dealing with problems of science and society and teach cytology and genetics.

He will work in particular with the outstanding chemical oceanographer Dayton E. Carritt, who has just joined the UMass faculty as a professor in the marine sciences program. Both will coordinate development of interdisciplinary courses relating to man and his environment, Dr. Swanson concentrating on the teaching aspects and Dr. Carritt on research.

Dr. Swanson is a native of Rockport and a 1937 UMass graduate. He was awarded an honorary Doctor of Science Degree at the 1957 UMass commencement. He holds M.A. and Ph. D. degrees from Harvard University.

He was awarded a President's Fellowship to Woods Hole while a senior at UMass and held a Thayer Fellowship, an Austin Teaching Fellowship and a Sheldon Traveling Fellowship at Harvard. He was named a Guggenheim Fellow in 1954 and a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Science in 1960.

Dr. Swanson's textbook "Cytology and Cytogenetics" is recognized as the authoritative text in the field. Several of his other books have been translated into other languages, including German, Italian, Japanese and Hindu. He has served on the editorial boards of several important biological publications and is author or co-author of over 70 books and other publications.

He has been a member of the Biology Division at Oak Ridge National Laboratory and a consultant to the National Science Foundation's Genetics Panel and to the study section panel on cell biology of the National Institutes of Health. Dr. Swanson has been a visiting professor at the Universities of Texas, Indiana and New Hampshire and at Washington State University.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

Astrology is a scientific art that treats of the synchronicity between planetary positions and mundane events. That is my definition. Most dictionaries agree, but editorialize that astrology is a "pseudo science". It is my opinion that dictionaries should define, not editorialize.

Erving Keys 2nd Half Surge

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

Worcester-Paced by an unbelievable second half performance by Julius Erving, the UMass basketball team won its biggest game of the season by downing the Crusaders of Holy Cross last night in an exciting, tense struggle before 3300 fans at Worcester Auditorium, 60-58. The Redmen are now 13-2 while Holy Cross slipped to 12-5.

Erving, UMass' All-American co-captain netted 25 second-half points (32 for the evening), pulled down 18 game rebounds and was clearly the difference in the contest. At one point, he scored six consecutive UMass hoops.

He was hitting consistently from both corners as well as driving for the hoop. If he was devastating enough on offense and rebounding, he also stole numerous passes and turned them into easy UMass baskets.

Tom McLaughlin, in his second Redmen start, came through again with a big half. When his scoring was needed in the first stanza, he pumped through 10 points. In the second half, with Erving having the hot hand, he passed off and tried to set up his teammate.

It is impossible to leave anyone out in this one. John Betancourt and Mike Pagliara ran the offense perfectly, and Chris Coffin nabbed 10 rebounds against the taller Crusaders. To make it simple, everyone did his job beautifully.

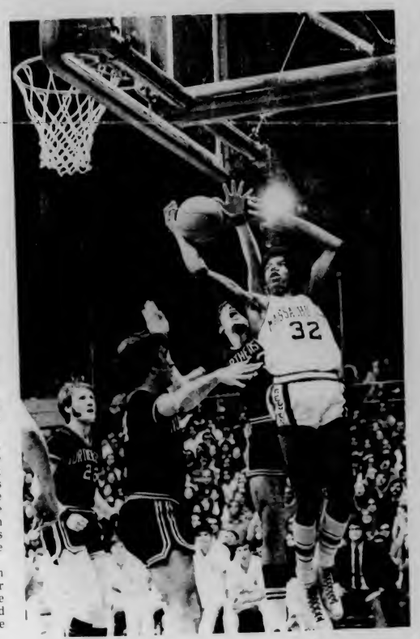
The first half was close with the Cross on top most of the way. The Crusaders broke quickly, jumping ahead 9-1 with less than five minutes gone behind the shooting of guard Jack Adams. UMass sliced the gap to four, 9-5, on hoops by Erving and Betancourt and the lead see-sawed between four and six points for about the next 10 minutes.

Daily Collegian
Sports
VOLUME XCVIII, ISSUE 79
WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1971

Doing the brunt of the UMass scoring was McLaughlin, who was being guarded by 6'8 forwards Jim Schnurr and Gene Doyle. Bob Kissane had six points in this period for the Crusaders.

With the Cross ahead 25-18 with just over four minutes to go, things began to break for the Redmen. Coffin netted a pair of charity tosses and McLaughlin, Erving and Betancourt scored consecutive hoops to put the UMass boys on top for the first time of the game, 26-25, with only 1:53 to go.

Doyle tapped in a missed Crusader shot with 0:35 left and the half ended with the Crusaders ahead by only one, 27-26.



It was McLaughlin's shooting and Erving's rebounding which had kept the Redmen in the contest thus far. Though much the shorter team, the Redmen amazingly enough managed to outrebound the Crusaders in the first stanza 21-19. That fact explained the closeness of the contest.

As close as the first half was, the second was even tighter. No team led by more than six at any point and with 1:15 to go the Redmen held a slim two-point edge.

With 3:40 on the clock Coffin was fouled by Kissane and sank a pair of clutch free throws to make it 58-54. Schnurr made a charity toss, but Erving seemed to ice the verdict with an eight-foot bank shot at 1:29.

Kissane came right back with a three point play and with a minute to go it was 60-58. But the Cross got the ball back twice more on UMass miscues but could not put it in the hoop. With 0:02, Holy Cross had the ball out of bounds but Kevin Stacom's shot from mid-court was off the mark and too late, and the Redmen had the ball game.

What the Redmen lacked in height and depth they made up for in simple desire. With everyone healthy they should be in good shape for Vermont, Iona and the guys from Chestnut Hill.

Matmen Pinned By Springfield

By BOB GANLEY
Staff Reporter

Springfield College once again proved itself the class of New England wrestling last night as it knocked off its nearest competitor, UMass, by a 27-8 score in Curry Hicks Cage. UMass was never really in the meet as it could only manage one win and a tie in the first eight matches while Springfield was rolling to a 22-5 lead.

The victory will no doubt lift the Chiefs to a number one ranking in New England despite their now 5-5 record. Springfield wrestles a far tougher schedule than the number two ranked Redmen and this was proven last night.

The Chiefs won decisions in the first two matches before Sheldon Goldberg was able to take the mat and get the Redmen on the board. Goldberg's decision money in the bank for UMass and won an easy 7-1 decision to narrow the Springfield lead to 6-3.

However, this is as close as the Redmen would get. A decision, a pin, and two more decisions in succession put the score 20-3 and the meet out of reach for UMass.

The Redmen made an attempt to make the score respectable with Ed Carlsson getting two points with a 1-1 draw and George Zguris winning a lopsided decision. Zguris came out like a tiger and completely dominated his opponent with seven minutes riding time en route to a 9-0 victory.

This narrowed the score to 22-8, but the Chief's Ross Pollard wrapped things up with a pin in the heavyweight match.

The Redmen are now 5-2-1 on the season with the bulk of the schedule ahead of them. They will have to be content with lighting for the number two ranking in New England until they get a chance for revenge at the New England tournament the first weekend in March.

Piepul Named Coach, A.D. At Amer. Int.

SPRINGFIELD (AP)-Milt Piepul, UMass Assistant Football coach, who has spent his last 21 years as an assistant coach, was named head football coach Tuesday at American International College.

Piepul, a former All American fullback at Notre Dame, succeeds Gayton Salvucci, head football coach at AIC since 1955 who was fired after last season's 2-6-1 record.

Piepul, 52, also was named William Callahan, who resigned last October.

He played one season with the Detroit Lions of the National Football League before joining the coaching staff at Dartmouth College, where he was a backfield coach for 12 years.

He served the next 11 years as an assistant at Brown University before joining the staff at Holy Cross in 1966. He has been defensive backfield coach at the UMass since 1968.

Celtics Fall To Philly

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - The philadelphia 76ers outscored Boston 20-2 in a five minute and 11 second span late in the second half and held on for a 108-105 victory over the Celtics in National Basketball Association game Tuesday night.

Boston had rallied from a 68-59 deficit in the third period to take a 75-71 lead.

After Dave Cowens made a pair of free throws to start the fourth period the 76ers ran off ten more points to boost their lead to 91-77. Boston closed the gap to 104-100 with 1:02 remaining, but Philadelphia's Hal Greer made four free throws to wrap up the game for the 76ers.

Billy Cunningham scored 31 points for Philadelphia, which lifted its second place margin over Boston in the NBA's Atlantic Division to four games. Cowens topped the Celtics with 22 points and gathered 28 rebounds.

Little Redmen Shooting Too Much For Crusaders, 82-65

By STEVE FERBER
Staff Reporter

Success in the foul department repeated itself last night, as the Little Redmen hoopsters out-steadied the Holy Cross frosh 82-65. In their victory, only four fouls were called on the UMass frosh in the first 35 minutes of the game. Fouls were plentiful in the last five hectic minutes, but the game was no contest then.

The score was tied just once, and at 12:03 of the first half, Al Skinner broke that tie. Rebounding a missed freethrow, Skinner scored a basket for a 15-13 Redmen lead.

Two more of Skinner's team-leading 24 points went in moments later, as the Little Redmen were on their way.

Then with less than five minutes in the half, the visitors ran off 10 unanswered points, building a 28-25 lead to thirteen points. This streak, which featured a beautiful hoop by Peter Trow off a Rick Pitino pass, put the game out of reach for the Little Crusaders.

Shooting 53 per cent from the floor in the first half, the Redmen stayed sharp in the final 20 minutes. The home club never did find the range from the outside, and this in turn led to spurts of four and six points for UMass in the second half.

As the lead grew to 62-41 with more than 10 minutes to go, Dave Mapp of Holy Cross was the sole Crusader able to score against the Redmen. His second half hoops were the biggest reasons the visitors' bulge never exceeded 21 points.

But from the start UMass outclassed their opponents, and although the scoreboard rarely showed it, the Redmen were never in danger of defeat.

With Pitino's ailing hand, his passes were still on target. Whipping passes underneath to Trow and Skinner time and again, the freshmen earned easy layups and made the Crusaders work that much more.

Holy Cross' center John Budris scored only two points as he saw limited action due to a first-half injury. In defensing Budris and Mapp the Redmen employed three different defenses, a one-two-two and one-three-one zone, and a man-to-man set-up. The latter was the most effective and the one most frequently used.

Although these three defenses worked well, rebounding, usually a Redmen attribute, was a problem for most of the game. With the Little Crusaders shooting from far outside, they often got two or three at the hoop.

But settling down as the contest wore on, the Little Redmen outoffensed and outdefensed the home squad in building its record to 9-1 and its winning streak to two.

HOOP NOTES: Fouls again spelled the difference....the four-corner offense was also seen in the second half by the Redmen....another fine shooting night by the Little Redmen.

Ellsworth Barnard Named As University Ombudsman

By ANNE STADNICKI
Staff Reporter

The appointment of Dr. Ellsworth Barnard of the English Department to fill the position of University Ombudsman was announced yesterday by the Chancellor's office.

Barnard was appointed to the post by President Robert C. Wood upon the recommendation of a joint selection committee consisting of three faculty members, one undergraduate and one graduate student.

Created by the Faculty Senate in the spring of 1969, the Ombudsman term is two years. Barnard has assumed his duties immediately.

He stated that one main function of the office would simply be to supply information about where a person can go to get his problem dealt with.

"Where there seems to be a persisting grievance, I see the Ombudsman's job as bring together the opposing parties and trying to get them to settle the matter voluntarily," Barnard said.

Chancellor Oswald Tippo urges all staff members to cooperate with the Ombudsman to the fullest extent possible. It is his opinion that it is evident that the support of the entire University community will be needed if the office is to function with maximum effectiveness."

The services of the Ombudsman are available to all members of the student body, faculty, administration and professional staff.

During the week of February 8th Professor Barnard can be reached in 265 Bartlett Hall (telephone 5-0359). It is hoped that soon a suitable office can be arranged for him in the Student Union building or some other central location where students can reach him conveniently.

Now that he is appointed, some of the functions of his office include the following as taken from the formal proposal of his appointment:

Dr. Ellsworth Barnard, Ombudsman

The Ombudsman shall be provided with the necessary staff and services to enable him to fulfill his function.

The function of the Ombudsman shall be to assist any petitioner in the procurement of a just settlement of a grievance. All members of the University community are expected to cooperate with the Ombudsman in the discharge of his duties.

Every complaint or grievance by a petitioner to the Ombudsman shall be submitted in writing.

If in the course of his duties it appears to the Ombudsman that under existing channels there is an adequate remedy or right of appeal, or if it appears that, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, any further action is unnecessary, he may in his discretion refuse to pursue the matter further.

If in his opinion the subject matter of the complaint is frivolous, or vexatious, or in not made in good faith, or the complainant has no sufficient personal interest in the subject matter of the complaint, the Ombudsman shall not be required to investigate the complaint.

In any case where the Ombudsman decides not to investigate or further investigate a complaint, he shall inform the complainant of that decision and shall state his reasons therefor in writing.

Every investigation by the Ombudsman shall be conducted with due respect for the privacy and reputation of others.

No person shall be entitled as of right to be heard by the Ombudsman, except that before any report is issued, persons or organizations adversely affected by such report must have been afforded an opportunity to be heard.

The Ombudsman shall report his opinion, and his reasons therefore, to the appropriate organization or person, and may make such recommendations as he sees fit. In any such case he may request the organization, or person involved, to notify him, within a specified time, of the steps that it proposes to take to implement his recommendations.

If within a reasonable time after issuance of the report, no action is taken which appears satisfactory to the Ombudsman, he may send a copy of his report and recommendations to the President of the University.

The Ombudsman shall in any case inform the complainant of the result of the investigation and recommendations.

The Ombudsman shall submit a written report at the beginning of May of each year to the Faculty, Graduate Student, and Student Senates, to the President of the University, and to the Board of Trustees of the University on the general functioning of his office. Copies of this report shall be made available for general distribution. In addition, from time to time he shall issue such other reports as he may determine necessary.

Senate, USCC Prepare For Tuition Battle

By BETH GOODELL
Senate Reporter

The Student Senate last night organized a campaign to combat a proposed tuition hike at the University and all state colleges in Massachusetts. The operation will include a letter writing campaign and some intensive lobbying in the Legislature by the University and State Communications Council (USCC).

In other action, the Senate also fought out its first round of battles over the approval of budgets for student organizations. Last evening's encounter was over the Coalition for Environmental Quality's budget, which made a statement to the Senate voicing strong disapproval of the handling of their budget by the Senate's Budgets Committee.

Measures passed by the Senate included one demanding the end of all restrictions on campus housing and another recommending that tuition fees be made tax deductible for University students. One other bill passed by the Senate makes available to students the option of having cases of misdemeanor tried in the University's General Court instead of the District Court of the Commonwealth.

In considering a proposal to revamp the Fine Arts Council, the Senate voted that the measure needs more consideration and postponed it for two more weeks.

The State Legislature has before it at this time over 20 bills concerning tuition increase for next year, which call for hikes ranging from $200 a year to $700. Treasurer Richard Verrochi is convinced that the Legislature will definitely approve some increase for next year, and fears that this increase will be so large as to prohibit a significant number of student from continuing their education. Along with Judith Gill of USCC, he therefore sponsored the resolution last night which calls for an immediate start to the campaign against an increase of any amount greater than $100.

Through Verrochi and Gill's motion, the Senate appropriated $2000 for the printing and mailing of letters to the parents of all students attending the University, asking that they contact their respective legislators to request that they oppose the tuition increases proposed. The Senate also requested USCC, directly involved in communication between the University and the Legislature, to begin an intensive lobbying campaign in the Legislature opposing the increase. Up to $500 was authorized to USCC for this purpose.

Student Senate officers are directed by the bill to fully coordinate and carry through the program and join in the lobbying efforts. All efforts will be made to include all members of the University in the campaign.

"What appears to be happening is the Commonwealth is hurting for money and it's turned to the schools and colleges to improve the situation", Verrochi reported on the Senate floor. He presented figures taken from a recent survey made by a professional firm that projects the number of students who would be forced out of school by proposed increases in his defense of opposition to a tuition increase.

According to projections of the survey, a $200 increase in the year 1971-72 would force out 873 students, and a $400 jump would be the death knell for 3492 students in the state system. $100 alone would be tenable, according to Verrochi.

The letter writing and lobbying campaigns are rushing to reach parents and Legislators by March 15, when House Committee starts hearings on the University's budget.

The Student Senate itself is faced with the problem of approving budgets at this time; in this case, it is the budgets of student organizations. Approving a budget is a complex procedure in which much of the work is done by a 9-member Budgets Committee headed by Kevin Kulakowski.

In a hearing with each organization, the committee works out the details of each budget, and then reads it on the Senate floor. The Senate as a whole can refuse to fund the organization and strike its budget or can propose amendments to it. The Budgets Committee itself then considers the amendments and makes the changes only if it approves. The budget is then finalized when once again presented to the Senate in combination with all other budgets. A two-thirds Senate vote is required to make any change in this version.

The Coalition for Environmental Quality (CEQ) is now in the process of presenting its budget requests. The Budgets Committee cut its $12,290 request by around $5000, leaving a total some $2000 less than the budget granted for the current year. At last evening's meeting, CEQ President Quint Dawson read a statement expressing respect for "the committee's zeal in protecting student tax funds" but also strong opposition to the committee's procedure, and chagrin for the lack of expression of environmental concern on this campus.

They object to the power the Budgets Committee has and stated that it feels that the committee members present at its hearing were unrepresentative of the Senate or the Student body, and that they made arbitrary decisions on topics they are unqualified to judge.

Budgets Chairman Kulakowski defended his committee, and said that he knows it is "going to make a lot of enemies, but no friends." He stressed that anyone can still come to the Committee's hearings to propose amendments which will be duly considered.

The right of students to live anywhere they choose was demanded by the Senate last evening. Sponsor of the bill calling for the Chancellor to end all restrictions, Lee Sandwen, said that "students are being treated as second class citizens as long as housing restrictions are placed on them." His bill charges President Glenn Elters to meet with the Chancellor to finalize plans for the ending of all restrictions for the Fall semester of 1971. Sandwen expects this meeting to produce some very important results in ending restrictions.

The Senate was still in session at the writing of this article. Still on the agenda were measures dealing with firearms, and the procedure of assigning single rooms in dorms. Details of action taken on these and other measures at last night's meeting will be included in tomorrow's Daily Collegian.

Group Forms To Change Draft Alternatives

The Selective Service Act of 1969, coming up before Congress in the spring has prompted the formation of the organization of Selective Alternatives to the Draft.

Promoting the idea of combining the Peace Corps and Vista into one "super agency" as an alternative to the draft is the primary goal of S.A.D.

"It is an organization open to plans, ideas, and people who will work" said Larry Romanovitch. "People are desperately needed to write letters, type them up and just help circulate the idea of a selective alternative to the draft."

S.A.D. has two branches; one in Fall River under the direction of Dennis O'Donnell, and the Amherst one under the direction of Larry Romanovitch.

Larry Romanovitch can be contacted every night except Thursday at Room #4, 159 North Pleasant St., Amherst, phone 253-9968 and every Monday and Tuesday afternoon from 1:30 to 4:30 in the Franklin Room of the Student Unnon.

With the Selective Service Act of 1969 coming up before Congress, S.A.D. has already begun to send letters to Senator Edward Kennedy, Senator Edward Brooke, and Congressman Margeret Heckler. Plans are now being made to invite Senator Edward Kennedy to speak on the draft.

In The Nation And The World

Laotian Invasion Still Undetermined

The Communist side provided fresh but vague reports Wednesday on the allied action that apparently has reached inside Laos or centers on the frontier of that nominally neutral country. The allies continued their blackout on news of what was or was not going on.

The Soviet Union, mentioning the situation for the third day, said it "strongly denounces the armed intrusion of the United States and Saigon puppets into Laos."

The Pathet Lao, the Communist movement in Laos, did not go that far. It broadcast that U.S. and South Vietnamese troops were massing on the South Vietnamese border for a major operation in Laos.

On Monday the Soviet premier, Alexei N. Kosygin, said "an outrageous invasion of the southern provinces of Laos is under way." He followed that with a similar statement Tuesday.

On Wednesday the Soviet agency Tass carried a statement saying, "United States ruling circles are completely responsible for further aggravation of the situation in Laos and entire Indochina.

"The situation in Indochina has greatly aggravated in recent day."

Tass asserted "Reports say that a considerable number of Saigon group troops supported by U.S. armed forces invaded Laos. U.S. planes every day make massed raids on the territory of Laos. Heavy Bombers, B52s, take part in these raids."

Wednesday's reports coincided with a Saigon announcement of a new incursion by South Vietnamese forces into Cambodia.

The Pathet Lao statement reporting a massing of U.S. and Saigon forces asserted they would operate in conjunction with troops from Thailand. The Pathet Lao said Thailand had sent a battalion to the Bolovens Plateau in southern Laos.

"None of the enemy broadcasts or statements by Laotian officials supported a report by Japan's Kyodo News Agency that 4,000-5,000 South Vietnamese troops landed on the plateau Monday with U.S. air support. The Pathet Lao said nothing about this but added that the Thai battalion reinforced two other battalions from Thailand already operating there.

The South Vietnamese reported Wednesday they had begun a second incursion into Cambodia by 10,000 troops supported by U.S. air power to clean out enemy bases and help speed the withdrawal of American troops from South Vietnam.

If the report of a massing along the border of southern Laos is true, the South Vietnamese incursion raised the possibility of a pincers movement against North Vietnamese supply bases and lines in Cambodia and Laos.

The U.S. Command has placed an embargo on operations in the northern part of South Vietnam near the Laotian border. This embargo did not apply to the South Vietnamese incursion.

In Washington, administration officials said the embargo would be lifted soon. They said the first word of maneuvering on the border with Laos would come from Saigon.

In London, Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas Home told Parliament his latest information was that no South Vietnamese forces had entered Laos.

Asked about the Kyodo report, Lt. Col. Nguyen Tuyen, spokesman for the South Vietnamese Defense Ministry, replied: "As far as I know, there are no South Vietnamese troops in Laos. Up to now, I have no information about that. I cannot confirm or deny it."

The U.S. Command in Saigon has declined to make any comment.

Laotian spokesman in Vientiane seemed more concerned with what was happening in the north than in the south, where they have said the enemy might launch a drive, possibly to dominate the plateau.

Sisouk said North Vietnamese led by fire tanks captured Muong Soui, 108 miles north of Vientiane. The North Vietnamese rarely have used tanks.

The town is considered a key to the strategic Plain of Jars to the southwest, and its fall might clear the way for attacks on other important points near the plain.

Allied assault was said to be continuing near Khesanh (1). Washington officials denied reports that Saigon troops were airlifted to Boloven Plateau in Laos (2).

Revenue Sharing Opposed In House

WASHINGTON (AP)-A high level White House presentation on revenue sharing apparently left a number of House Republicans unconvinced Wednesday including the chief GOP spokesmen on revenues, Rep. John W. Byrnes of Wisconsin.

Byrnes said afterward he still opposes on both practical and philosophical grounds President Nixon's proposal to turn over to the state and local governments, with no strings tied, $5 billion of the federal tax take.

Byrnes, senior Republican member of the House Ways and Means Committee, met privately with John D. Ehrlichman, Nixon's staff chief for domestic affairs, and other White House spokesmen after they had briefed the conference of all Republican House members.

"I would like to go along with the President..." Byrnes said later. "I don't find myself in a comfortable position...

"But I cannot accept the assumption that Uncle Sam can perform the miracle of the loaves and fishes. I don't think he has been endowed with that power."

Byrnes told newsmen he has three major objections:

-"The revenue simply isn't there...We are going to have to borrow $47 billion in the next two fiscal years-some of it from the government's own trust funds, the rest on the market-to run the government...

"I can't accept the assumption either that economic growth is going to give us a surplus unless there is some radical change in spending. That's growing also, in excess of the normal growth of the economy."

"I can't accept the assumption that only the states and localities have fiscal problems. The federal government is under just as great pressure for spending, if not greater."

-His philosophical objection, he said, is to the principle of allowing one governmental body to spend revenues another levies taxes to raise...

"The basic discipline on spending today is that the authorities have to go to the taxpayers for the funds ...We will throw what little discipline we have out of the window when we remove the onus of taxing from the pleasure of spending...

"This would be a radical, revolutionary shift in government policy."

Northern U.S. Suffers Cold Power Shortage

WASHINGTON (AP)-In an unprecedented crisis of wintertime electric power supplies, the northern United States has been hit by 19 voltage reductions in 21 days-and officials say more could yet come.

According to Federal Power Commission data, the crisis began in New England on Jan. 14 and mushroomed until it reached as far south as Virginia and as far west as Chicago. The trouble struck eight times in the power pool serving all New England.

Senators Blast Secrecy, Escalation

WASHINGTON (AP)-Some leading Democratic senators blasted the Nixon administration for secrecy surrounding Vietnamese operations Wednesday, while others denounced the U.S.-backed South Vietnamese drive into Cambodia as a new escalation of the war.

Democratic leader Mike Mansfield of Montana and his deputy, Sen. Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, criticized the secrecy surrounding operations near the Laotian border.

Sens. Edmund S. Muskie, D. Maine, and Frank Church, D. Idaho, said the new attack into Cambodia raised questions about the administration's intentions and criticized Secretary of State William P. Rogers for not telling the Foreign Relations Committee at a closed session last Thursday about impending operations.

The committee, meanwhile, said it had not received an answer to its invitation for Rogers and Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird to testify about developments in Laos and Cambodia.

Mansfield, talking with reporters, said the continuing secrecy is creating a very difficult situation and a certain amount of apprehension of what is in the offing.

"I dislike getting my information form the Russians, the French and the Japanese," he said, referring to foreign press reports of a U.S. backed South Vietnamese strike at Communist supply bases in southern Laos.

Byrd, the new assistant Democratic leader, accused the administration of "inexcusable bungling" in blocking information on the operation from Congress and the people.

Egypt Agrees Upon Ceasefire Extension

Egypt has agreed provisionally to extend the Middle East cease fire until March 5, a Cairo broadcast said Wednesday night.

The broadcast, heard in Washington, did not spell out conditions for the one month extension.

While the decision was being taken in Cairo, military sources in Tel Aviv said Egyptian war planes flew over Israeli military positions along the Suez Canal for the third time in as many days.

Reliable sources in Cairo said earlier that Egypt had decided to give U.N. Arab Israeli peace talks 30 days more to reach a workable solution to the Middle East crisis.

President Anwar Sadat is to announce his government's decision on the shooting halt at an emergency session of Egypt's Parliament on Thursday evening.

House Democrats Unsuccessful In Seniority System Attacks

WASHINGTON (AP) - Tradition oriented House Democrats rejected Wednesday an effort to remove a 72 year old southerner from a committee chairmanship after shoutng down two other moves to dilute the power of congressional seniority.

The party caucus voted 126 to 96 to retain Rep. John L. McMillan of South Carolina in the District of Columbia Committee chairmanship he has held for 22 years. Younger liberal members had sought his removal, asserting he runs the panel autocratically and has no real concern for the needs of the predominantly black city of Washington.

McMillan's supporters countered that the critics are just men embittered by ideological differences with the chairman, especially his opposition to home rule for the District now ruled, in effect, by Congress.

Earlier Wednesday the caucus handily defeated attempts to limit length of service by all Democratic committee chairmen to four two year terms and to prohibit any representative 70 or older from serving as chairman.

The vote followed a plea by the powerful Ways and Means Committee chairman, Wilbur Mills of Arkansas, to retain the chairman or risk losing the White House to the Republicans in 1972.

If McMillan were defeated Mills told his fellow Democrats, it would be seen as a slap in the face to Southerners and the South and would cost the Democratic party Southern support in the 1972 presidential elections.

The vote quashed the attempt by liberals on the conservatively dominated committee to win election to the chairmanship of Rep. Charles C. Diggs Jr., a Michigan Negro.

Indians Protest Plane Hijacking

NEW DELHI (AP) - Prime Minister Indira Gandhi led her nation Wednesday in condemning the destruction of a hijacked Indian airline plane in Pakistan. Violent demonstrations broke out in the Indian capital to protest destruction of the plane.

"We hold the Pakistani government wholly responsible for allowing this dastardly crime," Mrs. Gandhi said in one of the strongest statements she has issued in her five years in power.

"The blowing up of the plane at Lahore airport under the very nose of the Pakistani authorities by the two criminals who hijacked it to Lahore airport deserves to be condemned by all civilized governments and people."

The Indian airliner a Fokker Friendship F27, was hijacked to Lahore Jan. 30.

The largest of many protest demonstrations reported throughout the country occurred in New Delhi. More than 1,000 students there tried to storm the Pakistan High Commission, or embassy.

During a two hour period police fired tear gas into the crowd seven times in an attempt to disperse it. The crowd broke through the iron gate entrance of the walled Pakistani compound and then retreated quickly.

The aircraft was hijacked while flying over the Indian portion of Kashmir. When it arrived in Lahore, the hijackers refused to get off, saying that unless India release Kashmiri prisoners they would destroy the plane. India refused and on Tuesday, the hijackets set fire to the aircraft valued at more than a million dollars.

Astronauts Get OK For Lunar Landing

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) - Astronaut Edgar D. Mitchell checked a questionable battery in Apollo 14's moon ship Wednesday night, found it okay and Mission Control Center gave the go ahead for a lunar landing Friday.

"Everything looks good," Mission Control said after Mitchell conducted an hour long check of a battery which had been giving a low voltage reading.

"As of now, the ascent batteries, especially No. 5, is go," said Mission Control.

Mitchell transferred power from circuit to circuit, putting pressure on the battery that had been giving a low voltage reading. The tests indicated that there was no apparent problem with the battery itself.

There was no immediate explanation of why the battery voltage reading was low.

Astronauts Stuart A. Roosa and Alan B. Shepard remained aboard the command ship, Kitty Hawk, during the tests.

The astronauts were asked to make the tests shortly after they awoke from a daylong rest period. A ground controller said there was no real concern, but that the tests would "make everybody feel a little warmer down here."

Shepard and Mitchell reported the low voltage early in the day when they entered the lunar module.

The readings themselves were not considered serious enough to affect the lunar landing. But officials at Mission Control sought to find out the reason for the abnormal voltage level.

Had the battery been found to be defective, Mission Control said it would not allow Shepard and Mitchell to make their planned descent onto the moon.

Even a faulty battery, however, posed no danger to the astronauts as long as no moon landing was made.

As Mitchell started clearing the tunnel to go into the lunar module, he told Houston: "We've reached that point where we're running downhill very rapidly toward it." The space craft was then 235,000 miles from earth.

Shortly before that the astronauts fired the command ship's rocket for .7 of a second to put the craft on target for lunar orbit early Thursday. The firing, lowered Apollo 14's closest approach to the moon to the planned 67 miles.

Experts on the ground spent most of the day studying the battery situation.

Mission Control said the battery is one of two on the ascent stage of Antares, the lunar module. These provide electricalpower for the craft while it rockets the astronauts from the surface of the moon and back to a rendezvous with the mother ship.

Officials said the battery was giving a reading of 36.7 volts, three tenths of a volt below the normal of 37. The second battery is the ascent stage was normal.

Space engineers could not determine at once whether the low reading resulted from a faulty gauge. A test was developed to provide a better view of the battery's condition.

"If the situation stays as it is, we will attempt the landing," Flight Director M.P. Frank said.

But he added: "We have to have both batteries to commit to a landing. If the battery has egraded to a point where we have no confidence in it, then that would be a no go situation."

The battery reading was discotered while Shepard and Mitchell tested the lunar module systems, Frank said.

Space agency officials said the astronauts would have to again turn on Antares' electrical systems. The suspect battery would be isolated on a circuit and current drawn from it to see what would happen to the voltage.

Meanwhile Apollo 14 zips ever faster as it nears the moon. It whips around the lunar backside early Thursday at 5,503 miles per hour and the astronauts fire a rocket at 2:01 a.m. EST to slow the craft and settle it into the moon's gravitational embrace. The pull of earth's gravity had slowed it to a speed of 1,600 m.p.h.

Four hours later in a 69 by 195 mile orbit, another rocket firing pushes the spaceship to within 11.5 miles of the moon surface, the lowest and riskiest command ship orbit ever attempted.

This low orbit sets the stage for Shepard and Mitchell to cast off in Antares toward the moon's surface.

They fire a rocket that sends them plunging to a 4:16 a.m. EST landing Friday in a rugged mountain valley.

Shepard and Mitchell will separate Antares from command ship Kitty Hawk at 11:50 p.m. EST, Thursday, and swoop toward the Fra Maure highlands. They will skip past 600 feet high ridges to land amid auto sized boulders and craters.

During 34 hours on the moon, Shepard and Mitchell will twice walk the moon's surface, becoming the fifth and sixth humans to step on the black lunar dust.

Princeton Physicists Claim May Harness H-Bomb Energy

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - Princeton University physicists reported Wednesday that recent experiments mean it may be possible to demonstrate before 1975 that it is scientifically feasible to harness the awesome energy of the hydrogen bomb.

If so, they said, in another 15 years the nation may see an electric power generating plant operating on thermonuclear fusion-the physical process going on in the sun and the stars.

A thermonuclear power plant would use hydrogen as fuel, a fuel that can be found in inexpensive abundance in the oceans. Further, a hydrogen plant would be completely safe, the scientists said, and pollution free.

The report to the annual meeting of the American Physical Society came from Dr. Don Grove, physicist in charge of fusion experiments at Princeton, and Dr John M. Dawson, head of the theoretical group at the school.

The Princeton group has been working with an experimental device called the Tokamak, modeled after a device built by scientists in the Soviet Union, where intensive fusion research is under way. The Russians have made significant advances in the field.

Grove told a news conference that recent experiments on the Princeton Tokamak have verified the work done in the Soviet Union and have begun to find out what features of the Tokamak make it work better than any previous device.

Now, Grove said, Princeton has a proposal before the Atomic Energy Commission to build a "second generation" Tokamak that might prove the scientific feasibility of fusion power. The machine could be built by the end of 1973, Grove said, and the first test could be made in 1974.

The new Tokamak would cost about $4 million, Grove said.

The key to a thermonuclear reactor is a physics problem-to show in the laboratory that it is possible to take a plasma, matter in a charged gaseous form, and heat it enough, make it dense enough, and contain it long enough to produce a thermonuclear reaction that would work in a power reactor.

In the fusion process, four atoms of hydrogen, the simplest of the known elements, fuse into one atom of helium, releasing energy. This is what happens in the sun and stars and makes possible the hydrogen bomb.

The difficulty is in containing the plasma. The Tokamak is a doughnut shaped device using magnetic fields to contain it.

As for safety, Grove commented: "It is absolutely impossible to have a nuclear explosion in a fusion power plant. There are absolutely no radioactive byproducts, no hot lission ashes to be carted away."

As a result, he added, "a thermonuclear plant could be located right in the center of the city."

Conventional nuclear power plants, which release radioactivity to the air and heated water to lakes and rivers, produce energy when atoms of a heavy, radioactive metal such as uranium are split. This is the principle of the atomic bomb.

Hemophiliac's Operation Termed Successful

CHICAGO (AP)-The first hemophiliac to undergo open heart surgery was released from a hospital Wednesday. His doctor said the operation's success means that hemophilia victims now can undergo any delicate surgery, including heart transplants.

Warren C. Jyrch, 50, an accountant, underwent surgery Dec. 15 in Michael Reese Hospital. A defective valve connecting the aorta and the left side of the heart was replaced by an artificial valve in a 7 1/2 hour operation.

The usually delicate surgery was compounded because Jyrch suffers from hemophilia, a hereditary disease that prevents blood from coagulating. Doctors prepared Jyrch for surgery by injecting him with a recently developed antihemophiliac globulin-AHG.

"The odds were with him all the way," said Dr. S. Frederick Rabiner, head of the hematology team that joined in the surgery. Rabiner and the heart surgeon, Dr. Stanley K. Brockman, joined Jyrch at a news conference prior to his release.

"Technically," Rabiner said, "it was impossible to operate on a hemophiliac before the development of AHG."

Dr. Judith Poole of Stanford developed the process about five years ago. Rabiner said. He explained that the coagulant is made by freezing plasma, drawing off the precipitate, allowing it to thaw to refrigerator temperature, and then bringing it to solution at room temperature prior to use.

"We injected Jyrch with 190,000 units of AHG before, during and after the operation. The globulin was made from about 2,000 pints of blood and took several months," Rabiner said.

Jyrch also received blood daily after the operation.

Meeting Set To Determine Organic Food Lines In DC

In response to recent student requests for macrobiotic and organic food lines in dining commons, Asst. Director Arthur Warren has set a meeting today at 6 PM to determine the interest and feasibility of such a line.

Warren said that several students have called and said that many are interested. The meeting will help determine just how many.

Two diet lines were started last semester after student requests were made for it. Warren said that these lines, located in Worcester and Hampden Commons, were "going well for a while" but that interest in them seems to be fading.

Warren invited students to contact him at his office in Worcester Commons (545-2472) if they have questions or cannot attend the meeting.

Student Group Fights Best's Termination

A group of students on campus have organized to protest the "firing" of Dr. Michael Best of the Economics Department, according to a leaflet distributed by the Committee to Defend Mike Best.

The pamphlet said that Dr. Best is being given a terminal contract ending next year.

No spokesman for the group could be reached but the handout claimed that the head of the Economics Department is trying to have Best "fired" on the grounds of "insufficient creative research."

Dr. Best teaches a course in beginning economics and political economics. Because he includes a discussion of the military-industrial complex, the committee believes the actual reason for his termination is failure to conform to a conservative view according to the pamphlet.

It also said that over 95% of the one hundred and forty students approached in his introductory economics course at the end of last semester considered Dr. Best "an excellent teacher." Those students were also quoted as saying his course was "extremely interesting and relevant to today."

Anyone who would like to protest the termination, especially students who have had Best as a teacher, is asked to sign the petition in the office of the Student Mobilization Committee, located on the second floor of the Student Union.

The group also asks that letters be sent to Dean Alphange, in the Department of Social and Behavioral Sciences, South College. He is reviewing the terminal contract and will make the final decision, the leaflet reported.

Postal Rates Due To Jump

WASHINGTON - The United States Postal Service announced proposed new rates that would substantially increase the cost of mailing letters, postcards, commercial mail, books and, especially, newspapers and magazines.

The new rates requested by the Postal Service would raise the price of a first class letter from 6 to 8 cents, a postcard from 5 to 7 cents and air mail from 10 to 11 cents.

The cost of second class mail, which includes newspapers and magazines, would increase by an average of 142 per cent. However, the new rates for second class mail would be phased in over five years.

The rate requests were submitted Monday to the Postal Rate Commission, which must approve them. However, if the commission does not take action within 90 days, the Postal Service can put temporary new rates into effect, provided they are no more than one-third higher than the old rates.

James W. Hargrove, assistant postmaster general, said Tuesday he would be "pleasantly surprised" if the commission took action withing 90 days and said that the temporary rates could go into effect around May 15.

The higher rates are expected to provide the Postal Service with additional revenues of $1.45 billion in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1972.

Hargrove noted that the Postal Service will be required to cover its own operating costs under the provisions of the Postal Reorganization Act.

Under the act, the Post Office Department will be converted into the United States Postal Service, a semi-independent public service corporation, sometime this year, probably in June.

Hargrove said at a briefing for newsmen Tuesday that the requested higher rates did not take account of possible wage increases. Additional increases would be needed if the postal unions receive higher wage settlements, he asserted.

In reply to a question, he said that the higher rates for mail would not produce any improvement in the efficiency of mail service.

"The increases in rates are to catch up with costs incurred in the past, not for improvements in the future," he said. "Bond issues will be made (to raise money) for improved service," he added.

NES Tutoring Orientation Starts Sunday

The Northern Educational Service Spring semester tutor orientation will begin this Sunday at 7:30 in room 163 of the Campus Center. This will be the first session of a series of three that will continue every other Sunday into March.

This Sunday's session will set a pattern of workshops and role playing that will be an educational experience in itself while making for a semester of excellent tutoring. All old tutors are invited to attend while the invitation to the student body to tutor remains open.

While N.E.S. is a Springfield based tutoring program the coordinating committee at the University feels a responsibility to the community at large. Therefore students interested in tutoring high school students who cannot cope with classroom life can attend this meeting and sign up for this type of volunteer service.

The tutoring of these troubled students will take place during regular school hours at Amherst High School. This type of tutoring can best be described as instruction to achieve specific behavioral objectives through any method the tutor and tutee can manage. This is an excellent opportunity to work in a high school that is excellently equiped with modern learning tools.

The orientation session this Sunday will hopefully prepare the tutor for his or her first session in Springfield. The program will first start will small group discussion centered around the questions tutors have about tutoring.

Then the group will go into a Youth Tutoring Youth experiment where tutors imagine themselves as a potential tutee. Continuing this exercise the groups will go into actual role playing of the tutors first session in Springfield.

All interested students are reminded that if they plan to receive modular credit that they must attend those sessions. Tutors who have attended the last orientation do not have to come but if they want to see if things have gotten better orientation-wise they are invited to compare notes from last semester. We could also use their help.

Other points of interest. The busses to Springfield will be running next week for all sessions. It should be noted that the pickup point has been moved to in front of Flint Laboratory which is across from Bowker Auditorium located in Stockbridge Hall, next to the parking garage. This is also the place where Peter Pan picks up students. Busses leave at 2:45 and 6:15 p.m. Monday thru Thursday.

Tutoring sessions like the one above are one of the aims of NES. The Spring Semester orientation hopes to provide UMass tutors with tools to handle one to one tutoring or more exciting group activities.

Nixon Requests New Law To Forestall Major Strikes

By NEIL GILBRIDE
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Citing a threatened nationwide railroad walkout March 1, President Nixon renewed Wednesday his urgent request to Congress for the first new law in a quarter century to forestall major strikes.

"The urgency of this matter should require no new emphasis by anyone," Nixon said in a reminder of December's one day national rail strike that Congress halted until March 1 with a special law.

Secretary of Labor J. D. Hodgson said, however, the White House has no hope that Congress will enact the proposed new law in time to head off the March 1 strike threat of nearly 500,000 rail workers.

"We are hopeful of resolving that one by bargaining," Hodgson told newsmen at the White House.

But Nixon said the current wage dispute of four AFL-CIO unions emphasizes the need for broad new legislation to deal with national emergency strikes in railroad, airline, shipping, longshore and trucking industries.

Spokesmen for organized labor and the railroad industry indicated they would mount stiff opposition in Congress against the law.

Nixon's proposal, almost identical with one he made and Congress ignored last year, would abolish the separate Railway Labor Act covering rail and airline labor disputes and bring them under coverage of the Taft Hartley Act now covering other industries.

Nixon's bill would give the White House three new options to deal with transportation strikes threatening the national interest.

The first would allow the president to extend the present Taft Hartley 80 day cooling off injunction for an additional 30 days.

Or, the president could appoint a special board to determine whether to permit a partial strike and partial operation in a nationwide dispute. In railroads, that would mean letting unions strike certain lines but leave others operating for as long as 180 days.

If there were no settlement in 180 days, an industry widestrike or lockout, or further action by Congress in a special law could result.

The third option would permit the president to appoint a neutral panel to impose as a final solution in a labor dispute the last offer of either the union or the management, on the theory that the two sides would move closer together to avoid losing too much if the other's last offer were accepted.

"This procedure would reward reasonableness and thereby facilitate negotiation and settlement," Nixon told Congress. A president could invoke only one of the three options in any single dispute.

Blast Ice In Attempt To Search For Plane

BURLINGTON, Vt. (AP) - Crews began dynamiting a mile long path through the ice in Burlington Harbor Wednesday in an attempt to free a barge for use in a search for a private jet with five men aboard presumed down in Lake Champlain.

Thomas Cousins, head of the company that owned the twin engined jet, said the barge would drag a sophisticated sonar rig underwater around Shelburne Point, where the plane is believed to have crashed. Tons of rock salt also were betin spread to melt the ice dynamited loose.

The lake is frozen from shore to shore, but the ice is thin enough in deeper parts of the lake to allow the barge to maneuver if it can get past the harbor breakwater, a mile from shore. Ice in the harbor is more than a foot thick; beyond the breakwater it is only three or four inches thick.

The plane, owned by Cousins Properties of Atlanta, Ga., disappeared Jan. 27, minutes after take off from Burlington International Airport in a bad snow storm.

Planes have searched the lake and shoreline every day since the plane disappeared.

Aboard the jet were George G. Nikita, the pilot; Donald E. Meyers, Copilot; Randy Williams, vice president of Retail Planning Corp., a Cousins division; and Frank Wilder and Kirby Windsor, consulting engineers retaied by Cousins.

Wilder was from Jacksonville, Fla., the others from Atlanta. They had been in Burlington on business, and were returning to Atlanta.

Write On, Moms And Dads

To paraphrase a well placed and clean cut administrator-student, "The Marquis De Sade is to chastity, as Massachusetts is to public higher education." The great and sovereign commonwealth of Massachusetts is presently 19th in per-capita aid to higher education.

Thus it is with consternation and wonder, but not surprise, that ye old purveyors of the public protection, the austere and random general court, seems receptive to ideas for raising the tuition of UMass and all state higher education institutions.

Now idealistic arguments, facts and figures scream out with truth that a tuition hike is at best a misguided blunder and at worst stupid. And they will be documented and argued wafted and quaffed for the next months to come. But what is the only thing that really, really matters to our gentlemen of the legislative persuasion? Yep, VOTES, VOTES, VOTES.

That is why the student senate resolution of last night, to authorize a sum of money for mailing to the parents of all undergraduates a letter urging them to write their legislator opposing the tuition increase, makes sense.

Legislators are obviously ready to stick it to students with the excuse that the state is in financial throes of menopause when actually its the legislature's own bungling, and spending, like on their own pay raise. Granted its a hard job to lead the leaderless, clothe the naked, feed the hungry, and screw the students, but a pay hike?

Anyway, we are not going to give the idealistic arguments against the tuition hike right now. This editorial is urging a huge and emotional response to the Senate resolution for votes make legislators tic and votes make legislators tock. And a large response to the senate measure will make legislators realize that contrary to their thoughts, the parents of U Mass students aren't rich, are hard pressed to pay their bills and that public education, should be the very best at the lowest possible cost.

We say hear, hear. Student Senate.

"Well, It's Pretty Revolutionary For Us"

Children Of Your Choice

WASHINGTON--Science is now fiddling with animal sperm banks. It is already possible through deep-freeze methods to save the reproductive ingredients of a great bull for several years, and then, by artificial insemination, to produce a calf whose father may have long gone on to that great cow pasture in the sky.

Lucy Kavaler in the New York Times has suggested that if there are now banks for animals, we should start thinking in terms of human beings. She suggests that the reproductive cells of great men could be frozen and banked for future generations.

Miss Kavaler forsees a time, in the not too distant future, when a man and wife would be able to go down to their local test tube bank and select the child of their dreams.

So do we.

It is the year 2001 and a couple walks into the First National Test Tube Bank of New York. They are ushered into an icebox where the vice president, bundled up in a sheepskin coat, asks them to state their business.

The wife says, "I would like either another Artur Rubinstein or a Jasha Heifetz."

"But," says the husband, "he should be able to throw a football like Joe Namath."

The vice president says, "We're all out of Artur Rubinsteins, Jasha Heifitzes and Joe Namaths. The last of them went in 1996. Could I interest you in a Norman Mailer or an Erich Segal?"

The husband says, "If you don't have a Joe Namath, what about a good linebacker?"

The wife says, "I want my son to be a professional man. Maybe a doctor. You don't have a Jonas Salk sample around, do you?"

"No, I'm sorry," the vice president replies. "The last genes of Jonas Salk went in 1987."

"I tell you what," says the husband, "if you have a good golfer like Arnold Palmer, we'll take it."

"Not so fast," the wife says. "Golfers are a dime a dozen. I would like perhaps a little artistic genius. Maybe a Pablo Picasso or a Chagall."

"Wait a minute," the husband says. "The Martons got a Picasso 20 years ago, but instead of him painting pictures, he became a Communist and got married three times."

"Well," says the vice president, "there is no guarantee that your offspring will not inherit all the characteristics of the person you choose."

"Don't I know it," the wife says. "The Kaisers had a Dr. Edward Teller offspring and he married a daughter who came from a Gen. Patton strain, and now all they want to do is make war instead of love."

The vice president studies a list. "Would you consider a politician for a son? We're having a sale on John Lindsay."

"Not on your life," the husband says. "Anyone who wants his son to be mayor of New York has to be crazy."

"I wouldn't be adverse to an Onassis-type child," the wife says. "At least we wouldn't have to worry about security in our old age."

The vice president says, "We've been sold out of Onassis for 20 years. Why do you think there's such a glut in oil tankers these days?"

The husband says, "Maybe we should try for a basketball player."

The wife says angrily, "I'm not going to produce a 7-foot giant just so you can go to Madison Square Garden three nights a week."

The vice president says, "You people are going to have to make up your minds."

The wife says, "All right, give us a Ralph Nader. He may not get rich, but at least he'll always tell us the truth."

Dubois And Trotsky

At the beginning of the 20th century most commentators welcomed the new century with predictions of a era of unparalleled progress for humanity. Their optimism was based on the nearly thirty years of peace and prosperity in Europe from 1871 to 1900. Naive faith in the continued power of scientific progress was one of the fruits of the industrial revolution.

Two commentators at the turn of the century saw things differently. W.E.B. DuBois in the United States wrote "The problem of the 20th century is the problem of the color line." Leon Trotsky in Russia predicted the new century would be "the Age of Permanent Revolution." Subsequent events from 1900 leave no doubt which set of prognosticators understood the spirit of the coming century.

The naive faith in progress by 1914 had run into the hard reality of world war. If that debacle was not enough to shatter the optimist's illusion, "civilized humanity" decided to repeat the bloody venture on a larger scale in 1938. Besides international blood letting the 20th century has been punctuated by mass murder, race riots, pollution, and the threat of a war to end all wars along with the human species. Looking back from 1970 makes the former faith in an age of progress in this century look at best as a sad delusion and at worst as a cynical mockery.

Against the optimists dreams, the predictions of DuBois and Trotsky stand out in bold relief as the description of the century in which we live. The problem of the color line erupted through the shabby veneer of America under which it lay covered (except for lynchings--legal and otherwise) through most of the first half of the century. By 1964 however, Marcus Garvey was no longer just an historical accident, but the historical predescessor to Malcolm X.

The color line broke into history not only in America but throughout the world with a wave of anti-colonial, nationalist revolts. The color line broke into history in Asia when the yellow people of Vietnam lead by Ho Chi Minh confronted succesively French and then American imperialism with their succesive front men: Bao Dai, Diem, Ky and Thieu. The color line broke into history in Africa when the Black people of the Congo lead by Patrice Lumumba confronted Belgian-British-American imperialism with their front man: Moise Tshombe. The problem of the color line has broken into history from Sharpeville, South Africa to Watts, California.

The color line erupting into history was also the confirmation that the 20th century would be the Age of Permanent Revolution. Trotsky's insight was that in an imperialist epoch the same issue around which the American Revolution was fought--national independence and liberation--takes on deeper revolutionary significance.

In 1776 the propertied class led the fight for national liberation and used that struggle to establish their own social dominance. In the 20th century this once revolutionary class which is predominantly Anglo-European becomes vitally threatened by the very same demand--national liberation--they once used against the old regime. The national liberation of oppressed people at home and abroad whose countries and communities are owned by the Anglo-European ruling class becomes a threat to the very existence of that class and their Moise Tshombe front men.

In order to satisfy the demand of national liberation in the 20th century the oppressed people of the world must take control of the resources of their own countries and communities. That is the national liberation movements which are true to their goal must go on from national revolution to socialist revolution. Thus the revolution becomes permanent starting with national liberation and not ending until it has established socialist democracy.

Thus we see the "independent" nations of Africa under constant social tension because these neo-colonial states cannot satisfy the demands of national liberation. Black nationalism has not spoken its last to these bourgeois regimes for the problem of the 20th century--the color line--is the motor force of the Age of Permanent Revolution.

It's The Second Half Of The Cruise

To the editor:

Current controversy raging over my reluctance to have the Students' Educational System tape record, edit, and provide transcriptions of my lectures in Comparative Literature 201 and 202 needs coherent clarification. My reluctance is not an obstructionist effort to minimize, negate or frustrate student rights; it is not an effort to stifle the Students' Educational System itself.

When approached six weeks ago by a representative of the System, I told him I would discuss the proposal with my colleagues in the Program of Comparative Literature. I did so, and we came to the following conclusions:

Literature by definition deals more with interpretation than with fact. Even textual analysis is usually more subjective than objective. Literature can be examined only in terms of subtlety and nuance. The reduction of literary interpretations to anything less than the professor's full remarks necessarily removes precisely the nuances and subtleties that validate literary criticism as a discipline, leaving a set of basic cliches of Readers Digest sophistication.

Any such editing or reduction therefore destroys the very subtlety and nuance which is, personally, my goal in the classroom.

I understand that, in courses of a more objective nature where basic definitions are more concrete, such transcriptions of basic givens might be very helpful.

My entire approach to teaching, even in the large lecture situation, consists in making something happen concerning literature between me and the mind of every individual student. He is, I hope, catching the nuances and subtleties, interpreting my interpretation, reevaluating his own thought in terms of what I have to say on the subject matter. Even in the large lecture situation, I consider that something highly personal is happening in the classroom. My students are, of course, the best judges of whether or not this does indeed happen.

I think therefore that any attempt to reduce, through editing, certain complexities imposes an interpretation on lectures which is not necessarily valid. As far as I am concerned, personally, any such reduction destroys the very kind of critical consciousness I am trying to develop in the classroom. It further depersonalizes, dehumanizes the classroom.

What has upset me considerably is that the System informed me by telephone, Monday afternoon, that it would tape, edit, transcribe and distribute my lectures with or without my permission, in spite of departmental policy.

What the Systems' organizers do not understand is that, above and beyond the suspect morality of such an operation, there are legal complications of serious import for all concerned. In conversations with deans, the provost's office and university legal counsels, I have discovered that there is an actual legal precedent, in California, which might be investigated. "Common law copyright" prohibits the reproduction and sale of lecture materials without the permission of the lecturer.

I am sorry that the System has chosen to make an issue of this matter. Handled more delicately, with the consent of the professors concerned, it could provide a real service, perhaps, to students and faculty alike. Handled belligerently, it can only cause scrutiny of the System itself, which is probably operating contrary to "common law copyright" laws.

Has the System realized, for example, the implications of its editing of lectures? If I, for example, quote the critic Ernest Jones on Hamlet and if the system edits the lecture to make it appear that Mr. Jones' remarks are mine, I can be sued by Mr. Jones on copyright grounds, even though I myself have not published anything, but have been "edited" by the System? This is just one concrete example of the problems that can arise if such matters are handled haphazardly.

All in all, I cannot understand, on moral terms, why the system would insist on covering courses whose professors object, on reasonable grounds. My above remarks on the nature of literary criticism and my own ideas on what should happen in the classroom constitute reason enough, I think, to validate my reluctance.

In all good faith, I wish the System well, if it can provide a service to students in certain disciplines where editing and reduction do not destroy the very discipline it seeks to clarify.

I have explained this in deatail to my students in Comparative Literature 201 and 202. Quite frankly, I do not wish to be depersonalized by a tape recorder. I believe firmly enough in the individual sensitivity of every individual student in my classes and in their power of interpretation.

I urge the System to continue, with written permission from professors involved, so that it may protect itself from scrutiny which might invalidate it entirely on legal grounds.

Sincerely,
JACK W. DEAVER

And You Know He Hates To Loose

To The Lance:

I just got through reading your editorial printed in the January 28th issue of the Daily Collegian and I just had to write to you. May I ask you just what are you living for? You condemn the educational system, religion, and life in general. Just why are you so dissatisfied? Nothing on this earth is perfect, everything has its faults, that much I must agree. But honestly, is your solution the real answer? Is dropping out (to any degree) really the sensible thing to do? Just what will it accomplish? The way I see it, only you, yes only you, will feel its results; and they won't be pleasant for the administration and the generation you condemn so heavily couldn't care less. Just what can you do without an education or without laws. Oh, yes, I know you'll find a place on this earth and lear your "perfect life full of sexuality and freedom where no one will "dictate" your life. But big deal! I can find that much right here on this university. Is that all you want out of life? If it is, I feel sorry for you. You don't know what you're missing. For the first time in my life I have found life really fantastic and even with all its faults, I'm not about to cop out life you to try to find something that doesn't exist. I still see hope in our educational system but just how can we possibly improve it if everyone takes your way out? We, as a student body, should organize ourselves and work toward improvement within the law, but a lot more than what is presently being done. I know it's a slow process but how quick will you get results by dropping out. You'll never get enough students to go along with you to get any results as there is a huge waiting line of more deserving students trying to get in who will find your place even before you move out of your room. So please open your eyes before it's too late. You're right, education is a gift, one of the greatest gifts anyone can receive. I don't know about you but I'm working my way through college as my parents were never given this gift and thus can't afford to send me. So don't take it for granted if you do have it easy, for you'll lose it and never be able to regain it. The good is much deeper, and the evil much smaller than you think. So, please, for your sake and the sake of those who agree with you, take another long, hard look and work toward betterment instead of taking the easy way out.

You were quite correct at the beginning of your editorial. "It's the season for skiing and tobogganing and ice skating, for philosophizing and meditation, for thoughts upon thoughts of love, upon thoughts of this life that is to each of us, for....

Patricia Mekal

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The following are some thoughts by the author upon the above response)

In light of the response to my late column, Miss Mekal, it seems to me that I should clarify my interpretation and subsequent usage of the term "dropping out". When I composed the script, I attempted to posit the term as an allusion for taking a metaphorical step backwards, taking some time, and taking the trouble to see beyond, beneath, and aside from the boundaries of eyesight, all in relation to the relative reality in which we, as Godlike creatures in hairless apes' bodies (not being primarily students) find ourselves every day of our lives, wherever geographically, physically, or emotionally we might discover ourselves to be. From all of this, I was merely attempting to elicit an increased (or initial) awareness of the spiritual component in human existence, mutually related both to God (Whom I truly believe of), as well as in relation to the god in each of us, taken collectively through our individual and unique realizations of the self.

Yes, and in answer to your question, Pat, as to what am I living for?.....well, this, to me, is quite a long story, certainly unfeasible in light of the prohibitive restrictions inherent in any column or editorial, and certainly applying so at this Mickey Mouse newspaper, but please suffice to say..... I have Chosen life.

To The Editor:

Every living being has within him the desire to love. Practically, however, we see that this loving propensity is being frustrated in so many ways. Even on an individual level true love in which both the lover and the beloved are completely happy through their loving activities is a rare and at best temporary occurrence. Attempts to love all humanity are even more difficult and even if accomplished would still be imperfect if one did not also love every living entity.

The spiritual master of the International Society for Krishna Consciousness, His Divine Grace A.C. Bhaktivedanta Swami Prahbupada, describes that the missing link to loving every living entity is the knowledge of where to repose our love so that everyone is happy. Srila Phahbupada further explains that our loving propensity expands as a vibration of light expands and we do not know where it ends. This loving propensity can be fully satisfied when it is reposed in the original Supreme Personality of Godhead, Lord Krishna (sanskrit name for God meaning the most attractive person).

The Krishna Consciousness movement is dedicated entirely to teaching the science of how one can love all of the living entities by learning how to love the ultimate object of love, Lord Krishna.

According to Vedic scriptures, the literary incarnation of God written down 5,000 years ago, and also Lord Chaitanya, Krishna Himself appearing as a devotee 500 years ago in India, the easiest and most practical method of learning to love Gog in this age of quarrel and hypocrisy is by chanting the names of God, which have the same potency as God. Srila Prahbupada comes in a direct disciplic succession from Lord Chaitanya and he simply requests that we water the root of the tree of life by learning to love God through chanting of the maha-mantra (great chant for deliverance): Hare Krishna Hare Krishna Krishna Krishna Hare Hare/Hare Rama Hare Rama Rama Rama Hare Hare.

Serious students who would like to try this sublime and easy process of purification of our consciousness or awareness of God through chanting Hare Krishna and through an in depth study of the cream of Vedic literature, The Bhagavad Gita, are invited to participate in a one credit honors colloquium sponsored by Southwest and Cance House. A disciple of His Divine Grace well versed in Vedic literature will lecture on various aspects of the Bhagavad Gita, followed by questions and answers, ecstatic chanting of the maha-mantra, and distribution of Vedic food preparations. The course will meet every Monday at 5:30 p.m. starting February 8 for approximately 1 1/2 hours. The meeting place will be the Cance House main lounge. To The Editor:

I question that the group which calls itself Selective Alternatives to the Draft has thought of all the alternatives.

I leave it for each to decide whether a Selective Service System which has the power to disrupt a man's life for six years, and to send him to kill and be killed, is an appropriate manifestation of the freedom we all live under.

S.A.D., as I understand its views, is for a system which could disrupt a person's life for a while, but would let him serve his country either in the military or, say, in VISTA. Two flaws in such a system disturb me. First, it affirms the government's right to interrupt a person's life for a while and force him into a job he may not like. But second, and more important, it maintains that service can be both forced and useful. While I cannot speak for the military, my year as a VISTA volunteer causes me to question such a view. Even my most dedicated co-workers had serious doubts about their effectiveness, and I can only conclude that, in almost all cases, forcing unmotivated people into VISTA would only be a waste of time and money.

There is, of course, another alternative to the draft -- that of no draft -- and this alternative avoids both the flaws noted above.

New England Air Service Cut Due To Slow Business

MANCHESTER, N.H. (AP)-Northeast Airlines has cut its jet passenger service between northern New England and the Great Lakes from six to four round trips a week because of slow winter business.

The airline said the cutback, which went into effect Monday, will last through April. "The new service reflects the extremely low load factors experienced over the routes during the winter months," a spokesman said.

The cutback drew official protests, including one from Gov. Walter Peterson.

The new schedule calls for four round trips a week from Manchester to Detroit and Chicago and new stops twice a week at Cleveland and Burlington, Vt.

Northeast started the service in April of 1969 with two daily round trips from Portland, Maine, to Detroit and Chicago by way of Manchester. That schedule was cut to one daily flight about a year ago.

Meanwhile in Washington, Sen. Norris Cotton, (R) N.H., Tuesday criticized the Civil Aeronautics Board for "legislating wasteful, ruinous overcompetition along the air routes, then intervening later to justify its past sins."

Cotton commented at the opening session of hearings on the economic status of the aviation industry.

"If the CAB does not wake up soon to the need for local air service in New England," he said, "the agency will doom our area's economy."

Cotton suggested carriers divided flights and time in competitive areas where too many planes have the same destination.

Infirmary Gives Pregnancy Test

Girls suspecting that they are pregnant may have a pregnancy test at the Health Services. The test should be performed 42 days after the start of the last menstrual period. Before that time the test may not be accurate.

A member of the nursing staff must be seen before the test is administered at which time a sterile container is given out. The urine specimen should be first-voided in the morning and brought directly to the Clinical Laboratory. Laboratory hours are Monday-Friday, 8-4:30.

YSA Panel To Discuss Four Areas Of Action

The Young Socialist Alliance will present the first in a series of Thursday night forums tonight, February 4, at 8 p.m. in room 174 in the Campus Center. Tonight's forum will be of what the Young Socialist Alliance is and does.

The four panel speakers will present areas of YSA's actions: Antiwar, 3rd World and Black Liberation, Women's Liberation, and Socialism.

Claire Moriarty, co-chairwoman of the UMass Student Mobilization Committee, who has been actively involved in the antiwar movement for several years and took major leadership and organizational responsibilities in major demonstrations and the May Strike, will speak on Anti-war.

Linda Ayers has been active in Black student organizations at Clark University for several years, and will be speaking about Black and Third World Liberation.

Suzanne Mitchell from UMass Women's Liberation will be speaking about the Women's Liberation Movement.

Jane Roland will be speaking about the socialist program on which the YSA is based.

The following is a statement released by the group.

"The YSA is a multi-national revolutionary socialist youth group working for a Socialist America in a Socialist world. We see Socialism as the only alternative to the existing system and its consequent by-products of exploitation, poverty, wars of aggression, oppression of national minorities, and the subjugation of women. The speakers in tonight's forum will discuss areas of work combat to eventually eliminate these oppressive by-products.

"The YSA supports the mass antiwar movement, and works actively to build mass demonstrations on the basis of the immediate withdrawal of all U.S. troops in Southeast Asia.

"The YSA defends the struggles for self determination for all national minorities. The Chicano, Afro-American, Puerto Rican, and Native American people represent the most exploited section of the United States population. We believe that the formation of independent political parties; for example, the Chicano La Raza Unida Party in Texas and Colorado, is key in the development of struggles for National Self-Determination. These parties provide opposition to the Democratic and Republican parties which have betrayed the interests of the people.

"The oldest and most ingrown form of oppression, and a class society is the oppression of women. The rise of the Women's movement today challenges all of the institutions of Capitalistic Society from the fundamental base of the traditional nuclear family, to the restrictions of employment.

"The YSA played a major role in the building of the Women's demonstrations on August 26, 1970- the first massive, united, public political action in the Women's Liberation Movement. This action was a broad based coalition around central issues as the demand for free safe legal abortions, free 24 hour child care, and equal employment and education.

"The YSA is a youth group which has come from a strong political history basing actions and perspectives on historical lessons as well as a defined political program."

Literature concerning all aspects of the YSA will be available at the forum.

Draft Counselors Corner

Work On Deferments Now

By Gilbert J. Salk
Staff Reporter

The major news today is that it is of utmost importance to begin working on deferments NOW! Avoid the graduation rush. But first, a brief word (or two) from our sponsor.

Several people have requested that there be another training program for draft counselors. Due to the overwhelming popular demand, the course will be repeated. It will begin next Thursday, February 11 in 804-808 CC and run for a total of four weeks. It will meet each Thursday night from 7:00 p.m. to 11:00 p.m.

There will be a charge of five dollars to cover the cost of materials, but there are some scholarships available. No need to sign up -- just mark it in your calendar and come. The life you save may be your own (or, your brother's).

Word #2. Group CO counseling will begin again today. It will meet every Monday and Thursday from 1:00 to 4:00 on a come-when-you-can-leave-when- you-must basis. Meetings will be in 805 CC. Anyone curious about the conscientious objector position or in the process of applying for a 1-O is welcome to attend.

And now, back to our program.

If you expect to be out of school in June for any reason, this is the time to start thinking about what you are going to do about the draft. It takes time to prepare a strong case for any kind of deferment, and in most cases you will need the assistance of a draft counselor. Since a number of people will probably manage to conveniently forget they are faced by the draft until the last month of school, counselors will be swamped. If you wait until then, your personal case will not receive the attention it deserves. So be good to yourself. Do it now.

If you have any kind of medical problems, see a draft counselor to discuss whether it can lead to a medical deferment and how to go about documenting it properly. It is seldom enough to walk into the AFEES for your physical and expect the examiners to spot your problem. They are notoriously blind. You should have copies of letters and other documents from your doctor (s) testifying that you do, in fact, wear braces on your teeth or only one leg.

If you are a conscientious objector (i.e., given a choice, you would prefer not to kill anybody) it takes time to write out your answers to the questions on the SSS Form 150 and to gather support letters. You should discuss your case with a draft counselor for advice, cirticism, and encouragement.

If you don't have any way out, you should definitely see a counselor as soon as you finish reading this column. He or she can help you discover alternatives of which you may have been unaware. The fact of the matter is that almost everybody has some valid alternative to becoming cannon fodder in Uncle Sam's Overseas Diplomatic Corps. Dig it.

Free draft counseling is available from Draft Counseling Services in 418E Student Union (2nd Floor) or from the Valley Peace Center in downtown Amherst. Use them.

Seminar on

Mind Control (TM) and E.S.P.

Silva Mind Control will be conducting a special series of lectures/seminars on the conscious control of one's own brain waves. Recent publications have described brain waves as a new system for human development.

This new Scientific Breakthrough deals with the conscious control of one's own brainwaves. Researchers have demonstrated that with Alpha Training, a person can eliminate Anxiety, Tension, and Frustration. Also, they could enhance concentration, awareness and recall. In fact, Alpha control is escalating the expansion of human potential development at a fantastic pace.

There are four principal brainwaves: The Beta Wave, associated with the outer conscious levels, physical activity, anxiety, tension etc. The Alpha Wave, associated with inner-levels of mental activity, tranquility, inspiration creativity, concentration, E.S.P., accelerated healing process, memory, learning and many other phenomena. The Theta Wave, related to deeper levels of meditation, concentration, and potentially even greater learning and recall capabilities. And finally the Delta Wave, associated with deep sleep or fatal unconsciousness.

Silva Mind Control, using Mental Exercises, has successfully trained thousands of individuals to turn the Alpha-Theta Wave on and off at will and then practice applications of this exciting new technique for developing a superior way of life.

Not only can you improve I.Q. but a person trained with this technique can easily learn to control certain areas of the autonomic system, including heartbeat, respiration, body temperature, pain, etc. The implications of this kind of training with regards to health and disease are staggering.

LEARN SPECIFIC TECHNIQUES

Once you have mastered the techniques of Mind Control you can: Totally Relax anytime you desire; banish insomnia, anxiety, tension, have greater artistic ability; enhance your learning capacity; have more vitality and energy; be more successful in your business and personal life; eliminate bad habits and create good habits; control your weight, smoking, etc.; improve your self-confidence and assurance; eliminate fears and become a truly happy, effective person. You'll learn techniques to help your loved ones in dramatic and effective ways. Become a better student, parent, employee-employer; a more effective problem solver, and much, much more.

Our students learn techniques to become more sensitive to the feelings and emotional attitudes of others. To become more intuitive; learn to develop controlled E.S.P. and clairvoyance and every day practical applications of the so-called Extra Sense!

Attend one of these special seminars and learn how Alpha-Theta brain wave control is being used. The greatest learning concept devised by man.

American Youth Mobile, Show Poor Voting Record

WASHINGTON (AP)-American youth are better educated, more mobile and less prone to marry than their counterparts of a decade ago. But, as voters, they're shirkers.

They also make up a sizable chunk of the nation's civilian labor force-and their incomes are rising, a fact not ignored by the country's businesses.

The Census Bureau sketched out Wednesday its every-10-year profile of the nation's young between ages 14 and 24.

Youth between 14 and 24 now comprise 20 per cent of the population, compared with 15 percent a decade ago, and 40 million now are in that age group. The population now is younger, with a median age of 27.6 years, compared with 29.5 in 1960.

But the figures indicate the new law lowering the voting age to 18 in federal elections means politicians will have a difficult job in getting young Americans to the polls.

In the November 1968 presidential election, only 33 per cent of the 18 to 20 year olds voted in states where they could cast a ballot for the nation's leaders.

"For all states," the report went on, "only 51 per cent of the persons 21 to 24 years old reported that they voted as compared with 70 per cent of the persons 25 years and older."

From March 1969 to March 1970, the report said, 10.3 million persons between 14 and 24 moved. "Those 22 to 24 years old are especially mobile-45 per cent of the persons of this age moved between 1969 and 1970."

The report showed American youth are more apt to get a more extensive education than they did 10 years ago.

Among young adults who would have recently completed their schooling 78 per cent of the whites and 58 per cent of minority persons were at least high school graduates in 1970. In 1960, the figures were 64 per cent of the whites and 39 per cent of minority descent.

Ten per cent more of the male high school graduates and nine per cent more of the women high school graduates went to college in 1970 than in 1970.

About 94 per cent of young people between ages 14 and 17 were enrolled in school, compared with 90 per cent a decade ago. The percentage of 18 and 19 year olds enrolled was 50 per cent last year, 38 per cent in 1960.

Of 7.4 million college students, 492,000 were Negroes, a 110 per cent increase in a five year period.

In 1960, 64.9 per cent of men between 18 and 24 were single, but in 1970, it was 67 per cent. In 1960, 40.5 per cent of the women were single, but the 1970 figure climbed to 47.7 per cent.

Of the 8.2 million between ages 20 and 24, 65 per cent were in the labor force, 22 per cent in the Armed Services and 13 per cent were not working.

Roiters, Police Clash In Northern Ireland

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP)-Teen aged rioters threw bottles of acid, bricks and other missiles at British troops Wednesday in a street clash touched off when soldiers searched for clandestine arms in a Roman Catholic district.

Troops replied with rubber antiriot bullets, water cannons and baton charges. Seven persons were arrested and one soldier injured.

A number of teen aged girls were among the crowd who set fire to a bus and truck and used them as a barricade. Troops pushed the vehicles aside and scattered 200 persons who faced them.

Protestant workers in an iron foundry in the Springfield Road area joined in the fighting briefly after stones crashed through foundry windows.

A military spokesman said the search turned up some political leaflets but no arms.

Repeated rioting over the past two years has resulted from religious and political differences in this British province.

Many Protestants believe Catholic Militants are ready to try by force to unite Northern Ireland with the predominantly Catholic Irish republic to the south. Catholics claim the Protestant majority in Northern Ireland has denied them equal opportunity in jobs, housing and voting.

Munitions Building Destroyed

BRUNSWICK, Ga. (AP)-A devastating blast and fire leveled a concrete and steel munitions building Wednesday at a Thiokol Chemical Corp. plant.

More than 25 persons were killed. Estimates of the number of injured ranged up to 100.

Dorothy Peeples of the police department in nearby Kingsland, said: "The last count we had at least 25 known dead and they're still finding bodies."

The blast started a huge blaze that consumed the remains of the building where magnesium trip flares were being manufactured for use in Indochina.

The blaze spread to three other buildings and at least 100 wooded acres of the isolated area about 25 miles south of Brunswick near the communities of Woodbine and Kingsland.

Egypt Remains Silent On Post-Ceasefire Plans

Egypt announced Wednesday it had decided on its course of action after expiration of the Middle East cease fire but refused to say what that course would be.

The armies of Egypt, Jordan and other Arab states were on alert, and Israel shored up its defenses along the Suez Canal. But sources in Beirut, Lebanon, and elsewhere in the Middle East remained hopeful that the six month truce would be extended when the deadline arrives Friday midnight along the Suez Canal and the River Jordan.

Cairo radio said Egyptian President Anwar Sadat will make known his government's decision at an emergency session of Egypt's parliament Thursday evening.

Egypt's public position has been that it will not renew the cease fire, unless progress is registered at the Middle East peace talks going on under the auspices of U.N. special envoy Gunnar V. Jarring in New York.

But Egyptian leaders have indicated that, even without a truce extension, Cairo would not order a resumption of fighting, unless Egypt is attacked. Israel has said it will not fire the first shot if the truce ends.

Cairo radio said Egypt's position was decided upon Tuesday at a meeting of the Higher Defense Council headed by Sadat. The president relayed that decision Wednesday to the Central Committee of the Arab Socialist Union—ASU—Egypt's only political party.

The broadcast said the committee discussed Sadat's report, taking into consideration possible repercussions that Egypt's course of action might have domestically as well as in the Arab world and abroad.

Israel has already agreed to prolong the cease fire and Jordan has served formal notice it will follow Egypt's suit either way on the issue.

Computers May Find Cancer

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP)-At some future date a doctor might sit at a computer console and type in the medical history, physical desription and preliminary examination data of a woman suspected of having breast cancer.

And the computer, moments later, might type back a number-say 62.5-for the doctor.

The number would mean the patient has a 62.5 per cent chance of having breast cancer. The doctor then would know he must proceed with an extensive examination that would include biopsy and X rays.

Tentative plans for such a computer service are being mapped at Emory University and 13 other medical schools under the guidance of Dr. Robert L. Egan, a professor in radiology at Emory.

But whether the service is ever intitiated at a cost approaching $500,000 annually depends on whether funds are found to underwrite it.

The National Institute of Health and American College of Radiology indicated considerable interest when they provided $106,427 in planning grants.

Egan, known in medical circles for refining the X ray detection of breast cancer, says the need for such a service is critical. He points out that only 7,000 radiologists in the country are capable of detecting breast cancer and the disease kills 28,000 women annually.

The American Cancer Society says breast cancer is the leading cause of death in the female aged 40-44 and one out of every 19 women will contract the disease.

"It follows that new and radically different approaches to diagnose, treat and prevent breast cancer are needed," he said.

"Routine screening of the general population for breast cancer with our present means is almost impossible task," says Egan.

Hotel, Restaurant Admin. Receives New Grants

A grant of money for use as an emergency aid found for students and also for the start of a development fund has been received by the Department of Hotel and Restaurant Administration at the UMass, from Robert Sage, President of the Fenway Motor Hotels, Boston. Announcement of receipt of the grant has been made by Dr. Donald E. Lundberg, Head of the Department.

Mr. Sage heads a firm that operates several motor hotels in the Boston area, and recently was elected president of the Greater Boston Hotel and Motor Inn Association.

Dr. Lundberg pointed out that the usual money available to a university department is highly restricted to current operations and is always less than needed for the orderly development of an academic department. Also, there is no provision in the usual allocated funds to meet emergency needs of students, and available money for that purpose from other sources is scarce.

In the case of Mr. Sage's grant, the money provides an unrestricted fund for students in the department who need emergency aid and also is available for use in development of the department.

Dr. Lundberg cites this grant as an example of how people and firms in the industry can assist the Department of Hotel and Restaurant Administration in its mission of training young people for an industry which now embraces all the services needed by people away from home, including travel, transportation, feeding, lodging, and rental of cars and other equipment.

GE Disappointed In Loss Of Contract To Swedish Firm

PITTSFIELD, Mass. (AP)-A General Electric Co. spokesman said Wednesday he is disappointed that Northeast Utilities Corp. has awarded a contract for the largest power transformer it has ever ordered to a Swedish firm.

Northeast said the Swedish firm, known as "ASEA," bid $775,000 while G E submitted a big 13 per cent higher.

The 935,000 kilovolt transformer will be installed at Northeast's Millstone Point plant in Connecticut.

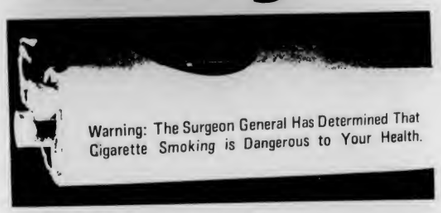
The G E spokesman said, "on this order, we believe we were very competitive as an American supplier."

O'Donnell Shot In Worcester

WORCESTER, Mass (AP)-Warren F. O'Donnell, brother of former White House aide Kenneth P. O'Donnell, remained in critical condition Wednesday at City Hospital after being shot in the back in a restaurant Tuesday night.

Police said O'Donnell was shot with a pistol when he tried to foil a holdup attempt by two masked men at a lounge section of the Coach and Six restaurant in Worcester.

O'Donnell, 40, of Worcester, underwent emergency surgery and was placed in the intensive care unit.



His brother Kenneth was an aide to President John F. Kennedy and after Kennedy's assassination remained in the White House assisting Johnson.

Nurse Practitioners Expand Roles

Pauline Farineau, R.N. had four years experience working with a busy general practitioner in Fitchburg before her husband, Robert, returned to complete his college education. As an office nurse she had practiced the usual role of preparing patients for examination, giving medication, and explaining the details of treatment prescribed by the physician who employed her. When she moved to Amherst the University Health Services was able to attract her because of a new program with an expanded role of patient care responsibility--a nurse-practitioner. Polly and three other nurses are now part of the new nurse-practitioner clinic at the University Health Services.

Nurse-practitioners are one of the latest developments in American medical care designed to meet the crises of physician shortages which are becoming more acute throughout the country. Successful programs at the Massachusetts General Hospital and elsewhere have demonstrated that nurses can carry on many of the functions that have been traditionally performed by physicians. These programs have enabled physicians to spend more time with patients who have more complex medical problems.

Careful studies of nurse-practitioner programs have shown that nurses with special training can successfully diagnose and treat certain minor medical problems and that patients are well satisfied with the care they receive. The survey of UMass students conducted this past spring, indicated that the vast majority of students are willing to be seen and treated by a competent medically trained practitioner who was not a physician. In fact only 16% of the students surveyed indicated they would have an objection.

During the past several years the outpatient clinic of the University Health Services has had increasing difficulty in providing service for the large number of "walk-in" patients who come each day without an appointment.

The Health Services took the complaint of "Why do I have to wait so long for a minor problem?" seriously and has tried to help solve this problem with the nurse-practitioner clinic. The nurses in the clinic were selected on the basis of past experience in working in positions of greater responsibility. Some have worked in intensive care units of emergency departments, some were night duty emergency nurses, others had experience as head nurses in large hospital wards. These nurses were trained during the summer in a special seminar program that focused on the diagnosis and treatment of medical problems common to our University community--infectious disease, injuries, respiratory disease, and allergies. Their work in the nurse-practitioner clinic is directly supervised by one of three physicians who is available at all times to confirm their diagnosis and to teach new methods of treatment.

Dr. Thomas McBride, Assistant Medical Director of the University Health Services, supervises the program for the group.

The Health Services staff, with the assistance of Mr. Lee Rosenberg, Graduate Student, Department of Industrial Engineering, are in the process of carefully evaluating the program both from the patient's point of view and the approval of the medical staff. Early indications point to considerable satisfaction - from patients seen by nurses. The nurse practitioner clinic has helped keep the overall waiting time from increasing for walk-in patients and has enabled the medical staff to see many more patients than in previous years. Also, there appears to be an increasing number of patients with less serious medical problems who are selecting the nurse-practitioner whom they have seen in the past. As for the nurse-practitioners, they feel that they are using their training to the fullest and are enthusiastic about the most satisfying of rewards--diagnosing a patient's illness accurately and treating the patient successfully.

When Polly Farineau's husband receives his degree this spring, she plans to go back to work for the same general practitioner in Fitchburg but not just as an office nurse. He has heard of our nurse-practitioner program and plans to have Polly continue in her new expanded role as a nurse-practitioner with his private patients. We hate to lose her but we feel that we will have changed things a bit for the better outside the University as well as helping to provide better care to our own students during the past year.

U.S. Gives Air Support To Viet Cambodia Raids

SAIGON (AP)-About 10,000 South Vietnamese troops have launched a new campaign in Cambodia with full U.S. air combat support to clean out enemy border sanctuaries, Saigon officials said Wednesday night.

The operation has been in full swing for about a week but no major fighting has been reported so far.

The officials reported the drive would provide a fresh screen for American troops now being withdrawn from Vietnam and would pave way for an announcement by President Nixon in April of additional cutbacks beyond those already disclosed.

Others saw the move simply as an opportunity for Lt. Gen. Do Cao Tri, an aggressive field commander, to deliver new blows to North Vietnamese and Viet Cong forces.

Tri led the major South Vietnamese incursions into Cambodia last May and June that destroyed enemy bases and were credited with speeding an earlier phase of American troop withdrawals from the war zone. U.S. ground troops took part in that operation but are now barred by Washington legislation from entering Cambodia.

One official said the South Vietnamese are going back through sanctuaries bordering South Vietnam's 3rd military region "to be sure we haven't missed anything that would endanger the withdrawal of U.S. troops."

Tri commands the 3rd military region, which includes Saigon and 11 surrounding provinces, and shares 231 miles of border with Cambodia. About 20,000 U.S. combat troops are being withdrawn from the 3rd military region in the next three months. This will leave only about 5,000 U.S. combat troops plus support forces in a region once the prime responsibility of the Americans.

About 7,500 South Vietnamese troops already in Cambodia were joined by 2,500 fresh troops sent across the border.

Officials said the Unitd States was providing full helicopter gunship, medical evacuation helicopter and logistics support. They also are providing B52 Stratofortresses and tactical fighter bombers as required, they added.

Elements of three North Vietnamese and Viet Cong divisions, although in Cambodia, are within a few days striking distance of Tri's 3rd military region.

Tri apparently is trying to keep the enemy off balance until the rainy season begins in June, when maneuvering and supplying is difficult. The rainy season extends until next November and thus would buy time for thousands more American troops to withdraw.

Officials said the South Vietnamese would move up to 20 miles across the border on the new drive.

The allied commands in Saigon, without saying which side held the initiative, reported stepped up fighting in South Vietnam's northern and central sectors for a third day.

Most of the action involved small unit, guerrilla type clashes or enemy shellings of U.S. and South Vietnamese bases.

U.S. B52 heavy bombers and smaller tactical bombers kept up the incessant pounding of the Ho Chi Minh trail in southern Laos.

They extended their saturation bombing through its 117th day in the effort to stem the flow of North Vietnamese men and munitions through Laos to Cambodia and South Vietnam.

The allied military commands reported seven ground actions in the northern sector of South Vietnam in the last 24 hours, three of them around the provincial capital of Quang Ngai, 75 miles south of Da Nang.

American and South Vietnamese forces claimed killing 75 Communist command soldiers in the seven encounters, and reported their own casual ties as 10 South Vietnamese wounded.

Also in the north, headquarters of the U.S. Americal division at Chu Lai, 50 miles south of Da Nang, was hit by 15 rockets. A U.S. Marine position nine miles northwest of Da Nang, was struck by mortar shells. U.S. casualties were listed as four wounded in the two barrages.

J. Ronald

Getty Goes Hollywood

HOLLYWOOD (AP)-A new producer in the movie business is named J. Ronald Getty. Yes, he's one of THOSE Gettys.

The son of billionaire J. Paul Getty occupies an office at Warner Bros. and he has his hand in all phases of several productions. Odd casting. He doesn't think so.

"I've always been interested in the creative arts," said the tall, solidly built Getty, 42. "In the Getty Oil Co., before we sold off our West Coast marketing business, I was home office marketing manager, and I got involved in the advertising and sales promotion. We had some very successful and creative campaigns."

Now he has turned his interest to the making of motion pictures, but he insists that he is no dillettante-"I don't believe investing in hobbies," he commented in a manner reminiscent of his oilman father.

The younger Getty is investing his money-and outside financing as well-in a series of films with partners Leon Fromkess, a veteran producer, and Richard McDonald, a businessman.

Their first effort was "Flareup," an MGM release starring Raquel Welch, that Getty expects to turn a good profit. Recently the company completed "Zeppelin," a Warner Bros. release with Michael York and Elke Sommer. It's an aerial spectacle of World War I, filmed in England, Malta, Germany, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Just finished is "Shelia," a modern love story concerning a white high school boy and a black girl.

J. Ronald Getty is a graduate of the University of Southern California, married with three children. He has been in charge of marketing and manufacturing in Europe, Africa and the Middle East for Getty Oil.

BOSTON (AP) - The Boston Red Sox said Wednesday they have given manager Eddie Kasko a raise for the second year of his two year contract despite the club's disappointing third place finish, 21 games behind the pennant winning Baltimore Orioles, last season.

"We said originally that if he did a good job we'd raise the figure in the second year," general manager Dick O'Connell said at the team's final winter press luncheon. "We think he did a good job."

The Red Sox also announced that 15 of the 38 players on their roster have signed their contracts for 1971. The list includes 17 game winner Ray Culp, who was the team's top pitcher for the third year in a row, and Luis Aparicio, obtained from the Chicago White Sox in a winter trade.

O'Connell said Culp got a raise of an unspecified amount. He said the Red Sox just picked up Aparicio's contract, since he already had signed with Chicago for 1971, but that he understood the star shortstop also was given a salary hike after his banner 1970 season.

The general manager added that Aparicio will accompany his old Chicago team to his native Venezuela for a pair of exhibition games this spring which he had arranged before being traded, but that contrary to earlier speculation, he would not play in the games. He said the Red Sox had made the decision, and that Aparicio had accepted it.

The other players announced as already signed were pitchers Bob Bolin, Jack Curtis, Cal Koonce, Bill Lee, Jim Lonborg, Dick Mills, Ken Tatum and Gary Wagner; catchers Carlton Fisk and Bob Montgomery; infielder Doug Griffin and outfielders Ben Oglivie and Jarvis Tatum.

LOS ANGELES (AP) - "It will be quite interesting," says UCLA basketball coach John Wooden, "to see how our team will react to the underdog role for the first time in a long, long time."

For the past four years, the Bruins of UCLA have ruled as champions in the national collegiate ranks. But on Saturday night, when they face the Trojans of Southern California, the Bruins don't have the better record.

They stand 15-1, having lost to Notre Dame, while USC hasn't been beaten in 16 games. Yet newsmen by a 2-1 vote favor UCLA to win Saturday night in collegiate basketball's most important clash so far in the current season.

Both clubs are 4-0 in Pacific 8 conference play and it's the conference winner who goes into the NCAA title tournament.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

Cancer individuals abhor waste. They are practical, often perceive land values. Can get in on ground floor and work to top. Those persons usually are loyal to family and community. They aid those who seem genuinely in need. The Cancer-born can be sentimental and, very often, too quick to forgive errors made by family member. Cancer often marries Capricorns; is physically drawn to Scorpio and is lucky in financial areas for Gemini.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Hold off on journeys. Don't commit yourself in writing. Take special care in traffic. Control impulses. Take time to analyze. Stick to facts. No strive for additional information.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Money matters may be in state of confusion. Hold off on expensive commitments. Conservative course should be advocated. One who advised in past could make real appearance.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Finish rather than begin projects. Plenty of pressure. Hold off on initiating contacts. Dig in deep to maintain position. Legal advice may have to be reviewed and revised.

Girl Gymnasts Win Squeaker, Marblehead YMCA Is Victim

The UMass Girls Gymnastics Team, composed mostly of JV members with some Varsity gymnasts lending their support in weaker areas, barely won over the Marblehead YMCA girls gymnastics team last Saturday.

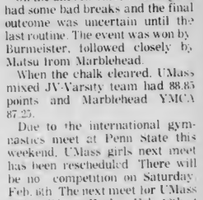
A capacity crowd watched the young Marblehead team leap into a 2-point lead after the first event, which was won by Sue Matsu from Marblehead, who scored 8.7. Linda Seikunas placed second and Michelle Baker from Marblehead third.

UMass girls more than made up for the loss in side horse vaulting. Margie Comos won the vaulting event with a 9.0, highest score in the meet. She was followed by Matsue and Linda Seikunas. After the second event, UMass was leading 45.95 to 44.05.

On the balance team, Marblehead girls came through again capturing 2 out of 3 first places. Anne Burmeister won the event with a score of 8.3. At the end of the third event, UMass lead had dwindled to 1 point.

On the uneven bars, UMass girls had some bad breaks and the final outcome was uncertain until the last routine. The event was won by Burmeister, followed closely by Matsu from Marblehead.

When the chalk cleared, UMass mixed JV-Varsity team had 88.85 points and Marblehead YMCA 87.25.



Due to the international gymnastics meet at Penn State this weekend, UMass girls next meet has been rescheduled. There will be no competition on Saturday, Feb. 6th. The next meet for UMass girls will be on Friday, Feb. 12th at 3:00 p.m.

Redmen Must Be Ready vs. Iona

Daily Collegian
Sports
VOLUME XCVIII, ISSUE 80
THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1971

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

Coming off of what head coach Jack Leaman has called "a great win at Worcester", the UMass hoopsters return to Curry Hicks Cage tonight for an encounter with Iona College with tap-off set for 8.

At yesterday's Varsity M Club luncheon assistant coach Peter Broaca in assessing this game said that this will be a tough game for the Redmen as far as mental attitude is concerned. Coming off of three big games in a row there is always that chance for a letdown feeling and the Redmen will have to counter this to come out on top against the upset-minded Gaels.

Iona is a New York City team which means they come ready to play. They realize that a win for them would be a big plus for their season and anything is go for them this evening.

They possess as their forte a balanced attack with four players in double figures in scoring, and a tough, stingy defense which ranks 15th in the nation.

As for their floor play the Gaels like to move all over the court on both offense and defense. During the course of the game forwards move to the backcourt and guards move to the frontcourt. This switching has posed problems for their opponents as it has caused for mismatches resulting in errors.

Art Wiggins is the top Iona threat, scoring at a 19 point clip and averaging 11 rebounds per contest as a 6-4 forward. He'll be joined up front by 6'10 center Bernie Sochia whose stats read 10 and 10 for points and caroms.

Harry Hart, at 6'1 mans the third frontcourt position but will also see action in the backcourt in the Gaels' switching manuevers. He is averaging 11 points and 10 rebounds.

In the backcourt Joe Mazella and Bob Grennin will be starting with Quinn also seeing a lot of action. These three will be rotating all over the court during the game trying to create mismatches. Mazella is the top scoring threat of the three averaging 16 points per game.

For the Redmen Julius Erving and John Betancourt are the only sure starters for the game. Coach Leaman will make the decision on the other three starters prior to the game on the basis of yesterday's practice and the physical condition of both Mike Paghara and Ken Mathias.

VARSITY M-At yesterday's luncheon of the UMass Varsity M Club, basketball and particularly the Holy Cross game was the center of attraction. Besides coach Broaca's comments, head coach Leaman and two stars of the Crusader game, Tom McLaughlin and Chris Coffin also had words for the large gathering.

Leaman was noticeably happy over the win and gave his rather cadid play by play of the game films that were made ready for the luncheon by the hard working film team.

McLaughlin was lauded by his coach for his first two efforts as a Redman. Commented Leaman: "I told Tom last week that I'd slowly work him into playing shape by playing him eight or nine minutes a game for the first few contests. But who would ever of thought that he would be playing 79 out of 80 minutes of fine basketball in his first two contests."

McLaughlin took time to thank the coaches, the players and the fans for making his first two games the success that they were. He concluded by thanking a couple of members of the team for catching the flu!

Leaman cited Coffin as the unsung hero of the team. "He hasn't gotten the recognition that he deserves, noted the coach. "He does a great job on defense and sacrifices offensive glory for the role that he plays in defensing the toughest forward on the opposing team and crashing in on the offensive boards."

Frosh Hoopsters Host Chamberlayne JC

By [illegible] ROSENTHAL

Holding a 9-5 record the UMass freshman basketball team will battle what appears to be a rather weak Chamberlayne Junior College team (0-10). The game will be played in the Cage tonight at 6:00.

Chamberlayne Junior College is led by 6' forward Gerald Morris from Rotterdam. Two other players to watch are Bob Nitty (5'10) and Wayne Sands (6'0) both from New Jersey.

The Little Redmen will start the same five they have started all season with Rick Pitino and Pete Trow in the back court and Al Skinner, John Olson, and Art Levine up front.

The UMass frosh continue to show fantastic balance in both scoring and rebounding. All five starters have scoring averages in double figures with Skinner setting the pace at 17. Trow and Pitino are both averaging 15. Levine is averaging 13, and Olson 12. Besides averaging 15 points per game Pitino has also averaged over 10 assists.

Two players Skinner and Olson are both pulling down over 10 rebounds per game and a third Trow is grabbing close to 10 while spending half of his playing time in the backcourt.

Skiers Sweep Two

For the first time in two years, the UMass Ski team made a clean sweep of the first racing weekend of the season. For the past two years, the Boston College Slalom on Saturday and the Worcester Poly Tech Giant Slalom on Sunday have proven to be the toughest meets for the Redman skiers. Last weekend was a different story.

Saturday was the Boston College dual slalom. Two separate courses were set and each member of the six man 'A' team was to have one run on each course. Seeded first for the team was senior Jim Lattimer. Lattimer fired through the first course with the fastest time on the mountain at 37.8.

Next to run was a sophomore, Gordie Speed. Speed had fine time, posting a 39.8. Ted Martin was third to run and he kept the Redman hopes alive with a fine 38.8.

Having one of the best days of his racing career for the team was Jim Gray who posted a 38.6. With the course getting progressively slower, Lenny Curran made a fine run of 39.2 and Chuck Walker, skiing on a badly deteriorated course, finished in 42.4.

At this point the Redmen were in first place by the small margin of only one second. The second run wrapped the meet up for the team however.

Lattimer and Speed turned in two more fine times to widen the Redmen's lead. Martin, skiing well on the upper part of the course, hooked a gate at the bottom and fell. Gray turned in a time good enough to give him a third place in the meet and Curran clinched the meet with a 42.3 giving the Redmen a 17-second winning margin over its nearest competitor, Northeastern.

Sunday was the same thing all over again for the skiers. Speed was seeded first and turned in another one of his consistently fine runs. Lattimer recorded the fastest first run in the Giant Slalom by a full second and a half. John Gray, having the best weekend of his career, had a time that kept him with the leaders. Curran and Walker, the two most dependable team skiers, had good team runs. Skiing last for the team, Ted Martin was having one of his finest runs when he crashed one gate from the finish line.

Again at the halfway point the skiers were leading the meet. The amazing consistency of the Redman skiers during the second run won the meet for them. Speed posted another excellent time which produced one of his finest team performances to date. Lattimer, after leading the first run, went after the win on his second run but hooked a gate and fell.

John Gray took over from Lattimer and posted a time good enough for a second place in the league and his best performance ever as a Redman skier.

This left the pressure on Curran and Walker. Curran skied the course well and turned in a fine time. Walker, probably the finest clutch skier on the team, won the meet for the Redmen and picked up the team's first place trophy and started the Redmen on their way to an undefeated season.

WALKER PACES SKIERS - Chuck Walker led the Redmen Skiers to a first place finish in the meet at Worcester Poly Tech last Sunday.

YSA Characterizes Liberation Movements

By LINDA A. BALICKI
Staff Reporter

Explanations of the Young Socialist Alliance activities in the areas of anti-war movements and Women's Liberation marked the first in a series of Young Socialist Alliance forums held last night. Suzanne Mitchell, Claire Moriarty, and Jane Roland were the featured speakers in the YSA'S attempt to define itself and its actions.

Suzanne Mitchell of the UMass Women's Liberation Movement, characterized the movement as the "most radical revolutionary movement" and stated that it will take a thorough reorganization of the political and economic system to serve justice. She added that the "Republicans and Democratic parties were responsible for the present condition of women in the United States." Miss Mitchell continued by saying that while women had long been regarded as the force which divided the working class, Women's Liberation seeks to unify the labor force.

She pointed to the demonstrations and demands put forth August 26, 1970 as one of the major steps taken by Women's Lib and the YSA to further the cause of women. Among the demands made at that time were abortion on request, 24-hour child-care services for working mothers and full employment, educational and cultural opportunities.

In explaining the YSA's involvement in anti-war demonstrations, Claire Moriarty, cochairwoman of the UMass Student Mobilization Committee pointed to the significance which accompanied the May Strike which occurred in 1,154 campuses last spring. She pointed out the fact that it was a completely new form of anti-war demonstration in that it was massive in scope; that students acted as "detonators" to the anti-war movement and that it showed Nixon exactly in his true position on the war.

She went on to say that for this spring's planned mass demonstration, there have been whole movements gathered which will "bring everyone in the United States into the anti-war movement." It will be this demonstration which will end the war in Vietnam and all of Southeast Asia."

Jane Roland, in speaking about the socialist program on which the YSA is based, stated that the Socialists envision society as a political democracy. She went on to add that while the political condition in the country is less than perfect it will take a socialist revolution to make the changes necessary.

In a discussion period later it was stated that the YSA is firmly opposed to U.S. troops in the Mideast and that it supports the Palestinian Liberation Movement completely.

The second in the series of forums will take place next Thursday when Robert Galloway will speak on the Polish uprising currently taking place.

Senate Debates
Students Face Increases

By BETH GOODELL
Senate Reporter

UMass students are fairly certain to face rate increases in at least three categories on their semester bills next year, it became apparent at Wednesday evening's meeting of the Student Senate. Plans for limiting the increases were made at the meeting and a bill was passed which may help students financially by making their tuition payments tax deductible.

Treasurer Richard Verrochi announced at the beginning of the meeting that there is going to be a telephone rate increase next year and also that a room rent increase is very possible. He said that the size of the boosts has not yet been determined. Student input is needed on committees to investigate the proposed increases, and Verrochi is asking for volunteers.

The third rate increase facing students is that of a tuition hike. Verrochi reported to the Senate that a survey made by a professional firm indicates that the program for disadvantaged students at the University could be "wiped out" by any sizable jump in tuition. The 1/4 of the student body which currently comes from the lowest economic status could be prohibited from attending college.

Verrochi says that the state has promised to make available a much greater amount of financial aid, but that even with a sizable increase, many students would still be kept out of school. He further stated that "the state always promises a lot of aid but only comes up with about a half of what it promises."

Senator Larry Wood reminded students that they should write to their state legislators themselves. $2000 is being spent on a campaign to induce parents to write letters, but students too should be able to exert influence on their legislators. Students can remind their representatives that they will be voting in the next election now that the Massachusetts voting age has been lowered.

One financial boost for students may result from the passage Wednesday of a measure calling for the tax deductibility of tuition payments. Wichita State University is coordinating a national program to have student governments pass bills recommending the tax deductibility of tuition fees up to the amount of $500 in any tax year. A lobbying program is being set up to further the cause in Washington, D.C.

Deaver Opposes SES Lecture Tapes

By JIM GOLI
Issue Edito

"Professors should not deny students any representation of their lectures," said George Cheah, head of the Student Educational System, in an MRC interview Thursday responding to a letter in the Collegian by Prof. Jack Deaver of the Comp Lit. Dept. opposing taping of his lecture.

"We do not want to go into court to determine the legality" of the system, Cheah said. He feels that Deaver denies the student a media of receiving a lecture.

Frank Baglione, also of S.E.S. also said that Deaver's lectures are not being taped and refunds for students subscribing to them were started Tuesday.

Cheah feels that when a professor refuses to have his lectures taped, he is implicitly saying that "if a student can't get a lecture verbally, too bad." "S.E.S. provides another media to assimilate a lecture," he said.

According to evaluations by students, Cheah added, they say they can now listen to the lecture without worrying about scribbling down notes. "If you miss something in the air, it is gone forever," he declared. students are penalized for lack of ability in note taking.

Cheah has made a personal investment in the system. He feels that it is providing a "solution" to the archaic system of the big lecture. Originally, he could have graduated two years ago but dropped out to work to get money to start the system. S.E.S. is now just starting to break even and expands when a profit is reached.

Cheah said he hasn't done anything wrong yet and that Deaver should have waited. "All we have done is argue over the phone, if argument is not permitted, this is not a place of higher education."

Cheah thought that Deaver is violating the students' academic freedom by denying the right of any interpretation available.

"Our purpose is not to offend... we are confronting an old, archaic social law to revive better communication in an institution of higher learning."

Since S.E.S. is competing against Xerox and has their cost down to approximately 3¢ per page, "I guarantee... that our motives aren't profit," he said. This is a chance for the faculty and administration to show trust in students attempting to solve the educational process, Cheah concluded.

Busted Students Arraigned

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Asst. News Editor

"Additional charges" based on evidence from police lab reports are expected to be brought against some of the 22 persons arraigned in Northampton and Greenfield District Court yesterday on narcotics charges.

The charges, according to Dean of Students William F. Field will be for possesion of "hard narcotics."

A total of 10 people were arrested in Pierpont, Washington, and McKimmie Dorms early yesterday morning in a series of raids involving 21 University Policemen and 6 State Troopers, acting in four teams, each led by a University Police Sargent.

Five of those arrested on campus were students, 3 were former students and 2 were officially deemed "non-students" by University officials. All but one are out on bail.

The raids, according to Dean Field, were not directed at those using marijuana, but were in response to growing pressures to act against what Field called "commercial traffic in hard drugs."

In other State Police actions 10 people were arrested at the Mt. Toby apartments in Sunderland. Five, of those arraigned in Greenfield District court, were UMass students.

A married couple in Northampton, also students, were arrested in their apartment on Market St. during a midnight raid.

John R. Judge, 25, and Helen P. Judge, 22, were charged with unlawful possession of a narcotic drug, being present where a narcotic drug was kept, and conspiracy to violate narcotic drug laws.

Their case was continued to Feb. 11.

John Judge was held in lieu of $500 bail and Helen Judge was released on her personal recognizance.

Police reports indicated that warrants for the busts were obtained after a month long investigation.

Arraigned in Northampton District court yesterday as a result of the campus raids were: Roy A. Pinn, 19, of East Boston, a former UMass student charged with 2 counts of possession of thorazene and marijuana, $1000 bail; Jeffrey Segal, 19, a UMass student on one count of possession of marijuana, $500 bail; Dale Averill, 19, charged with presence where narcotics are kept, released in personal recognizance; Harry J. Llee II, 18, a UMass student charged with unlawful possession of marijuana and presence where it is kept, $500 bail; David T. Gragowski, 20, a UMass student charged with possession, presence and possession with intent to sell marijuana, $1000 bail; Charles E. Yates, a former student 20, charged with unlawful possession and presence of marijuana, $1000 bail; Robert Z. Nemeth, 19, charged with 5 counts, possession of hashish, presence where hashish is kept, possession of marijuana, presence where marijuana is kept and larceny of less than $100 (found with a Campus Center cushion worth $50), $1000 bail; Timothy Patterson, possession and presence marijuana, $500 bail; William Comstock, 20, charged with possession of hashish and presence of same, $1000 bail; Brian Framson, 18, possession and presence-marijuana.

All were ordered to stand trial February 11 in Northampton District Court.

At the Greenfield District Court Judge Sidney Cooley set Feb. 26 as the trial date for the 10 arrested at Mr. Tobey Apartments, Sunderland. All denied the charges and all were released in personal recognizance.

Their names, addresses and charges follow: William B. Matthews, 20, and Helder M. Palomba, 21, Mt. Toby, possession and presence; Jay Roberts, 19, Red Gate Lane, Amherst, John J. Paltrineri, 20, Brian M. Cook, 19, and Gabriel I. Imperator, 20, all Mt. Toby, all possession and being present; Bradford P. Brousseau, 20, and Floyd A. Thompson, 19, Mt. Toby, being present; and Richard M. Desousa, 20, and Alfred J. Chabios, 20, Mt. Toby, possession.

The University and State police who made the arrests on campus, did their work between 4:00-5:30 A.M. yesterday morning.

Action Planned After Hampden Meeting

A crowd of about 300 angry and scared UMass students gathered last night in the Hampden Dining Commons to decide on a course of action to follow after yesterday's drug busts in Southwest.

Cindy Frankinfield, a former counselor in Pierpont, coordinated the gathering and expressed the opinion that she wanted to get petitions started around campus asking the University administration to do something about lowering the charges or having them dropped against the people busted.

Claire Moriarty of the UMass Mobe called for a mass rally today in support of the Southwest Eleven. In a subsequent vote her idea was defeated narrowly.

After some verbal gymnastics and some heated argument it was decided to circulate petitions calling for no more drug busts and the disarming of campus police.

The meeting broke up shortly afterward.

Fac-Senate To Discuss Changes In Teaching Style

By BRIAN WHITE
Staff Reporter

Chancellor Oswald Tippo began yesterday's meeting of the Faculty Senate by announcing the first meeting of President Wood's Committee on the Future University. Members of the Committee include Sociology Professor Gerald Platt, and the Collegian's Editor-in-Chief, Peter Pascarelli.

On March 12 the Committee will discuss issues including the organization and content of teaching, changes in life style of teaching and learning over the next decade. The University community is invited to participate.

Chancellor Tippo disclosed that the University's Treasurer, Kenneth Johnson, has chosen to move from a compus-oriented position to a Systems Affairs position.

Prof. Irving Howard, the Senate's delegate to the Board of Trustees, reported on certain University- related bills which have been recently proposed. Among them was a series of bills related to campus unrest, including several designed to punish violent dissent with dismissal from the University.

Professor Howard noted that the legislators were seriously considering a tuition increase for universities in the Commonwealth; the increase would especially affect out-of-state students, which now constitute about 7% of the University population, and thus might alter the composition of the University.

A Senator reported that bomb scares in the University had been rastically reduced. He knew of only one during the entire final examinations period--and, he said, he had received no response to this.

The Final Report of the University Academic Grievance Committee, presented by University Ombudsman Ellsworth Barnard, was accepted. The Report dealt with grievances and marking policies of last year's Strike.

Maine Man Snowed

HERSHEY, Maine (AP) - "I got a right to have a road," said Kenneth Smith, the father of four, whose family comprises about seven percent of the town's 85 residents.

The Aroostook County Commissioners say they will decide in a few days whether Smith has that right.

Smith says his family has been virtually stranded since December because the snow covered road to his home has not been plowed. His 1 1/2 story, four room house is the only occupied dwelling blocked by the snow.

The town currently plows only the paved part of the road, which ends a mile and a quarter from Smith's dwelling.

Smith said his children have not been able to attend school for a month and have been charged with truancy.

Selectman Raymond Gallagher said Smith was informed upon moving to the house that the town was unable to plow the road in winter because taxpayers couldn't afford the cost.

Moon Walk Today

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) - The Apollo 14 Astronauts sped around the moon Thursday in a tight orbit just 7.2 miles above some of the rough lunar mountains.

Their lunar lander was poised for a plunge Friday to a moon valley guarded by rugged peaks and auto sized boulders.

Navy Capt. Alan B. Shepard Jr., Air Force Maj. Stuart A. Roosa and Navy Comdr. Edgar D. Mitchell rocketed into lunar orbit early Thursday. Then the astronauts dived to a low orbit that placed their spacecraft just 40,000 feet above the moon mountains, some of which are three miles high.

After preparations were completed for final tests of the lunar lander, Antares, the astronauts slept through the day Thursday aboard the command ship, Kitty Hawk.

The two craft, joined nose to nose, sped at 3,400 miles per hour in a long oval orbit 68 miles high and 10.2 miles low.

The barren beauty of the moon's vast emptiness earlier brought forth such descriptions as "fantastic," "stark"and "incredible" from the usually quiet astronauts.

Shepard and Mitchell, also expressed an eagerness to descend the final 10 miles in the lunar lander.

Shepard and Mitchell were to cast off in Antares at 11:50 p.m. EST Thursday. Next was four hours of tests for the moon lander in orbit while Roosa began his 40 hours of loneliness aboard Kitty Hawk.

After two orbits of separate flight, Shepard and Mitchell fire Antares' descent engine and begin a long, arcing fall, threading mountain peaks to the ancient Fra Mauro valley.

The astronauts brush dangerously close to moon mountain peaks and crater ridges during their daring descent. Their flight path carries them over landscape soaring up to 8,000 feet.

During their 33 1/2 hours on the moon, the spacemen will make two moon walks of four to five hours each, becoming the fifth and sixth humans to step on the black lunar soil.

The moon walks will be carried live and in color by three television networks, but much of the astronauts' work on the moon will be out of view of their television camera.

On their first walk,the astronauts will establish an atomic powered science station which is expected to operate for a year or more after they leave.

Science experiments to be left on the moon include a mortar package which will fire four rocket grenades into the moon's surface months from now.

Starting at 5: 38 a.m. Saturday, Shepard and Mitchell hope to make the longest hike on the moon yet attempted. From start to finish, their second lunar trek will cover about 1 1/2 miles.

Shepard and Mitchell are scheduled to blast off from the moon's surface at 1:47 p.m. They will fly toward a quick rendezvous with Roosa, aboard Kitty Hawk in a 46 by 72 mile orbit.

Apollo 14 zipped into lunar orbit Thursday only a few hours after the astronauts and Mission Control had cleared up a subnormal battery reading which had puzzled and worried experts.

Color Telecasts Feature Al And Ed

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) - Live and incolor, the Al and Ed television show will provide viewers back home with a long, close look at the moon's ancient Fra Mauro highlands.

America's third moon landing team will spend 33 1/2 hours in the mountainous Fra Mauro area and more than a third of the time a camera will be recording the adventure for television viewers on earth.

The three major U.S. networks will relay the drama into homes across the nation, and viewers around the world can tune in via communications satellite.

Live telecasts, for the first time in color, begin Friday morning and continue, off and on, through Saturday afternoon.

Here's what to look for.

First Shepard then Mitchell crawl from the landing machine they call Antares at 8:53 a.m. EST and descend to the lunar surface for a four to five hour excursion.

Shepard will be the one with red arm bands on his white spacesuit.

Like their predecessers of Apollo 11 and 12, they will erect an American flag and set about deplaying a variety of scientific experiments.

The astronauts will climb back in the lunar lander for a rest period and other activities, then begin a second moonwalk at 5:38 a.m. Saturday.

Allied Troops Reach Laotian Frontier

SAIGON (AP)-A force of 20,000 Saigon troops, backed up to the Laotian border with scant opposition as part of a new allied drive against enemy forces.

Both Gen. Creighton W. Abrams and the White House left the world guessing whether the Saigon forces will cross the frontier. The U.S. command said a decision on further action was up to the White House, which in turn refused to project future movements.

The drive, shaping up into one of the biggest of the war, was made under cover of a new blackout which blanketed the northwest corner of South Vietnam for six days. This was lifted Thursday.

The offensive was part of a massive two pronged sweep of nearly 50,000 allied troops advancing under a umbrella of American and Vietnamese bombers and helicopter gunships. To the south, the second push by close to 20,000 South Vietnamese troops has driven deeper into Cambodia. They also ran into minor opposition.

The Saigon military command denied that the South Vietnamese force massed in the nation's northwest corner had jumped off into Laos, despite invasion charges trumpeted in Communist capitals and elsewhere. Saigon refused, however, to say whether such a threat would be made.

U.S. leaders insist no American ground forces will go into Laos in any case, but say unrestricted American air power would be available.

The Communist led Pathet Lao insisted that U.S. and South Vietnamese troops had invaded southern Laos. Hanoi radio quoted them as calling on their forces to defend their homeland.

The 20,000 South Vietnamese troops deployed on the Laotian frontier were supported by about 9,000 Americans who moved into such key frontier bases as Khe Sanh and Lang Vei, both scenes of heavy fighting earlier in the war.

"There are no ARVN-Army of Republic of Vietnam-troops in Laos," said Saigon's chief military spokesman.

He said the South Vietnamese units closest to the Laotian frontier were deployed at Khe Sanh.

Army engineers also opened Route 9 to the Laotian border Thursday and posted a sign about 600 feet from the frontier which read: "Warning. No U.S. personnel beyond this point."

President Nixon is expected to announce in April further withdrawals beyond the current program that will lower American troop strength to 284,000 by May 1. The total is now 335,000.

Some observers also saw the push as an effort to keep the North Vietnamese from mounting dry season offensives, by blocking the Ho Chi Minh trail and thus preventing troop and supply buildups in South Vietnam and Cambodia.

Coupled with the South Vietnamese drive into the Cambodian sanctuaries area, the two offensives would, if successful, roll back the North Vietnamese forces.

Suits Await FemalePages

WASHINGTON (AP) - If girls show up as pages in the Senate this year - still a matter of weighty debate - they are going to have to dress like boys. "We had a long, exhaustive discussion of the issue," Chairman B. Everett Jordan, D. N.C., said after a closed meeting of the Rules Committee which reached no decision on whether to let girls be pages.

In a break with tradition, Sens. Jacob K. Javits, R. N.Y., Charles H. Percy, R. Ill., and Fred R. Harris, D. Okla., have announced selection of girl pages.

But the appointments to the $6,960 a year jobs are being held up awaiting clearance by the Rules' Committee.

Jordan told newsmen some committee members are opposed, some are undecided, and all are concerned for the welfare and safety of the girls.

However, Jordan said the committee members agreed that if girls are appointed, they will have to wear dark suits with long trousers and white shirts with long sleeves like the boy pages.

Jordan said committee members are concerned about where the girls would live, what kind of supervision they would have, and the hours they would keep.

Mercury Tests Reveal Swordfish Level High

WASHINGTON (AP) - Nationwide tests for mercury poisoned fish give tuna a higher final passing grade than had been expected but 87 per cent of the swordfish are flunking out halfway through their exams, the government reported Thursday.

Stocks of tuna now on American markets are below the government set danger level for mercury content, with the equivalent of roughly 15 million eight ounce cans having been recalled or held off the shelves as a result of a six week testing progr~m by the Food and Drug Administration and the tuna industry, FDA said.

The agency announced tests involving more than eight million cases of imported and domestically packed tuna discovered that 3.6 per cent was over the 0.5 parts per million mercury safety guideline used by the FDA.

These final figures show "the problem of mercury in tuna is less serious than had been feared initially," said FDA Commissioner Charles C. Edwards. Original sampling had been done in the most suspicious lots of tuna, he added.

About 87 per cent of the 297 swordfish sampled thus far, about midway in the testing program, exceed that mercury guideline, FDA said. The agency plans to test 667 swordfish.

The swordfish industry has been asked to withhold voluntarily all uncleared shipments, but the FDA stands ready to use its seizure authority if necessary the agency said.

Revenue Plan To Aid States

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon told Congress Thursday his $5 billion a year general revenue sharing plan would grow automatically to $10 billion by 1980 and "set our states and localities free."

The President's special message gave only a few details of the plan previously undisclosed, including the $10 billion figure, an antidiscrimination provision and an incentive for state and local governments to work out for themselves how they would divide their share of the money. The plan would allocate a portion of federal tax revenue to states and localities to use generally as they wish.

This, Nixon said, would put more power in the hands of governments that are most responsive to local needs, reduce pressures for higher property and sales taxes, create new jobs in state, local governments, funnel new talent and energy to state, local governments and reduce competition between military and domestic spending.

"In the final analysis, the purpose of general revenue sharing is to set our states and localities free-free to set new priorities, free to meet unmet needs, free to make their own mistakes, yes, but also free to score splendid successes which otherwise would never be realized," the President said.

The plan faces a rough go in Congress, where major aspects have been denounced by Rep. Wilbur D. Mills, D, Ark., and John W. Byrnes, R, Wis., respectively the chairman and ranking Republican on the House Ways and Means Committee, which will consider the bill.

Republican Sen. Howard Baker of Tennesse, who plans to submit the administration bill next Tuesday with 30 co-sponsors, indicated Thursday some attempt might be made to bring it up for a vote in the Senate if it is blocked in the House. Under the Constitution, the House originates tax bills.

Among details made public for the first time Thursday was Nixon's $10 billion figure. He said the plan would grow automatically to that sum by 1980 because it would operate on a permanent appropriation of 1.3 per cent of the nation's constantly growing personal taxable income.

Catholics Reject The Term "Heresy"

VATICAN CITY (AP)-The vatican has developed a more lenient way of dealing with Catholic scholars who challenge basic Church doctrine and, in the process has informally put aside the terms "heresy" and "heretic."

"The electric chair is no more," said a Vatican official who explained Thursday the Vatican's new policy for disciplining theologians and teachers whose works are found to be erroneous.

In other eras the Roman Catholic Church had heretics tortured or burned at the stake.

The Czech reformer John Hus, for example, died at the stake in 1415 after being condemned as a heretic by the Council of Constance. Much more recently, heretics were punished with excommunication.

Now, explained the Msgr. Joseph Tomko of the Vatican's Congregationfor the Doctrine of the Faith, the severest punishment an unrepentant theologian can undergo is being blacklisted as an author in error and expelled from his teaching post.

The Czechoslovak monsignor also outlined procedures for dealing with scholars whose teachings do not jibe with orthodox Catholic teaching.

1. If an error is flagrant and obvious, the Doctrine of the Faith Congregation simply in forms the theologian's bishop. The bishop is to invite the scholar to correct his thinking.

2. If the man's works contain only a likely or possible error, the congregation appoints two experts in the field to study the controversial point.

Should the experts concur that an error was involved, the theologian will be invited to Rome to explain his thinking, hear the evidence against his view and suggest ways to limit the damage done by diffusion of his teaching. He also will be assigned a theological advocate who will help him defend his position.

Ultimately, the Pope himself must approve the judgement of the congregation regarding any order to a theologian to conform to orthodox teachings.

The difference between the new and old ways of handling cases of doctrinal error lies in a provision in the congregation's recently adopted norms for more consultation with bishops of a given theologian and with the theologian himself before arriving at a judgment.

The norms themselves, issued Thursday avoid the terms "heresy" and "heretic" and do not speak of an sanctions against recalcitrant theologians.

Asked about these matters, Msgr. Tomko said he preferred the term "doctrinal error" to heresy and indicated that no more formal edicts of excommunication would be issued against offensing theologians who refused to change their views.

Federico Alessandrini, the offical Vatican press spokeman, traced the term "heresy" to its Greek roots and explained that the word originally meant "a choosing of a position," he added: "There are words that have their period and then pass out of use."

"Vital To Security"?
Laotian News Blackout Ends

WASHINGTON (AP) - The strictest and strangest news embargo of the Vietnam war ended Thursday, leaving the Nixon administration's credibility facing possibly its severest challenge and the American public still in doubt over U.S. intentions in Indochina.

For six days, Americans used to their daily newspapers and hourly newscasts were left to depend on speculation at home and accounts from the Communist and other world press while U.S. newsmen in Saigon waited for the military to lift its cloak of secrecy.

Until it did, the news blackout and speculation that fed on it created alarm, uncertainty and confusion.

The Nixon administration contended the news balckout was vital to the safety and security of American troops.

Indeed, Saigon newspapers began printing as early as Monday reports of an imminent allied invasion of Laos.

Shortly after the news blackout was lifted Thursday, Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird defended the embargo in a talk to a high school student group at the Pentagon. The movement of U.S. troops and other forces near the Laotian border "was accomplished without a single casualty attributed to enemy combat," Laird said without giving any indication whether the operation would carry over into Laos.

The embargo, he said, was "imposed by Gen. Creighton Abrams to protect American lives" and it was removed when "it achieved its objective.

"I'm not going to second guess" Abrams, the U.S. commander in Vietnam, when the top general bases his action on the safety of the men under his command.

However, Laird's explanation left several questions unanswered. Specifically, what was so special about this operation? Last spring President Nixon personally briefed the nation on details of the U.S. South Vietnamese incursion into Cambodia.

Why was it necessary to continue the embargo even after details were widely reported in foreign capitals?

Was the embargo used as a device to suppress information normally available to correspondents in Saigon from personal sources even before it was officially announced?

Did the U.S. command in Vietnam MACV use the embargo to invite speculation and cause the enemy to misjudge the actual events?

The six days of frustration for newsmen in Saigon and Washington began Friday afternoon, Jan. 29, with the issuing of an official "callout" by the U.S. command information office to all news organizations based in the South Vietnamese capital.

The announcement said:

"All military operations in Region 1 are embargoed immediately except for those operations contained in the MACV release.

"A briefing is scheduled for 1800 hours tomorrow night, Jan. 30, at MACV headquarters, in which allied military operations and press coverage will be explained in detail....

"The embargo will remain in effect until further notice and will be lifted as soon as military security permits. Your cooperation is solicited. This announcement constitutes part of the embargo and is not for publication."

Contrary to established practice in which operations and embargoes have been announced simultaneously, the U.S. command this time announced a blackout without saying what was going on. Its last statement, embargoing the embargo, sought to head off speculative stories that something big was under way.

And as the stories began appearing under Washington and other datelines, Saigon's frustrated newsmen were warned repeatedly that the embargo was to be rigidly enforced, and so was the embargo on the embargo.

At the daily briefings in Saigon, officials gave details on the progress of the operation, but refused to discuss the embargo.

Tuesday, the Japanese news Agency Kyodo reported under a Saigon dateline that 4,000 South Vietnamese paratroopers assaulted the Bolovens Plateau in Laos. Izvestia, the official Soviet newspaper, charged Laos had been invaded by South Vietnamese troops commanded by U.S. officers. Both accounts were picked up by American news services. Still, the Nixon administration continued its silence.

Irritation between Congress and the administration reached a peak Wednesday with West Virginia's Byrd accusing the government of "inexcusable bungling" in opening a credibility gap. Republican supporters urged patience.

Shortly after noon Wednesday, White House officials indicated the embargo would be lifted "relatively soon."

Hours later, noon Thursday in Saigon and midnight Wednesday in Washington, another "callout" from the MACV information office announced the embargo would be lifted at 3:30 a.m. Washington time, ending six days of the strictest-and most widely evaded-news embargo in the Vietnam war's 10 year history.

Nixon To Up News Conferences

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon recognizes a need to hold more news conferences, his director of communications says, and plans to do so with some new formats.

Nixon's next meeting with reporters is expected to be held shortly in the informality of his oval office, according to Herbert G. Kelin, long time spokesman for the President.

But there may be a delay until late March before Nixon hits the road for a personal tour promoting his programs at four regional meetings with news media executives.

And Nixon may turn away from prime evening time radio television sessions with the press unless there is some important matter pending. Instead, Klein predicts, Nixon may shift to noon or 5 p.m. times for broadcast news conferences.

The President has been criticized for the infrequency of his meetings with the news media and Klein explained his boss' views in an interview:

"He feels they are necessary. He recognizes he needs more news conferences. But he wants to do it at times when he can be pretty candid about things and not appear to be dodging."

The longest period between Nixon news conferences was from last July 30 to Dec. 8. Klein said news conferences had been planned in that period but events came up that prevented them.

As for the forthcoming trips, Klein said the President's ability to reach the people with his message may be "the key to whether he gets his programs through a reluctant Congress."

Resembles Airline Systems

Appointment By Computer

(Editor's Note-This is the last of a five-part series compiled for the Daily Collegian. The series deals with recent changes in Health Service practices prompted by the results of student surveys over the past two years.)

Most students know that to obtain an appointment with a physician at the University Health Services, they merely have to dial 5-0057. The appointment clerk arranges the appointment with the physician the student wants, at a time when the student can see him.

What students do not know is what happens at the other end of the telephone. This year, for the first time, the appointments are made with the aid of a computer much like an airlines reservation system. Now, via telephone, the student reaches an operator who has a Cathode Ray Tube display that resembles a television screen. When the student inquires for an appointment, the physician's schedule is displayed showing the openings available on the date the student wants.

If the student has no physician preference and would like to see the first available physician, the first available appointments are displayed. By typing in the student's name on the keyboard, the operator "assigns" the student to the appointment period he has selected. The computer then updates its appointment lists with this appointment period assigned to this student. Then it is ready for the next inquiry.

In past years the appointment clerk fumbled through page after page in her appointment book as she searched column after column of appointment times. Meanwhile, the student waited patiently in front of her desk or at the other end of the telephone. Eventually the student's schedule and the doctor's available appointment periods would be reconciled and an appointment would be made.

The process was tedious, time consuming, and successful only about 75% of the time. Approximately 30% of the patients desiring appointments could not find the openings that they needed.

In an effort to bring better service to the students, the speed and precision of the computer has now been harnessed to this task. Operating much like an airline reservation system, the computer has an accurate up-to-the-minute picture of the appointment periods for several weeks in advance for all physicians at the Health Center (Infirmiary).

Confusion and mistakes are kept to a minimum, and in addition, the computer prints out reminder notices which are mailed to the student three days before the appointment is scheduled.

The computer also prints out lists of appointments by hours of the day for each physician and an alphabetized list for the medical records clerk so that the student's health records will be in the hands of the physician when the student arrives to see him. Finally, once the appointment time has passed, the record of its occurrence is destroyed in keeping with the longstanding University Health Services policy of keeping student health affairs strictly confidential.

The design of the computerized appointment system was pioneered by two graduate students in Industrial Engineering, Robert Baron and Eric deBruijn, under the direction of Edward J. Rising, Professor of Industrial Engineering. After additional study, the new system was programmed and placed into operation by Thaddeus J. Los, Associate Director of the Administrative Data Processing Center and Barry W. Averill, Assistant Director of the Health Services.

Baron and deBruijn began by developing and installing an appointment system on the teletype-time-sharing system operating on the CDC 3600 research computer. This was an ideal testbed for solving initial problems in systems analysis and programming. However, the teletype, as an input-output mechanism was slow, noisy, and inconvenient. So they turned to the promise of the Cathode Ray Tube terminal as a possible answer.

An experimental model of the appointment system, using the IBM 360-40 administrative computer system and cathode ray tube terminals was developed by Thaddeus Los and Barry Averill. This model proved to meet all of the requirements of the system within a cost that was comparable to the existing manual system. Therefore, under the direction of Mr. Averill plans were set in motion to place the system into operation beginning this fall.

The computerized appointment system now in operation, "is a pioneer application of conversational computer use for scheduling in the medical world - and certainly the first in any University Health Service", according to Dr. Edward J. Rising, Professor of Industrial Engineering. The project is an excellent example of a voluntary interdisciplinary cooperative effort of the University Health Services, Administrative Data Processing Center, and the Department of Industrial Engineering.

Moon To Eclipse Tuesday

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)-A total eclipse of the moon will occur next Tuesday night and will be visible throughout North America, weather permitting, the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory said Thursday.

The eclipse actually will begin at 12:52 a.m. EST, Wednesday. The moon will be entirely within the earth's shadow from 2:03 a.m. until 3:26 a.m., the observatory said.

Phases of the eclipse, caused when the full moon passes through the earth's shadow, will continue until 4:37 a.m. when the western edge of the moon clears the earth's shadow completely.

Mitchell To Perform Folk Mass At Smith

An Episcopalian priest, The Rev. Ian Mitchell, and his wife will offer an "American Folk Mass" at Smith College Sunday (Feb. 7) at 11:30 a.m. in Helen Hills Hills Chapel.

The public is invited to attend the event. Those wishing to bring guitars and banjos to the service are to meet at 10 a.m. at the chapel to read through the music.

The Mitchells will also present a Sunday afternoon folk concert, "Songs of Love and Protest," at the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre in the Center for the Performing Arts on the campus at 4 p.m. There will be a small admission charge.

After several yers of ministry in Chicago and in a Navajo Indian parish, Father Mitchell decided to concertize professionally, aided by his wife, and to continue his ministry that way. Billed as Father Ian and Caroline Mitchell, they have traveled to colleges, universities and churches in this country and abroad, presenting programs of folk music in concert and in worship services.

The "American Folk Mass" is the first of several liturgical works in the folk idiom composed by Father Mitchell. It was presented in the Washington Cathedral in 1964 and subsequently recorded by the Northwestern University Canterbury Choir. Its popularity led to other recordings and to the beginning of a full-time musical career for them.

In Case Of Arrest: Legal Procedure

This article is part of a weekly series dealing with such topics as drug research, the "drug culture" drug addiction, drugs and religion, altered states of consciousness, and the use of drugs in other cultures such as the American Indian. This series will be sponsored by Room to Move, but will encourage readers to react to the articles by mailing or bringing in questions, rebuttal, original statements, or interesting excerpts from various publications, c/o John Dunphy, Room to Move, Student Union (located in the old barbershop across from the post office). The hope is that this series will become a medium for an ongoing exchange of views on drugs and related uses.

Too many people are unaware of the legal procedures during and following an arrest. The following points, hopefully will help get a brother or sister out of jail and help to eliminate the confusion which usually follows a bust.

The most important thing to remember is do not say anything to the officers or anyone else, do not answer questions whether or not you are advised of your rights. A police officer must have a warrant or your consent to search your room. If he receives your consent he does not need a warrant. Don't resist and don't give consent. Second, call a lawyer the first opportunity they give you. If a graduate or undergraduate student is arrested, on any charge, he or she may call the student lawyer, Mr. Howland. Since you are allowed only one phone call, use it for him at 545-0739 or 545-0341, at nights, holidays and in emergencies, at 549-6817. You should give your name, where you are being held, and the charges only.

Do not discuss the case on the phone with Mr. Howland and/or anyone else. The thing about "anything you say may be held against you" happens too often. It will probably be more helpful to both Mr. Howland and the person arrested, if Mr. Howland is the first person called. He will call any friends or relatives for you. Most important is the fact that he can begin the necessary legal protection for you, until you get a lawyer to cover the case.

After arrest the usual mug shots, finger printing, and general questions such as age residence follow. This information sometimes used to help determine bail. This information will also be forwarded to Washington and kept on file there.

The morning after you are arrested you will be arraigned at the district court. They state the charges against you, the bail, and the date of the hearing. It is sometimes advisable to stick out the night in jail there is a chance that the bail could be lowered the next day when is important since often your time will end up matching the amount of the bail. The lawyer would be able to advise you best in a situation like this, however.

Personal recognizance has been happening lately: this means you are let out on your own word. Three factor determining factors for this usually are 1. if you are a resident of the state; 2. if your parents are present and 3. if you have some signs of stability in the area, (you are a student or have a steady job).

Once the arraignment is over, you or other persons can call a bondsman to negotiate for bail to be lowered. The nearest bondsman, Mr. William A. Hurley, is in Springfield and is listed in the yellow pages under "Bonds-Bail, 2 Elm Street, 785-1188. He charges 10% of the amount of bail for himself and puts up the bail so you are free. A "responsible" person over 21 must sign for you and show the bondsman that he has the collateral to pay the bondsman, in case you split before the case is over.

If your decision is to remain in jail to appeal for a reduced bail, this means that you go to the Superior Court the next day. The judge, D.A. around or not. Appearance here is very important. If you have a friend in jail who will be doing this thing, it is up to you to take him the straightest clothes you can find as soon as possible. He obviously can't get them. If he's in jail, and clothes are part of the way they pass a judgement on you.

Once you are out of jail, do not talk to people except your lawyer about the case. Anyone can be subpoenaed to testify against you if they do not have much choice other than to show up in court and answer questions. This will be especially true if the police don't have a good case against you and they want to strengthen it.

More information, call Room To Move 545-0100.

Rolls Gold Runs Red

LONDON (AP)—Rolls Royce crashed into bankruptcy Thursday.

The giant of Britain's aerospace industry, developed from its start as a maker of cars for millionaires, went into receivership and the government moved to nationalize most of the wreckage to safeguard the country's defenses and international commitments.

The crash was blamed on a commitment to build 600 engines for the Tristar Jet project by the Lockheed company in the United States. Development costs have soared and the Rolls expects to lose $108 million in the deal.

Rolls Royce employs 90,000 persons and is the West's third largest maker of airplane engines.

The end of the 66 year old company as an independent force developed swiftly during the day. Rolls first asked the London Stock Market to suspend dealings in its shares, then announced to a stunned nation it was going into receivership.

Other shares on the market lost millions of dollars. Hardly one other company escaped unscratched as financial circles reacted in dismay to the collapse.

The Largest Embassy

WASHINGTON - Word from Cambodia is that U.S. military teams assigned to check on American military aid will be dressed in civilian clothes and attached to the U.S. embassy at Phnom Penh. It has been made perfectly clear that these military teams are not advisers and that they are not violating the "sprit of the law" of the Cooper-Church Amendment.

If things continue the way they're going, Cambodia may soon have the largest American embassy in the world. I would not be surprised to read the following dispatches from this part of the world.

Phnom Penh, Cambodia, February 12 -- Five-hundred commercial attaches arrived here today at Phnom Penh airport. U.S. Ambassador Emory Swank explained to reporters that trade with Cambodia has reached an all-time high and he needed the extra personnel to negotiate tariff agreements with Cambodian officials.

The 500 commercial attaches, all carrying brief cases and wearing identical seersucker suits, marched the 5 miles from the airport in double time, led by the U.S.commercial attache band.

Phnom Penh, Cambodia, March 5 -- One-thousand USIA employees were flown in to Phnom Penh last night to beef up the 500 commercial attaches that were assigned to the American Embassy last month.

An American spokesman explained that the USIA was stepping up its information activities for school children in Cambodia , and that the 1,000 new employees would all be assigned to the new USIA library which was being built underground on the outskirts of the capital.

Phnom Penh, Cambodia, April 30 -- Five-thousand cultural affairs officers were airlifted into this Cambodian capital today. On hand to greet them were Ambassador Emory Swank and Premier Lon Nol. The cultural affairs officers, all carrying violin cases, were lined up on the runway and reviewed in a jeep by Premier Lon Nol.

After the review, the chief cultural affairs officer, "Bull" Thorndike, told Lon Nol "No country deserves culture more than Cambodia and my men are here to see that you get it. And we'll stay here until the dirty job is done."

Phnom Penh, July 12 -- The State Department has broken ground for the largest U.S. embassy building ever constructed. The embassy will comprise a 5,000-acre complex and the main building, shaped like a pentagon, will be able to accommodate 50,000 American embassy employees now working in Cambodia.

The State Department explained that the reasons for expansion were the unusually heavy demand for visas and passports as well as the increase in embassy diplomatic communications.

"We found," said Ambassador Swank, "our former two-story chancellery was not large enough to handle all the embassy's business. The new building will allow us to expedite tourist requests as well as have a place where we can hold exhibits showing the American way of life."

Phnom Penh, Cambodia, November 13 -- A U.S. Marine guard detail composed of 100,000 men and officers was landed in Phnom Penh today.

Secretary of State William Rogers revealed the increase in the Marine guard detail was needed after two Cambodians had broken into the embassy PX and stolen three Janpnese cameras.

He believed the new security measures would discourage any such thefts in the future.

He told reporters, "The security of a U.S. embassy is the first consideration of this country and as long as I am secretary of state, I will see that our brave diplomats have all the protection they need."

Verbal Gymnastics

I realize that the University is growing and that since the student body increases faster than the physical body of the University, certain problems arise which we stud'ents must get used to. These are not necessarily major crises but rather little things. Let me give you an example.

I got up early this morning, about 8:15 I think, and crawled out of bed. I slipped over towards my window, still somewhat in a daze, and brushed open the mangy grey curtain to get some view of what the living were doing. Crash. I couldn't believe my eyes. There they were, thousands upon thousands of them, all fellow students, being herded onto the Southwest highway headed towards campus. Then I realized what was happening. They were all heading for my class!

I jumped into the clothes that were still on the floor from the night before and, forgetting all about the hygiene habits I had been taught in my youth (sorry, Ma), tore out of my room. Hasbrouck never seemed so far.

Breakfast, at this point, was out of the question. It was already 8:30 and with the class scheduled to begin at 9:30, I wouldn't be able to get in if I stopped to eat. My heart was pumping a beat or two ahead of my walking pace as I weaved cautiously between my competitors.

By the time I reached the Old Chapel, I started to pull my wallet out of my pocket so that I could get my ID ready for the policeman who was always at the door. If only everyone would stop pushing, I thought, we'd all get in. But I knew better.

Finally I reached the last push, the doors of the Auditorium. About ten feet from Eden, I realized where the expression "so close and yet so far came from". It just didn't seem that the mass of humanity could all fit into that dinky-little hall. As we glided through the double doors ten abreast (I don't think my feet ever touched the ground), the realization came that I was inside and a sensual feeling of spiritual cleansing swept through my body. I had reached Nirvana.

Once inside, a mad scramble for seats ensued but, having been a regular Cage visitor, I used by experience to slide into an empty chair at the end of a row. The ordeal was over.

After about fifteen minutes the show started. For some unknown reason, I somehow felt a bit disappointed and cheated as if something was missing. Then it hit me. Julius Erving wasn't there.

Barry Rubenstein

I Hate You

I came late. I looked to the back of the room (as is natural) for a seat in relative obscurity. However, since every obscure eye in the obscure seats of the relatively obscure back of the room was making me feel less obscure than was comfortable for my self-consciousness, I decided without too much thought to transport my physical being-in-the-world to the front of the room, and allowed myself to be judged with my back turned.

Unfortunately, I had not arrived in time to miss the roll-call. So, I sat on the edge of my chair in tense anticipation waiting silently in a relatively obscure manner for my name to be announced, whereupon, I would squeak out a "Here?" and politely and sheepishly correct my bearded prof in the pronounciation of my name.

Like a young boy about to be tested in a trial of bravery, I sat, my face burning red, my hearbeat ready to smash the walls--I never heard my name.

I relaxed. Then I tensed, again. Was I in the right class? What section is this? What time is it? But, why the hell am I so nervous?

To my utter disgust the professor asked to see the hands of the people whose names were not called. I raised my paw like the little puppy I felt I was at the time.

He asked me why.

Why what?

Why he didn't have my name.

Probably because, sir, I registered for the course late and haven't received the good news, yet.

Did you file an orange card?

Suddenly, some jerk (also sitting in the front of the room) jumped from his stall to proclaim:

"YOU DON'T EXIST WITHOUT AN ORANGE CARD!"

Cliche. Overused and assinine. I am a person. I am my own, independent (at least in my mind) being. I WAS before I ever knew what orange was. If all people are orange cards, then anyone who has never gone to college never existed, and everyone who graduated no longer exists. And if all students in college are orange cards--burn them.

Free Spring For Life Festival

To The Editor:

Do you enjoy free concerts? The sentiment of the student body seems to reflect a positive attitude toward this approach to entertainment. We all know that concerts cannot any longer be held in the Cage. Cage concerts were never what a concert should be anyway. Many people could not get inside. Nobody inside was comfortable. There are individuals on this campus that believe that we can initiate a new concert program. Spring is the time when life starts afresh, when new life begins to grow. It is a time of celebration, of bacchanalian delights. The idea is to have the concert(s) free or you can contribute toward the expense if you want. There are groups on the Campus that collectively, could contribute up to $50,000. We could have a series of weekend concerts or one hell of a big bash. They're free. They're outdoors.

If enough people contribute a dollar or so as they come to the concert area, we could probably quarantee this to be a successful yearly thing. A buck is not much for a whole day of music and will make things go more smoothly. We do not feel that this concert system is feasible if everyone wants big name bands. The contracts on big groups for outdoor gigs are ruff. It would probably be our rough luck if it rains. With big bands half the country would be here. There are a lot of local bands (Clean Living) or Folkies (James Taylor) or near-big bands (Poco) that can be gotten easily and will give great shows. We really think that the idea will work. If you think so too, call one of the numbers below or come to 418c Student Union and ask for me.

It Boggles The Mind

To The Editor:

It boggles the mind - the paper machinations of the American Way.

Blue collar workers despise white collar workers for the differences in pay; join unions, scream for the $ they want; the bosses raise prices (to cover the profit loss to their own pockets) just-a-little more than the salary increase covers, thereby causing the actual buying income of everybody to go down; and, realizing that, everybody yells for more $.

Meanwhile, for whatever reasons, inflation whittles the dollar-value down to 40-odd cents, the cost of living continues to rise, along with taxes levied to pay the salaries and building costs that go down and up, respectively; and what happens is the more you make, the less you make. So chalk off the money/work get-what-you-pay-for idealism of the Protestant ethic.

Then to cap it off, some bunch of grocers in New York (where else?) hate the returnable bottle program (specifically 5¢/Coke bottle) because "I don't make anything on it anyway." (New York Times, February 2, 1971, p. 33.) One little glimmer of sense blubbering to a watery death because one little wad of Good-Life seekers keeps what is classically called good sense in the also classic hip pocket, where poor Sense becomes too-often- too-soon-too-much flattened from the average increase in avoirdupois which is generally found to be in positive correlation with increased $$$.

Even we muddled liberals get tired of the "good" folk for whom "good" is synonymous with "me". One becomes very tired of legitimate efforts at legal change. One even gets tired of illegal attempts at change, especially with the polarization that always results. Actually, one gets tired of having to deal with the problem at all, and wishes, quite rightfully, to retire to the comfortable world of managing to keep one's own mind straight.

So, we have it. The one concern with an established record of results modified into: the Goody-Two-Shoes Mafia! Grab the grocers by the $13.95 necktie and mutter (through clenched teeth, of course) "Take 'da' bottles, Buddy, or we knocks ya block off." Guaranteed results within a week. We pay for everything else; I'm pretty certain we'd pay for results.

In short, gentlemen and others, if this is indeed Life, all this around us, we are all pretty stupid for being here.

Sick Of Getting Booked

To The Editor:

One of the more unpleasant tasks that face everyone with the beginning of every semester is that of getting required texts. In the student's jargon, this means getting screwed. Take a case in point - my case. Because of financial difficulties in paying for my new books, I was forced to part with an engineering text that cost $13.30 when new, and since the student book exchange is too slow, I was forced to go to that beady-eyed vulture outside the bookstore. He offered me $3.50, and when I hesitated, he added an additional .50¢. Needless to say, I still thought that I might get more for it elsewhere. As it turned out, I got the same offer from the bookstore. This little incident got me interested in how this university provides books for its students, so I dropped into the M.I.T. Co-op one Saturday. Imagine my surprise when I found M.I.T.'s prices 10 - 15% lower than UMass''! The point of all this is: why can't this school have a co-op like M.I.T.? Why can't used books be sold at a reasonable price? (After all, the book I sold was subsequently marked up to $10.00 - quite a considerable profit, I would say.) Why can't the student senate investigate the accounts of "our" store, and see just how much of a "discount" we're getting. I'm sick of getting screwed, and I'm sure a lot of other people are too.

Hell On Earth

To The Editor:

A letter in Wednesday's Collegian and a subsequent call to the ticket office at Boyden regarding identification at University sponsored sports events deserves a reply and a definitive statement on the position.

Bill Ibsen an undergraduate student wrote that he was turned away from the Northeastern University Basketball game because he had a temporary identification card. Mr. Ibsen was not turned away by any of us. His wife, however, who is not a student according to student information computer files probably was turned away. She is not a student, does not pay the $30 athletic fee which each undergraduate pays and is not entitled to free admission. We do not remember Mr. Ibsen personally but we do remember turning away a few people who were the spouses of bona-fide students.

Temporary identification cards are a dime a dozen. That is why we insist on some identification which proves that the person bearing the I.D. is in fact its rightful owner. As each of us check I.D.'s we are often badgered by friends of the person without proper identification to "give the kid a break." In light of the capacity crowds in attendance at each game it is our duty to see that only fee paying undergraduates with properly validated I.D.'s are admitted without charge. Each graduate student, each person with an unvalidated I.D., and each person with someone else's I.D. deprive a fellow student of the seat he has already paid for. Maybe if each non-fee paying person paid full price for his ticket, we could eventually have the new facilities for concerts and athletic events which students were clamoring for just a few short months ago.

For the sake of those students seeking admission to future athletic events, we remind each person to check his I.D., to make sure it is properly validated. This insures us that the person has not dropped out of school or graduated. SWING SHIFT FRESHMEN should obtain validation stickets in 107 Hampshire House before the next event they wish to attend. GRADUATE STUDENTS should buy a ticket if they wish to attend. If all students are to be served we must adhere to our policies. Please show positive identification. Thank you.

The Wire In Time

Alak!

Time is a concept by which we measure our friends
Life flows fore through aft in spherical helixes and wanderers in time find each other in complimentary swirls flowing around each other with hands joined ever eager for exchange.
Trails travelled forward, inessential solitude dying to fathom the questions of which they are the answers
.....so came together for a while and frolic in the unbounded instincts, the state of their being sublime and touch experience through the rubbings of noses,
the sparkle of an eye,
mirrored through the images which are bodies
reflections upon a spark inside that is present, but don't know why.....
Why, I remember.....tomorrow will be another day for us to become each other and other days, other times, yes, are not to be cared upon right now.
Right now didn't last long enough.
....it became then while we were asleep.
but we were with me in my dreams, weren't you?
Yes....flowing currents of vibrant consciousness
intertwine
on their ways to wherever they met again
No tear.....it's fine
You is, I are never ever the same but we are the same, now in time
it's fine, fine loves.

Visual Aids Help Teach Deaf

Teaching basic concepts to the deaf is a little easier these days thanks to the Northeast Regional Media Center for the Deaf.

The Center, one of four federally sponsored centers in the country, is trying various ways to use visual media for the deaf. For one current project, the Center is making overhead projection transparencies with vocational messages for deaf persons who do not always have the vocabulary to understand these concepts through the printed or finger-spelled word.

Ideas for the transparencies come from Mr. Stanley Patrie, vocational advisor who understands fully the problems in communication between the hearing and the deaf. Mr Patrie has been deaf since an attack of spinal meningitis when he was nine years old.

Mr Patrie works with graphic artist John McLaughlin who puts the ideas into pictorial form. These lessons on the technical aspects of vocational education include one titled "Profit-Loss," which relates a child's lemonade stand business to a large manufacturing business.

In the transparency shows the effects of loss: the lemonade stand is abandoned to birds who build a nest in the pitcher, and the manufacturing company's employer must let some of his employees go. When the transparencies are distributed throughout the country, teachers of the deaf will ask their students questions such as: How can loss affect the employer as well as the employee?

Students with the transparency as a study vocabulary to help the students words such as: sell-out, freeze, wages, bonus, improvements, and bankrupt.

When this phase of the Media Center's work is through, Mr. Patrie will have helped produce about 20 to 25 lessons, approximately 200 transparencies, for use especially with students in grade school and high school.

When he came to the Northeast Regional Media Center for the Deaf (NERMCD), in September, Mr Patrie brought a degree from Gallaudet College in Washington, D.C., the only liberal arts college for the deaf in the United States; three years of teaching photography at Louisiana State School for the Deaf; two years of teaching at the Ohio State School for the Deaf; and 27 years of teaching science at the Rochester N.Y. School for the Deaf.

His understanding of difficulties in teaching from the hearing world to non-hearing persons comes also from having attended Ohio State University and the University of Rochester. At each he "made a deal" with a neighboring student. He did the driving to and from class and his neighbor took the class notes.

The transparencies he makes with the NERMCD he calls "a whole new idea" for teaching the deaf. Other transparencies made by the Center include one set of lessons on language arts, and one set explaining 50 educational movies adapted for the deaf.

NERMCD is helping schools help the deaf and Mr. Patrie hopes his transparencies will aid in bridging the "learning gap" between hearing and non-hearing persons. He did this quite well in his personal life. Mr. and Mrs. Patrie, both deaf, are the parents of three children, none of whom is deaf. All three learned sign language before they learned to talk, but this did not hurt their verbal language abilities. Stanley is an Air Force captain. Bob is an electrical engineer, and Carole is an interpreter for the deaf. All are college graduates.

A federal contract of $240,000 this year funds the Center through the UMass School of Education. The Center has been operating for five years with the University's Audio-Visual Center and the School of Education cooperating for the benefit of the Media Center. Raymond Wyman, is director, and Nathan S. Tilley is associate director.

The Media Center conducts research, experimentation, demonstrations, and presentations concerned with applications of media to the education of the deaf. Special attention is being given to the overhead projector which utilizes the vocational transparencies. In the NERMCD region are New England, Delaware, District of Columbia, Maryland, New Jersey, New York, and Pennsylvania. Other media centers for the deaf are at the University of Tennessee, the University of Nebraska, and the University of New Mexico. Each has its own specialty -- television, movies, or programmed instruction.

John McLaughlin (left), graphic artist, and Stanley Patrie (right), vocational consultant, use finger spelling to communicate with each other as they work out ideas for visual media designed to teach the deaf. They are part of a 13-member staff of the Northeast Regional Media Center for the Deaf, at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst.

Messanic Expectations To Be Topic At Smith

Shemaryahu Talmon, guest professor at Harvard University in the Near Eastern languages department, will speak at Smith College on "Messianic Expectations at the Turn of the Era."

The lecture will be at 8 p.m. Monday (Feb. 8) in Wright Hall on the Smith campus. Sponsored by the Department of Religion, the event is open to the public.

In 1947 and 1948 he served as director of education activities in illegal immigrant camps in Cyprus. He served as a captain in the Israel Defense Army from 1948 to 1949.

Dr. Talmon studied at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem where he received a Ph.D. in 1958. He has served as instructor, lecturer, assistant professor and chairman in the University's Department of Bible Studies. As senior lecturer in 1963, he was the editor of "Textus," the annual of the University bible project.

General secretary of the 1957 Second World Congress of Jewish Studies in Jerusalem, he was chairman of the bible section of the 1961 Third World Congress. In 1968, as head of Haifra University College, he became chairman of the curriculum committee of bible studies in Israeli schools and a member of the organizing committee of the Fifth World Congress of Jewish Studies.

In addition to numerous published papers, Dr. Talmon has acted as visiting lecturer at Leeds University in England, Tel-Aviv University, Harvard University, and as visiting and Golding Professor of bible studies at Brandeis University.

Mass Port Director Calls For Expansion Of Logan

BOSTON (AP) - The director of the Massachusetts Port Authority called for expansion of Logan International Airport Thursday and the establishment of a second commercial airport in the state, despite a task force report calling for a moritorium on airport expansion.

Edward King, executive director of the Port Authority, said after a two hour meeting with Gov. Francis W. Sargent that he could see the MPA "pushing for a second airport" as well as pushing for expansion of Logan.

Sargent met with members of the MPA to discuss the report of his intercity transportation task force, which is expected to be released next week.

The eight member task force was created by Sargent last August to review a report by the Metropolitan Area Planning Council which called for a second airport for the Boston area.

The MAPC also recommended that Logan be expanded, a recommendation which Sargent rejected.

Noting that one half of the air traffic which leaves Logan is bound for points within 200 miles of Boston, Sargent also had charged his task force with "determining if there are other alternatives to continued expansion of air routes and airports as the sole method for providing intercity transportation."

The report, meanwhile, which has been in Sargent's possession for about a week, warns of adverse environmental effects if there is any airport expansion, a spokesman for Sargent said.

The spokesman also said Sargent has received a telegram from Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D.Mass., who said he would support any halt to airport expansion.

Bedau To Present Lecture On Church Reparations To Blacks

"Compensatory Justice and the Black Manifesto" will be the topic of a lecture at Smith College Tuesday (Feb. 9).

Tufts University Professor Hugo A. Bedau will give the lecture in a meeting of the Smith College Philosophy Club at 8 p.m. in Seelye Hall, room 10, on the campus. The event is open to the public.

The lecture will examine the ethical and philosophical issues posed by black leader James Foreman's recent demand of American churches that they pay reparation for what he saw as injustices inflicted upon black people.

Bedau taught at Reed, Princeton, Dartmouth, and Harvard, before teaching at Tufts, where he is now chairman of the department of philosophy. He has long been interested in political philosophy, and has published many articles in the field. He has edited two books, "The Death Penalty in America," and "An Anthology and Civil Disobedience: Theory and Practice."

AN EXPERIMENT IN REVOLUTIONARY AESTHETICS ..... THE AMERICAN UNDERGROUND FILM? (Friday, Thompson 104, 7).
The second in the series of underground films sponsored by the Fine Arts Council. The films to be shown explore the fields of humor, psychedelia, satire, and fantasy.

BROKEN BLOSSOMS (Sunday, Thompson 104, 7 and 9)
D.W. Griffith's last outstanding film, made in 1920. The story revolves around a Chinaman's love for a mistreated girl and his caring for her. Lillian Gish and Richard Barthelmess star in this poignant, romantic tragedy.

CLOSELY WATCHED TRAINS (Wednesday, February 10, Merrill Science Center, Amherst).
A critically -- acclaimed film in the naturalistic tradition of recent Czech films. It tells of the coming-of-age of a young railroad attendant during World WarII. A humorous, revealing, and poignant drama.

DRACULA (Friday, Mahar Auditorium, 6:30 and 9:30).
Can we say anything new about DRACULA? Don't count on it! It's biting social commentary is something you can really sink your teeth into. Although somewhat anemic in plot, Bela Lugosi's performance bleeds the audience of all emotion. A person feels an emotional stake in the film for its cryptic nature will keep the audience enbalmed. A note though, there will be no necking during the performance.

HORSEFEATHERS (Saturday, Amherst College, Merrill Science Center).
A Marx Brothers' Comedy, part of the Amherst Classic Comedy Series.

HOW TO MAKE A WOMAN (Friday, CC Auditorium).
This Friday the Free University of New England -- Clearing House is presenting a preview presentation of the new film HOW TO MAKE A WOMAN. It will be shown at 7:15 and 9:30 in the Campus Center Auditorium with an admission charge of $1.00. HOW TO MAKE A WOMAN is a filmed version of the Boston based Caravan Theater production which was developed and performed around Boston over the past few years. More than a satire, the play is a strong clarification of the roles women play in their relationships with men. It views the conditioning aspects of our society in male -- female role playing and clearly shows in dramatic form the subtleties of such relationships.
This will be the first time the in -- production film will be shown to an audience. The filmmakers themselves, Al Fearing and Mary Anne Weinstein, will be present and following each performance will answer questions and listen to comments from the audience.

LOVE STORY (Showcase Cinema, West Springfield).
Erich Segal's gilded romance; or as Mark Silverman commented: "A pint of tears, a quart of manure." Read the book, it's the quicker way to digest this updated, bitchy version of "Camille" with Ali McGraw looking as if she had just got over scurvy, and Ryan O'Neal perfecting his soap-opera schmuckie style.
THE OWL AND THE PUSSYCAT (Campus Cinemas, Hadley).
A dirty "Pygmalion". Barbra Streisand as a hooker wanting an education, and George Segal as her bookish Henry Higgins. A kind of sex comedy which depends on its excellent performances more than its script.

THE REIVERS (Sunday, Student Union, 7 and 9)
Steve McQueen is a lyrical, funny adaptation of William Faulkner's 1905 Mississippi. The story's about a young boy's trip from the country to the city and, as with all good memories, it is warm, free-wheeling, and happy.

RIO LOBO (Showcase Cinema, West Springfield).
A new John Wayne western, directed by Howard Hawkes. A good film of its type, if you happen to like the type, otherwise the sight of the aging, flabby Wayne on a horse is less than aesthetically pleasing.

THE PRIVATE LIVES OF ROMEO AND JULIET (Amherst Cinema, Amherst).
An X-rated affair, which won some award at the Cannes Film Festival. Some years back it would have gone unnoticed, or as an important art film, now it's just camp.

THERE'S A GIRL IN MY SOUP (Campus Cinema, Hadley)
Goldie Hawn and Peter Sellers star in this version of the mildly successful Broadway comedy of a few seasons back.

THEY SHOOT HORSES, DON'T THEY? (Saturday, Sage Hall, Smith 7:15 and 9:30)
A most powerful film experience. A dance marathon during the height of the Depression is used as a metaphor of a drab, depressing, hopeless universe. Jane Fonda received the New York Film Critics Award as best Actress and the film won the National Society of Film Critics Award as best film of 1969. Michel Sarrazin, Gig Young (who won an Oscar) and Susannah York are featured.

TOM JONES (Thursday, Student Union, 7 and 9).
Tony Richardson directed this bawdy, free-wheeling version of Henry Fielding's bawdy, free-wheeling novel. Albert Finney is perfect as the scoundrel of the title. This film should not be missed for it's a hilarious, rauncy experience of the seedier side of Seventeenth Century English genteelity.

TORA! TORA! TORA! (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield).
Pearl Harbor, a day which will live in infamy etc., etc., etc. With twenty-million-plus tied up in tacky sets which seem left over from a Thirties amusement park, and acting which is stilted at best. TORA, TORA, TORA is unique in film history, a major film disaster of a major historical disaster. The Japanese finally have their revenge.

TRISTANA (The Talkie, Northampton).
The latest film of the Spanish director Luis Buneil. It is something of a highly sexual, gothic horror story with Catherine Deneuve and Franco Nero and the ever-present personality of the director.

2001: A SPACE ODYSSEY (Campus Cinemas, Hadley).
The masterwork of American director Stanley Kubrick. Epic in scope and technically brilliant, it, given the correct circumstances, can prove to an overwhelming expe rience. 2001 takes film to limits where it approaches a complexity of the written word.

WHATEVER HAPPENED TO BABY JANE? (Friday, Mahar, 6:30 and 9:30).
A black fairy tale about Hollywood, no film since "Sunset Boulevard" deals as aptly with the dreams and reality faced the has-been actress. Bette Davis gives a performance equalling her finest as Baby Jane, the former child star, and Joan Crawford is fine as her crippled sister. Robert Aldrich directed this strange tale with a compassion which makes it human, and less a mere, grisly joke.

WOMAN IN LOVE (Academy of Music, Northampton).
Ken Russell's ripe adaptation of D.H. Lawrence's novel. It is a brilliant and unusual film which captures the emphasis of the novel. The performances are uniformally excellent; Glenda Jackson received the New York Film Critics Award as best actress, and is well supported by Oliver Reed, Jenny Linden, and Alan Bates completing the two sets of lovers. It is a feast for both eye and mind. A word of caution, it may lead you to read the book to fill in the structural problems director Russell could not handle.

From An Inferno... To The Lower Depths

The Chronicles of Hell

By BOB GRAHAM
Fine Arts Staff

One of the problems of modern "Avant--Garde" experimental theater is at its meanings and themes can be entirely lost on an audience, more familiar with a traditional type of theater. In order to fully appreciate such a play, an audience must often be used to concentrating deeply upon whatever is going on upon the stage. The audience doesn't have the advantage of the script before them; here they can go over an obscure passage to pick out the subtleties and nuances missing in production. Unless the audience is prepared to the pecularities of an "avant--garde" play, it can be a dissapointing experience.

Modern playwrights and directors have espoused many theories of how an audience will (or should) react to what they are attempting to do. Unfortunately theories look nice on paper, but they don't always work out. Brecht, for instance, did not always produce the objectivity he desired. People tend to sympathise with Mother Courage. A symbol may be clear to an author or a director, but unless the viewer is familiar with the author's previous work, the meaning is lost.

These thoughts occured to me as I watched the opening performance of the Roister--Doister production of THE CHRONICLES OF HELL. I could see that the play was carefully directed, directed in fact with attention to modern drama. Although I could appreciate the technical execution, the total effect seemed confused and bewildering. Those sitting around me seemed to share a similiar attitude, no one seemed to exactly know what was going on before them. When the end came and the house lights came on, people sat in their seats waiting for something more to happen.

The play is concerned with the events surrounding the death and ressurection of Bishop Jan in Eremo. His priests are depicted as lecherous, groveling maniacs who were against their former superior. The mood of madness is reflected effectively in the set created by Douglas Cox. The makeup, uncredited, distorts the figures of the characters making them grotesque. One of the most effective moments of the play was the opening announcement of the Bishop's death with actors delivering lines from the aisles.

The play is not, however, without its technical flaws. The lighting, designed by Andrea Newman, is often effective (especially during the Resurrection), but at other times simply strains the eyes. There is a large banquet table down center in back of which most of the action was played. The table covered up action, and made it hard to concentrate on the actors behind it. Most dissappointing was the play' lack of "shock" when the script called for it. The groveling of the cast, the words "enema" and "shit" may have been shocking when the play was written, but they seem mild today.

A good review I feel should not be concerned so much with saying whether a play is good or bad, but should try to recreate the viewers experience with the play. If this review seemed sporadic and confusing, it is because I experienced the play as sporadic and confusing. It demands an hour and twenty minutes of deep concentration by members of the audience and I found it hard to do so. I would recommend this play, then, only to people who have an interest in theater and are willing to think rather than be merely entertained.

The Lower Depths

By CHRISTINE REYNOLDS
Fine Arts Staff

Last Friday night, The Lower Depths, by Maxim Gorki, was faithfully presented at Amherst College, directed by Josh Karter. The production aptly delivered a futile view of life that didn't quite know why it existed.

The play takes place at the bottom of life, a slumlord's cellar housing a shiftless, criminal assortment of Russian characters. They are society's rejects, people poisioned by oppression. Their life consists of incessant quarrels and dreams of rebirth that never culminate. A catalyst arrives in the form of an old man, with compromising words of consolation, but his "truth" and "hope" were relative to the situation. He leaves the cellar, but the people are incapable of adapting his words to their own lives.

Friday's production was a good interpretation of Gorki's intentions. The squallid setting, murky lighting and drab, tattered costumes visually prepared the audience for the brutal dialogue. At times, though, the screaming became so intense that the words were lost in the uproar.

The major characters were complete and convincing. Lynn Jaffe, the dying woman, suffered with great skill, and Kenneth Hoxsie vehemently delivered the anguish of an Actor losing his memory.

Senior Officers Let Off Lightly In Coast Gurard Defection Incident

WASHINGTON (AP)-The two senior Coast Guard officers involved in the return of a defecting Lithuanian seaman to a Soviet ship got off lightly, but the cutter captain on the scene was too severely punished, the chairman of an investigating subcommittee said Thursday.

Rep. Wayne L. Hays, D, Ohio, gave this opinion at a news conference accompanying publication of the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee report on the incident.

It occurred Nov. 23, 1970, when the Coast Guard cutter Vigilant and a Soviet trawler were moored together near Martha's Vineyard, Mass., for discussions of fishery matters.

Simas Kudirka, a crewman on the Soviet vessel, came aboard the Vigilant intending to defect. A protracted series of communications with Coast Guard district headquarters, involving also the State Department, followed.

Under instructions from district headquarters, Kudirka was returned to the Soviet ship. Witnesses said other crewmen came aboard the U.S. cutter, beat the seaman and took him away by force.

After investigation, Rear Adm. William B. Ellis, the Coast Guard district commander, and his chief of staff, Capt. Fletcher W. Brown, were allowed to retire immediately without court martial.

The Vigilant's commanding officer, Cmdr. Ralph E. Eustis, was given an administrative letter of reprimand and reassigned.

"I think Ellis and Brown got out very light indeed," Hays said.

"They were both only a few months from retirement. Their only punishment was to retire a few months early."

He said he thinks Eustis was "too badly punished" by being given a reprimand.

"I don't think, the way the system works, his future in the Coast Guard is very rosy," Hays added.

He said of Eustis, "He was the one man involved who said, in effect, 'I don't want to send this man back. I am afraid of what will happen to him. Please don't make me send him back.'"

The report itself said, "Cmdr. Eustis was caught in an untenable position."

"The State Department...had a casual attitude about the situation," according to the report.

DRUGS and BLACK YOUTH

In the ghettoes of America Hard drugs - Heroin, speed, cocaine - have decimated one generation of black youth. Few of us are without a relative or close friend who has been messed over by drugs. The larger society appears unwilling or unable to solve this problem. So we must deal with it.

This tragic pattern must not be repeated here at the University. It is our responsibility, to ourselves, to each other, to our community - to see that it does not. And we must do this before we have a crisis.

The only way to prevent drugs from becoming a serious problem here is for the entire community to unite and deal with the issue. In helping our brother we help our selves.

Frosh Hoopsters Host Host St.Thomas More

By STEVE FERBER
Staff Reporter

Led by Frank Tracey, a 6'6 center, St. Thomas More will enter the Cage tomorrow night to face the streaking UMass frosh, who boast a 10-1 record.

A new addition to the freshmen's schedule, St. Thomas More comes into the 6 p.m. contest with a 7-6 record. Offensively they have been averaging in the low 70's, while keeping their opponents near and below the 70 point mark in the majority of their games.

Reggie Rothwell, at 6'5, is a questionable starter, and if he sees action tomorrow, he will provide the other half of the one-two punch for St. Thomas More. Tracey, their number one man, has scored over 20 points numerous times, and twice has scored 32 points. In one of his 32 point performances he shot a spectacular 65% from the floor, and if anyone will give the freshmen trouble tonight, it will be Tracey.

In the backcourt Bill Gallagher will lead the team, as he provides the spark behind St. Thomas More's great ability to run the ball.

Last year's squad posted a 25-2 record, but most everyone graduated from that team. Left from last year's starters is Tracey, and it remains to be seen how effectively the Little Redmen can nullify this big man's scoring power.

In seeking to extent their undefeated streak at home to eight, the UMass frosh can look for more of the fine shooting that has enabled them to emerge victorious in their first seven Cage contests.

McLaughlin YanCon Soph of Week

Tom McLaughlin, UMass' super transfer, has been named the Yankee Conference sophomore of the week for his play in the Redmen's wins over both Northeastern and Holy Cross. The 6'4 soph was called into immediate action due to the illness of two of his teammates and responded with efforts of 12 and 14 points in his first two varsity starts.

Picked as the top backcourt man of the week was guard Al Vaughn from UConn. Vaughn, a 6'2 sophomore, scored 53 points in two games for the Huskies. He hit 9 of 15 field goals at Fairfield and 13 of 24 at Maine for a 22 for 39 streak.

Nick Susi, a 6'6 junior center from Maine, was selected as the top frontcourt man of the week. He scored 29 points and grabbed 39 rebounds as Maine lost to Hofstra before upsetting UConn. Susi snared 26 rebounds in the 112-99 win over the Huskies.

Other nominations included: Backcourt - Paul Bessey (Maine), John Betancourt (UMass) and Ray Ortiz (Vermont); Frontcourt - Julius Erving (UMass), Bob Staak (UConn) and Mark Miller (Vermont).

Coach Barr Honored As Top Wrestler

Homer Barr, UMass' successful varsity wrestling coach was named as the all-time best heavyweight wrestler at Penn State in the recently published Penn State Year Book.

From Clearfield, Pa., Barr had an army of Central Pennsylvania followers. He won every dual meet until his final match at Cornell when he was weak from a bout with the flu. He placed three times in the nationals and won two eastern titles.

Seminar on
Mind Control (TM) and E.S.P.

Silva Mind Control will be conducting a special series of lectures/seminars on the conscious control of one's own brain waves. Recent publications have described brain waves at a new system for human development.

This new Scientific Breakthrough deals with the conscious control of one's own brainwaves. Researchers have demonstrated that with "Alpha" Training, a person can eliminate Anxiety, Tension, and Frustration. Also, they could enhance concentration, awareness and recall. In fact, Alpha control is escalating the expansion of human potential development at a fantastic pace.

There are four principal brainwaves: The Beta Wave, associated with the outer conscious levels, physical activity, anxiety, tension etc. The Alpha Wave, associated with inner-levels of mental activity, tranquility, inspiration, creativity, concentration, E.S.P., accelarated healing process, memory, learning and many other phenomena. The Theta Wave, related to deeper levels of meditation, concentration, and potentially even greater learning and recall capabilities. And finally the Delta Wave, associated with deep sleep or total unconsciousness.

Silva Mind Control, using Mental Exercises, has successfully trained thousands of individuals to turn the Alpha-Theta Wave on and off at will and then practice applications of this exciting new technique for developing a superior way of life.

Not only can you improve I.Q., but a person trained with this technique, can easily learn to control certain areas of the autonomic system, including heartbeat, respiration, body temperature pain, etc. The implications of this kind of training with regards to health and disease are staggering

Gymnasts Face Penn State In Important E.I.G.L. Meet

By MICHAEL CUSACK
Staff Reporter

Penn State University will be the site of this afternoon's clash between Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League powers Penn State and UMass. Both the Redmen and the Nittany Lions are undefeated this season. This crucial meet will begin at 2:30 p.m. instead of the originally scheduled date and time, Sat., Feb. 6 at 8:00 p.m. The schedule was changed to enable the UMass-Penn St. meet to become part of a special weekend of gymnastics at Penn State featuring the Russian Championship Team.

Head UMass coach Erik Kjeldsen says, "We are going down there to do the best job we can. The potential is there -- if we stick with Penn all the way down the line, it could be anybody's meet." This year's team is the strongest that UMass gymnastics has ever produced, yet they have not realized their full potential thus far this season. If they are to have any chance of downing Gene Whetstone's Nittany Lions they must surpass their best showing to date.

Coach Kjeldsen will go with almost the same lineup used to trounce Syracuse University in the Redmen's last outing. The only exception will be in the long horse vaulting event where freshman Jay Thomsen will replace Bob Henry, who sustained a broken wrist during the past week of practice.

Penn State coach Whetstone who is also coach of the U.S. National Team, has a number of lineups he can use to face the Redmen. In all probability, he will use three established stars in the all-around event, Billy Mitchell, Tom Dunn, and Marshall Avener, the sophomore sensation who was a member of the World Games Team. In the event that Dunn goes as a specialist instead of al all-around, he will be replaced by freshman Tim Kreust who shows a promising future.

Penn not only has a number of outstanding all-around men, but is well staffed with specialists. Bob Koenig will be trying to beat the Redmen's Rick Riley on sidehorse, as both competitors are undefeated this season.

After today's meet with Penn State, the University of Pittsburg will host the Redmen tomorrow at 3:00 p.m. Pittsburg coach Warren Niger has some good gymnasts, but will have trouble in putting up a team that will be able to defeat the Redmen. Past scores this season indicate that UMass should be victorious in this meet, but whether or not this will be the case depends on how well the Redmen perform after their encounter with Penn.

Pittsburg does have one outstanding gymnast, Lowell Meek, who is defending EIGL champion in floor exercise. The Redmen have several outstanding floor ex competitors, all of whom would like to defeat Meek.

After these two meets the Redmen return home to meet arch rival Springfield College on Fri., Feb. 12 at 8:15 p.m. The meet will be held in the Cage.

Trackmen At K.of C.

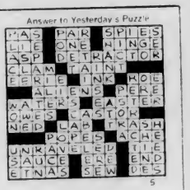
By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

Tomorrow night at Madison Square Garden eight members of the UMass track team will get a taste of big time track when they compete in the Knights of Columbus meet, one of the most prestigious indoor meets of the season.

The Redmen will be fielding two relay teams for this meet, the mile and two-mile, and will be competing against teams with calibre not found in the New England area.

In the mile relay, senior Jerry Spellman, sophomore Steve Levine and freshmen Mike Teasdale and Gene Costello will be in a field against Virginia, Temple, Fordham and UConn.

The two mile relay team of freshman John Maloney and seniors Ron Wayne, Larry Paulson and Dave Evans is in what coach Ken O'Brien has termed a "loaded heat."



These four will be facing the likes of Colgate, which defeated them last week at Boston Gardens, N.Y.U. Seton Hall, Fordham, Maryland and nationally ranker Villanova.

In this meet coach O'Brien is looking for improved times for both teams, for the younger runners like Teasdale, Costello and Maloney to gain confidence from running against tough competition and for both units to gain some sort of eastern and possibly national recognition from their performances.

A meet of this sort in which the Redmen will be up against national competition prepares all the runners involved for the remainder of the New England track season. The Redmen will continue their drive to the New Englands next Wednesday when they travel to Dartmouth for a dual meet with the Indians.

Redmen Trounce Iona, 92-51

Fashioning what could be called a slow methodical killing, the UMass basketball team trounced Iona College, 92-51, last night before a crowd of 4000 at Curry Hicks Cage. The win upped the Redmen to 14-3 on the season with the loss dropping Iona to 8-6.

The tempo for this game was evident right from the start to keep the Redmen from opening up and in so doing keeping itself in the contest.

Well, as the score indicates, this backfired as the Redmen, with some nifty outside shooting and stingy defense of its own, turned the tables on the Gaels and moved away slowly but surely in what had to be the most lackadaisical first half of the season to go into the locker room at halftime on top, 38-24.

When the second half began it was assumed that Iona might pick its offense up to try to get back into the game. But instead it reverted to its first half plan, the Redmen kept the pressure on, and with coach Jack Leaman shuffling his players in and out of the line-up, the Redmen pulled further away to their convincing victory.

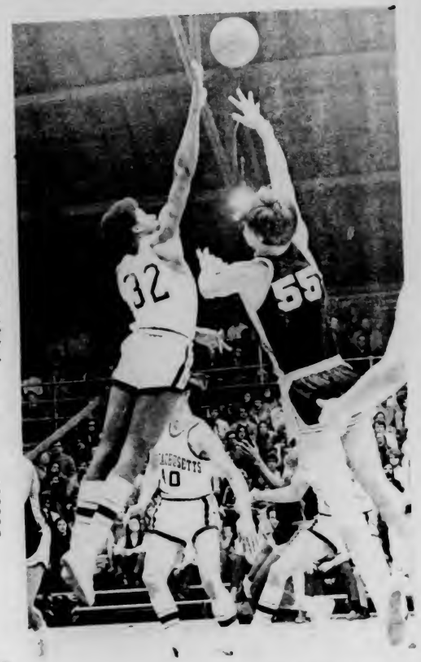
In his now familiar roll, Julius Erving led all scorers with 29 points and also hauled down 17 rebounds many resulting in fast breaks with the end product easy lay-ups for his mates.

Tom McLaughlin furnished himself another solid performance with six points, five rebounds and another tough defensive job holding his opponent to practically nothing statistically.

Once again the backcourt duo of John Betancourt and Mike Pagliara proved themselves to be still the most underrated backcourt in the region. Pagliara had one of his finest games scoring 10 points and assisting on seven other hoops with Bentancourt hitting for four points and keeping his adversary on offense out of the action.

In this game every Redman got to see action and it was actually these subs who opened up the final margin. With the chance to play they shot the eyes out of the basket and were fairly tough off the board.

Bob Dempsey, Charlie Peters and Rich Vogeley were the chief culprits in the final undoing of the Gaels. Dempsey had another in a string of fine performances with 8 points and a few crowd raising breaks down the court.



Peters had seven points in 11 minutes and Vogeley was perfect on the night with four for four from the field and two for two from the foul stripe for ten points.

For Iona, Art Wiggins was the standout with 18 points in his 40 minute stint. Harry Hart and Joe Mazzella also hit for double figures with 11 and 12 points respectively.

SET SHOTS-On the evening the Redmen hit 53.2% from the field and 81.3% from the charity stripe...In contrast Iona could hit for only 30% from the floor and 73% from the line...UMass committed only 11 fouls and had a low turnover total of 13...Iona was called on 22 foul violations and the Redmen took advantage of this from the line...Over the past three games the Redmen have held their opponents to an average of about 52 points per game...And don't forget, Tuesday night at the Cage, Boston College comes to do battle with the Redmen...Wednesday night B.C. defeated Rhode Island, 86-80...Be there!

Frosh Romp Too, 101-56

By FRED ROSENTHAL
Staff Reporter

The Little Redman basketball team jumped out to a 9-2 lead in the first five minutes and were never headed as they raced to a 101-56 victory over Chamberlayne Junior College in the Cage last night. The win boosted UMass' record to 10-1.

Al Skinner opened the scoring for the UMass frosh with a free throw, and then Rick Pitino fed John Olson and Skinner for two more baskets as UMass took a quick 5-0 lead at 17:14. Steve Brown put Chamberlayne Junior College on the scoreboard with a short jumper at 16:58.

But the Little Redmen were just warming up. Over the next eight minutes they outscored Chamberlayne Junior, 21-7, to take a 26-9 lead at 8:52. Pete Trow and Art Levine each scored six points during this stretch with Pitino collecting several assists. At 12:55 the flashy PG guard drove into the key and passed off to his right to Skinner. Skinner faked inside and then spun quickly toward the baseline where he found the basket unguarded. Two points.

UMass continued to pour it on for the rest of the hall and at the intermission they held a solid thirty point edge, 51-21.

The only suspense in the second half came at the end of the game when the UMass frosh started to close in on the 100 point mark. With 29 seconds to go and UMass leading 97-54 Chamberlayne Junior College had the ball. Reserve guard Larry Heron stole a pass at midcourt and dribbled toward the basket. He missed the layup but was fouled. The 6'1 guard calmly sank two free throws to make the score 99-54.

After Chamberlayne Junior College scored its last basket with seven seconds left, Dennis McHugh started upcourt for the Little Redmen. With one second left he was fouled by Brown. As the crowd went wild McHugh sank both ends of a one-and-one tomake the final score, 101-56.

DOUBLE DRIBBLES-For the first nine minutes of the game Chamberlayne's only offense was 6'3 forward Steve Brown. Brown scored all of the first nine points...UMass' scoring was again well balanced with six players, Skinner, Olson, Levine,Pitino, Trow, and McHugh hitting double figures. Pitino also hit double figures in assists with 10...UMass' second unit outhit on seven of eleven from the field. Chamberlayne Junior College was called for three technical fouls. Two were for hitting the backboard and the other was called on coach Jim Power...Al Skinner led all rebounders with 16.

Pucksters Hit Road For Crucial Tests

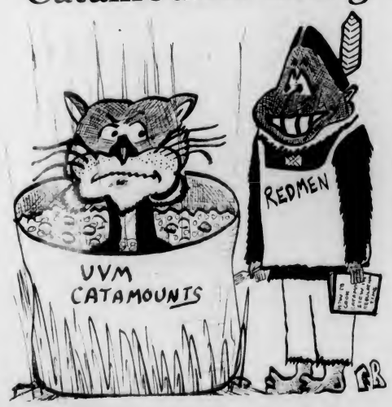
By BRONA SIMON
Staff Reporter

Merrimack and Bowdoin hold the key to the UMass hockey team's quest for a Division II playoff berth this weekend, as the Redmen's tight schedule sends them to North Andover for tonight's match against Merrimack, starting at 8 p.m., and to Brunswick, Maine tomorrow for a game against Bowdoin, with face-off time at 4 p.m.

Coach Jack Canniff expressed the importance of this series, "All three teams are trying to get into the playoffs. Merrimack is tough; Bowdoin. Both teams have great depth and good balance."

Presently in Division II standings, Vermont is leading, with Bowdoin, UMass, and Merrimack bunched together in second, third and fourth places. Each of the three have lost only one Division II game.

"Both Merrimack and Bowdoin have such depth," explained Canniff, "that it's hard to pick out any single star players that we have to mainly concern ourselves with. We're concerned with their whole squads."



Last year at Orr Rink the Redmen split against these two teams, beating Merrimack, 4-3, and losing to Bowdoin, 2-0.

Canniff sees no changes in his starting line: P.J. Flaherty at goal, Brian Sullivan and Don Lowe on defense, and the front line of Dennis Grabowski, Lonnie Avery, and Mike Waldron.

"We have to rebound from Saturday's loss against Colby," the coach emphasized. "This weekend will be a great test on our position in the Division, and on our stamina, where we have to travel to Maine after tonight's game, and be able to drive against Bowdoin tomorrow afternoon."

The game against Merrimack tonight will be broadcast on WMUA, air time at 7:45 p.m.

Catamounts Bring Back OT Memories

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

Way back in the first week of December an out-manned University of Vermont basketball team put a scare into the UMass hoopmen by taking them into overtime before falling to defeat. Tomorrow night these same Catamounts come to Curry Hicks Cage to do battle once again with the Redmen with tap- off set for 7:30.

What Vermont has lacked in ability it has made up for with discipline on offense and a rather wild, scrambling, board crashing defense. Vermont head coach Art Loche has been cited many times as one of the top hoop mentors in New England and he always has his team ready to play.

The Catamounts were certainly ready to play in early December and tomorrow night should be no different. They come into this contest with a record of 6 wins and 8 defeats and they realize that a big upset over the Redmen would make the season a success regardless of their final record.

The Catamounts have a starting five of Ray Ortiz and Jim Ducey at the guards, Mark Miller a center, and Tom Clay and Richard Trela at forwards.

Miller is one of the top rebounders in New England and also scores well from inside. In the first contest he was very instrumental in getting the ball off the boards on both ends of the court and contributed 16 points offensively.

Clay and Trela scored 11 and 10 points in the first contest. Clay is the captain of the team and is a smooth performer from his corner position. Alternating with the two at forward will be 6'9 John Deibert who scored 13 points and pulled down six rebounds in the game at Burlington.

UMass will counter with the same starting five that crashed Iona last night. That means the starters will be John Betancourt, Mike Pagliara, Julius Erving, Chris Coffin and Tom McLaughlin.

Best Joins Students In Fight For His Job

By ANNE GURNETT
Staff Reporter

Economics Professor Michael Best joined the ranks of his own students yesterday, as he spoke out against his departmental colleagues who failed to renew his teaching contract.

Best, who has been teaching for three semesters, was notified recently that his teaching contract was a terminal one, to end next year. This announcement caused confusion among the students whom he taught, many of whom felt that he made his lectures more relevant to today than most University faculty.

Best cited three underlying reasons for his dismissal:

1. "the nature of headships;" the fact that the power in the Economics Dept. is concentrated in one person, appointed from an administrative rather than a scholarly angle;

2. the role that the faculty plays in the University community; as Best defines it, the responsibility of the faculty to motivate the student, using relevant curricula and approach;

3. within Economics, there is a conflict over scope and methods of analysis - also, within the entire area of Social Studies, extreme compartmentalization of disciplines, i.e., Economics, Sociology, and Political Science has left hanging some of today's most basic problems, none of which are claimed by scholars in any of the former categories.

The Economics Dept. gave as the reason for Best's dismissal "insufficient creative research."

Countered Best, "I was not aware that it was essential for me to publish in my first year. Instead, I concentrated on developing a teaching style which would bring to my students a practical awareness of the uses and applications of Economics. I personally feel that I don't have the time to engage in research of the traditional 1930-50 economic type which I don't believe to be compatible with the nature of the University.

Michael Best

Of the nature of the University, Best said "I see a new University community, presently in initial stages but, if the University is to survive as an institution, a new faculty must evolve, as have new students, with roles different from those of today. I feel I am one of this new breed of faculty, and, pompous as it may sound, it is the men of my genre who are going to be the professors of tomorrow. Unfortunately, now me and mine must suffer."

"There is a tendency in the Economics Dept. today to deal with problems in a strictly theoretical, mathematical sense," Best continued. "There is a lack of understanding of today's problems and the new methods of analysis required to solve them."

When work is done on new methods of analysis too long neglected, developing new "conceptual frameworks," it is a difficult but necessary task, he said. In terms of the reward system for a new faculty member, this type of research is not as profitable as is the old, traditional method of analysis, which is why the new methods have taken so long to develop, he continued.

"Now that they are ready to be adopted, the old school economists are afraid to use the new methods, and face the true problem of today. This is, basically, why I am out of a job," Best said.

There is a group of students who are circulating a petition in the hopes that public opinion might keep Best a faculty member for a little while longer until he proves his absolute worth to the Economics Dept. of this University. Best expressed thanks for their efforts but added, "I myself will remain and try to do all I can in my own defense. However, I hold out little hope that either I or the petition can do anything in the face of such opposition."

Chess Champ Swamps 22 In Big Match

By MAXINE FORWARD
Staff Reporter

Twenty-two persons played chess last week, sixteen of them won, three lost and three tied. All of them played in the Hatch Thursday night and all of them went away at least slightly bewildered by a guy named Steven Jones, who is a United States Chess Foundation Master.

The players set up their boards and Jones traveled from game to game, moving a pawn here and a bishop there. When everything was over only UMass Sophomore Robert Corwin, Grad Student Alan Serleman and Amherst College Professor Peter Marshall had outsmarted Jones. Junior Mark Ordung, Senior Ray Gaudette and a Deerfield Academy student, Sam Wardhall, managed to tie the chess champ.

Spokesmen for USCF say that the most interesting game was the one between Jones and Gaudette, which went down to the wire. As the contest finally ended, only a couple of kings and a pawn were left on the board.

Chess Club members at UMass play with each other each Thursday night in the Campus Center, room 811, from 7:00 until midnight, and would welcome other students.

S. Viets Move Into Laos

SAIGON (AP)-President Nguyen Van Thieu announced Monday that South Vietnamese forces have entered southern Laos to attack North Vietnamese bases along the Ho Chi Minh Trail.

The South Vietnamese embassy quoted President Nguyen Van Thieu as saying a number of troops jumped off against the "supply and infiltration network of the Communist North Vietnamese in Laos."

The statement called the invasion a limited operation to cut off Communist supply lines from the north.

Thieu said the invasion is not an expansion of the war but "an action taken to help end the war in Vietnam and restore peace in this part of the world."

The South Vietnamese president said it is known throughout the world that North Vietnamese built the Ho Chi Minh Trail to move into the south weapons, soldiers and military material.

"They have established in that part of the Laotian territory vast military and logistic bases in order to wage the war of aggression against the Republican of Vietnam," Thieu stated.

"If this situation is allowed to continue, the North Vietnamese Communists will stubbornly go on with their war of agression against the Republic of Vietnam, Laos and the Khmer Republic," he said.

The embassy statement made no mention of U.S. support of the invasion. However, U.S. officials have said repeatedly no Americans would cross into Laos, but that unlimited U.S. airpower would be available anywhere in Indochina to protect withdrawing GIs.

"This is not an act of aggression of the Republic of Vietnam against the friendly nation of Laos," the statement said. "On the contrary, this is an action designed to stop the North Vietnamese Communists from expanding and perpetuating their aggressive potential."

Thieu, in a "message to the Vietnamese people, soldiers and cadres," said the attack is against Communist bases along the Vietnam Laos border in Military Region 1.

U.S. and South Vietnamese troops began massing along the border Jan. 30, in an operation on which the U.S. Command in Saigon imposed a news black out.

The blackout was lifted last Thursday morning and U.S. officials said the operation had not ended.

There was general speculation during the blackout period that South Vietnamese forces were poised for an invasion of Laos to interrupt Communist movement along the Ho Chi Minh Trial.

Thieu, in his statement, said South Vietnam "always respects the independence, neutrality and sovereignty of the King of Laos. I also solemnly confirm that the Republic of Vietnam does not entertain any territorial ambitions whatsoever concerning the territorial integrity of Laos, nor do we ever seek to interfere in the internal politics of the Kingdom of Laos.

Nigerian Speaker Helps Open Mills House Art Festival

By DEBBIE FLAHERTY
Staff Reporter

Nigeria is currently undertaking a three faced program for the assimilation of the Eastern province, according to Michael Ononiaye, chief economic officer of the Nigerian delegation in Washington, D.C.

"These achievements," he said, "are not as publicized as the fictions published during the war."

Ononiaye spoke at a press conference in the Student Union yesterday in place of the originally scheduled Nigerian ambassador who was unable to attend due to illness.

The economic officer along with J. O. Oche, cultural attache, were on campus yesterday for the opening of an exhibition of African arts and crafts at Mills House Black Cultural Centery which runs all month.

Programs undertaken by the Nigerian government include those for the relief, care of the poor, rehabilitation, and resettlement of the people. He pointed out however, that much still remains to be done.

The programs, he said, are keeping with an attitude that Nigeria must provide the condition and atmosphere for everyone in the country to fulfill their potentials.

"Nigerians are the best keepers of Nigeria," the economic officer claimed. The nation is applying everything it has to be right by its own people, he continued.

Ononiaye welcomed the opportunity to speak on campus saying that they are "not often allowed to give the Nigerian point of view."

The picture of Nigeria portrayed by news media in the United States is often "not just unfair, but grossly incorrect," he said in response to a question.

Speaking on the Nigerian oil supply, Ononiaye said that Nigeria, which produces 1.5 million barrells of crude oil a day, is the tenth largest producer of crude oil in the world. Its oil has the lowest sulphur supply in the world, he said.

Nigeria opposes the British sale of arms to Africa, Ononiaye said in response to another question. "We hope and pray that everyone will follow the path of reason and refuse to sell arms to South Africa."

Hatch Host To Scrolls' Whist Party

162 persons played whist in the Union last night, in the back of the Hatch. Some of them won, some of them lost, it's a natural thing, according to Scroll's president Wanda Breedlove.

A door prize of four tickets to the Campus Cinema was won by team 29; Rob Willington and Ken Canty. The tournament was played in three rounds; 75% of the players went out in the first round. A series of elimination rounds brought the number of contestants down to eight people. First prize of 25 dollars was still unawarded as of late last night. Second prize was slated to be 15 dollars, third prize was five dollars.

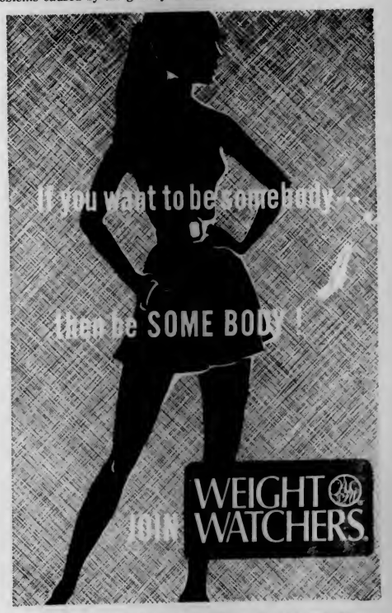
Astros Call For End To Viet War

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP)-Heading back from the moon, the Apollo 14 astronauts conducted science experiments Sunday and expressed the hope that the space program might contribute to peace on earth.

"We're reminded as we look at that shimmering crescent that is earth," said Apollo 14 commander Alan B. Shepard in a telecast to Mission Control "that we still have fighting there. We are reminded that some men who have gone to Vietnam have not returned and that some are still being held there as prisoners of war.

"It is our wish tonight that we can in some way contribute through our space program to better understanding and peace throughout the world."

The astronaut made the comments at the end of a telecast, which was not broadcasted live nationally, in which he, Stuart A. Roosa and Edgar Mitchell demonstrated manufacturing techniques which they said "could benefit all the peoples of the world."



These techniques hopefully will be able to use the weightlessness of space to produce cast metals, medical vaccines and electronic crystals of purity higher than possible on earth.

Several of the experiments worked as predicted. Small bits of metals were cast in a kind of small blacksmith shop in space and electronic crystals were formed.

The astronauts spent most of Sunday relaxing from their lunar adventure as their space craft sailed ever closer to earth. Mission Control allowed the spacemen to sleep 10 hours and they woke up reporting they felt "really great."

"We're all in excellent shape," said Mitchell, the first to awaken. "Tell the flight surgeon to sit back in his chair and have a cup of coffee. Everything's fine." Mitchell, Shepard and Roosa began stirring around in the spacecraft about 11 a.m. EST. Mission Control had let them sleep late because of their long work day-almost 24 hours-on Saturday.

During the demonstration, Roosa narrated some experiments which showed how weightlessness overcomes some of the manufacturing problems caused by the gravity of earth.

US Bombs Allies, Calls It A Mistake

SAIGON (AP) - A U.S. Navy fighter bomber accidentally dropped scores of tiny bombs the size of hand grenades on South Vietnamese troops massed for a possible drive into Laos, killing six and wounding 51, field reports said Sunday.

The accident marred a claim by South Vietnamese headquarters of a second major success over North Vietnamese troops in a drive with American combat air support through eastern Cambodia. Headquarters claimed 119 North Vietnamese were killed with the help of U.S. helicopter gunships near the Chup rubber plantation for a two day toll of 210 enemy dead.

A U.S. Command spokesman said the bombing accident is under investigation.

Witnesses said the U.S. fighter bomber apparently was diving to attack North Vietnamese positions on the Laotian side of the border but the cluster bomb dropped prematurely on the forward positions of a South Vietnamese armored calvary unit on the Laotian border.

The accident occurred about dusk Saturday as the South Vietnamese troops were preparing their night bivouac. Some of the bombelets hit an armored ammunition carrier loaded with shells and other explosives, triggering night long blasts.

The South Vietnamese airborne division involved is part of a 20,000 man task force awaiting word whether to enter Laos in an effort to cut North Vietnam's supply network.

The "go or no go" decision is said to be President Nixon's, because such an operation would require massive U.S.air support.

Some South Vietnamese reconnaissance units have crossed the frontier, according to reports, but Saigon headquarters continued to deny Sunday the presence of any of its forces in Laos.

Reports of South Vietnamese troops and convoys jamming Highway 9 toward Laos during the past 24 hours increased speculation that a thrust into Laos was near. Despite rain and low clouds, U.S. helicopters flew 742 troop lift missions, many for the South Vietnamese.

No major fighting has been reported in the operation, code named Dewey Canyon II, since it began under tight security Jan. 30, although some U.S. units have come under rocket and mortar attack.

The U.S. Command said its casualties from combat were one killed and seven wounded, and a spokesman said four other Americans among the 9,000 taking part have died from non hostile causes, including accidents. Enemy combat losses were put at 29 killed and five captured.

South Vietnamese headquarters has put a news embargo on its segment of the operation and has made no announcements.

Rodgers To Weigh Ban On U.S.-China Travel

WASHINGTON (AP)-Secretary of State William P. Rogers must decide soon whether to lift restrictions on travel by Americans to Communist Asia and Cuba and he's getting conflicting advice.

Many advisers think Rogers should at least lift the long standing ban on travel to Red China. Others want the embargo continued as is. Still others favor keeping only North Vietnam and Cuba off limits to U.S. travelers.

Rogers must decide by March 15 because, under present regulations, the restrictions will expire then if he does not act to keep them in effect. The Nixon administration has been extending the ban six months at a time since it took office.

The official travel restraints actually are more symbolic than real. U.S. courts have struck down government attempts to enforce them, and American dissidents have been going to Cuba, North Vietnam and elsewhere in defiance of the State Department policy.

And the Communist countries which have been keeping Americans out are unlikely suddenly to open their doors to U.S. citizens even if the secretary of state were to lift U.S. restrictions.

Americans carry notice from the State Department long has granted special permission to such persons as newsmen and scholars to go to Red China, for instance, but Peking has admitted very few.

Still, the symbolic significance of the State Department's off limits rules is such that Rogers would make no change without White House approval.

Passports issued now to secretary of state that "travel to, in or through the following countries and areas is restricted: Cuba, Mainland China, North Korea, North Vietnam."

Some senior State Department officials say the entire restriction should be lifted because it is unenforceable, and U.S. citizens basically should have freedom to travel where they choose.

Jungle Trail Seen Likely Laotian Target

SAIGON (AP)-The most probable target for any South Vietnamese invasion of Laos is a jungle region known on allied intelligence maps as Base Area 604.

Seventy-five miles south of the northern terminus of the Ho Chi Minh Trail at the Mu Gia Pass, Base Area 604 is one of several major supply "choke points" on the network that winds 300 miles southward into Cambodia and South Vietnam.

The biggest town in the area is Sepone, also called Tchepone, which straddles Highway 9, about 30 miles west of the Laos-Vietnam frontier where a massive buildup of allied forces has been underway for a week.

The Ho Chi Minh Trail once was likened by Gen. Creighton W. Abrams, the U.S. commander in Vietnam, to "a giant serpent that swallowed a pig."

As infusions of fresh military supplies are made into the northern end at Mu Gia and other mountain passes on the North Vietnamese Laos border, they move southward in large clusters-by truck convey, bicycle and on foot-from one base area, or "choke point," to another.

The supply flow, sources say, is managed by a division sized North Vietnamese army unit known as Group 559.

Residence Key To Voting Eligibility

UMass students' attorney and General Council Richard M. Howland told WHYN news last week that the problems surrounding student voter registration in the town of Amherst are "a symptom of a much larger issue that has been in existence since the advent of our highly mobile society."

Here is the text of what Howland said:

"De facto disenfranchisement occurs time and again when families move from place to place. The most mobile group is also probably the youngest - the student, the junior professor, the junior executive, men and women in the migratory industries, servicemen, to cite a few.

"The lowering of the voting age suddenly swept a vast number of this mobile group into the electorate. The problem of many millions of people became glaringly visible. The real question that Amherst faces, along with the Commonwealth and the nation, is what a voting residence is.

"Clearly the criteria, whatever it finally is, should be simple, direct and clear. No Registrar should be placed in the position the Amherst Town Clerk now finds herself, of establishing the criteria for the important right of registering to vote. Obviously, if the question is left to each Town Clerk, there will be differences that may result in preventing a person who ought to be qualified from voting.

"The present controversy also involves such a resultant problem. When a student leaves home for college and university he simply does not intend to return home for the purpose of living his life. Visit, yes, but permanently, no. Obviously some students may intend to return home, and they should be permitted to vote there if they wish.

"The majority of students intend to go on to someplace else after graduation, but as much as any professor, junior executive, or other apparently acceptable voter, the student intends to live in the community where he attends school a vast majority of the time prior to graduation. It is there that he spends his money (indeed education is the industry of the Pioneer Valley), rents his dwelling (dormitory or apartment or house), contributes to taxes directly and indirectly, occasionally gets arrested, thrown in jail and tried by the District Attorney. The issue isn't where a voter's money comes from, but where he spends it. A student, who chooses to inquire, will discover that that place he is most concerned about is the community where his college or university is located. After all, a University is a student's home.

"I cannot think that a thoughtful person can support the idea that the particular four walls in which a responsible individual lives affects his ability to vote. A dormitory is simply a rather poor and inefficient apartment house. The crux of the question of voting is where you live, not what you live in.

"I think that the towns of the Commonwealth should reverse their resistance and welcome young people to their rolls. If the student states that this town, any town, in which he spends nine or more months annually is the intellectual home of his choice, it should be flattered.

"I further believe that the traditional tests of change of domicile have been legally met: the student has physically left his parents' house, he doesn't intend to permanently return, he intends to stay where he has arrived. What stronger test of intent can there be than a person's personal statement of desire to live and participate in the local affairs of a particular town.

"As a matter of fact, according to the Amherst Record yesterday, two UMass students who are registered to vote have placed an Article on the Town Meeting Warrant to inquire into the University's relationship and contribution to the lowering of the local taxes. That seems responsible and community- oriented to me."

Discussion Series To Preview With Talk On Natal Astrology

The subject of Natal Astrology will be the topic of a weekly discussion series that will be offered this semester. The lectures will be presented by Mr. Fred Boyajian of Amherst, a graduate of UMass in a weekly series of 12 weeks duration. These lectures are designed on an introductory level to clear up some of the mysteries and misconceptions of a subject which dates back over 4000 years as one of man's oldest sciences. Astrology does not attempt to stand by itself, but rather to present a complete picture of the universe which integrally ties in astronomy, math, physics, biology, philosophy, & theology.

Astrology studies the correlation between human experience and behavior to extra-terrestrial events. It attempts to demonstrate that man's heredity and environment have a much broader foundation in the solar system. It provides many logical reasons for the individual differences in human feeling and action beyond the realms of psychology; e.g., Why do two people have a similar laugh? Why are more twins born under the sign of Gemini than under any other sign? Why are more crimes of passion committed on days of the full moon?

The lectures will include an outline of the history of astrology, its current practice, theory, and applications; the study of the Zodiac, signs, planets, houses, and aspects; the calculation of birth charts; and the fundamentals of interpreting selected charts.

This series will begin on Wednesday, Feb. 10 at 7:00 p.m. in room 165 of the Campus Center. Any interested students may register for the series at the introductory meeting. This program is being sponsored by the Campus Center Program Council.

"Focus" Spotlights On Drug Busts

Tonight at 10 P.M., WMUA'S "Focus" program will probe circumstances surrounding recent "drug-busts" by police at Amherst College and UMass, and in Northampton and Sunderland.

The Amherst College raid took place at an Amherst fraternity around 11 P.M. January 12th, and resulted in the arrest of several students, mostly blacks. The raids at the University and apartments in Northampton and Sunderland occurred early Thursday morning, February 4th. According to a news story in Friday's Daily Collegian, "a total of 10 people were arrested in Pierpont, Washington, and MacKimmie Dorms" Thursday morning "in a series of raids involving 21 University Policemen and 6 State Troopers, acting in four teams, each led by a University Police Sergeant."

University students arrested after the raids have been unavailable for comment, but Amherst student Shelton Joyner has agreed to appear on WMUA to discuss the implications of the Amherst College "bust" with "Focus" moderator Ken Mosakowski.

Victims of the drug raids at Amherst, UMass, Northampton, and Sunderland, and any other concerned parties, are invited to call in their comments tonight at 545-2425 or 545-2876.

Tea at 4 p.m. in Hasbrouck will precede the lecture. The program is sponsored by the physics and astronomy department and is open to all interested persons.

No More Bob Hope

WASHINGTON - Everyone seems to have his own theory as to how we can get out of Vietnam. Many critics are questionning President Nixon's strategy of winding down the war by enlarging it.

Prof. Heinrich Applebaum, who works at the Institute for the Study of Undeclared Wars, has been highly skeptical of the President's secret plan to get us out of Vietnam.

"Nixon's big mistake," said Applebaum, "is that he's withdrawing the wrong troops."

"I don't understand," I said.

"He is pulling out an average of 3,000 ground combat troops a week. That sounds good on paper. But the men he is withdrawing are fighting men."

"What's wrong with that?"

The professor went to his blackboard. "We know that for every American fighting man in Vietnam there are nine men to support him behind the lines. These include soldiers who work in the PX, the officers' clubs, the supply depots, special services, and the post offices,plus cooks, chaplains' assistants and public information specialists."

Applebaum wrote on the blackboard. "For each fighting GI the President pulls out, he leaves behind nine soldiers who are not equipped to defend themselves. When the President justifies all the things he's doing to protect American lives, he is really talking about the support troops who are expected to remain in Vietnam after the fighting troops are pulled out."

"What's the solution?"

"Well," said Applebaum, " once again the President has all his priorities fouled up. If he really wanted to pull our American troops out of Vietnam, he would withdraw the support troops first and the fighting men last."

"But that would mean closing the PXs and the officers' clubs," I protested.

"Right on," he replied. "The sooner we close thePXs, officers' clubs, movie theatres and public relations offices, the sooner all our troops will be forced to leave Vietnam. No American Army can remain anywhere without the amenities of life."

"It's awful risky."

"Look," said Applebaum, "the President says he wants an orderly withdrawal of all troops from Vietnam. What is more orderly than first withdrawing the troops who can't fight? The fighting GIs must stay behind to protect the rear.

"Once the support troops are out, Nixon can start withdrawing the combat troops."

"It makes sense on your blackboard," I said.

"It's the only solution," Applebaum said. "The more combat troops Nixon withdraws, the more danger there is to the noncombat troops, and eventually the President will have to do something very stupid to fulfill his promise of protecting American boys."

"Would the Pentagon go for it?" I asked.

"They have to. All the trouble the Army is having in Vietnam with its own troops is being caused in the bases well behind the lines. That's where all the fights, pot smoking and fragging of officers is taking place. If you close the rear bases and send those GIs home, morale will pick up 100%."

"Does this mean you wouldn't send Bob Hope over to Vietnam any more?" I asked.

"I'm afraid so. If the President knew he couldn't send Bob Hope to Vietnam, he'd have all of our troops out of there by Christmas."

The Critic

It is popular, in our times, to react against intellectuals, against those who set standards, against perfection. These reactions have not always been detrimental to the evolution of our culture--witness the egalitarianism of our courts and legislatures, which has generally been applauded by most.

A critic of the Arts, however, owes no one any spirit of freedom and equality. A critic is not a reviewer ot a commentator or a politician, but a proscriber, a person who looks at the civilizations of the living and what is remembered of the dead, honors those men and works that have touched his humanness, his strength, his frailties and preserves the knowledge and Art of those greater than he for those who aspire to immortality.

Vituperative enthusiasts chastise critics, saying that it doesn't matter, the audiences like Led Zeppelin or Love Story or Steven Stills however Clive Barnes feels. Certainly, there is legitimacy to this argument. An audience's immediate reactions to an artist are important, but the critic replies, and audience lacks the perspective and the discriminatory powers that recognize lasting value.

And, of course, critics are sometimes unable to recognize new genres of Art. That is why the French impressionist struggled for acceptance, that is why electric Dylan was booed at Newport. Conversely, the critics can be moved by a new medium that he neglects to qualitatively distinguish works within that medium. Like a goggling coed, a critic is quite capable of coming from a gallery or concert so excited about meeting "someone famous", that he fails to question whether or not that artist is deserving of fame.

The critic has rights. He has the right to make mistakes (and the obligation to correct them), the right to hurt people's feelings (by criticizing their work, never their person), the right to criticize for the sake of providing a different perspective, no matter how outlandish that perspective is.

The critic is either loved or hated, for he either makes a person feel that he belongs to life or lets a man know that no one will mourn five years after his death. But in the end, only the critic's love, the Art itself, survives.

UMies and No. 41

To The Editor:

This letter is addressed to all the advocates of fair justice who attended Thursday night's basketball game against Chamberlayne Junior College. I too attended the game but could not stay for the varsity game because I was appalled by the crowd. My disgust was directed at those people who ridiculed and embarrassed number 41. You remember him. He was the player who couldn't shoot well, was a lot bigger than his teammates and had terrible posture. He was also the player who has feelings, just like you and does not like to be ridiculed any more than you do. Only some people did not realize this. Because he was different in appearance from the other players on the floor, he was the target for every insult and humiliation possible. When he went up for a rebound the crowd screamed, whether he made it or not. If he took a shot he was applauded (in ridicule) if he made it, and was cruelly laughed at if he missed. He could not do anything right in the opinion of these bigots.

It is hard to believe that in a university whose students advocate equality to all and scorn pre-judging that this situation took place. Or is it? Is this really surprising or is it typical for a mass of humanity to look for a scapegoat to humiliate.

I wonder how you will feel if sometime for some reason you find that you are in a group and that you are the different one - grossly different. Maybe everyone will ridicule you as you did to number 41.

A Big Plus

To the editor:

The Collegian's more than kind reference to me in the editorial of February 2 requires a word of appreciation. Let me also join you as to the quality of Governor Sargent's appointments to the board, and what you expect of him. I had this in mind, too.

But if Women's Lib doesn't get after you, it will be more your good luck than good management, in failing to mention the quality of the three women on the trustees. Student leaders have special reason to appreciate the understanding and cooperation of Caroline Rowland as chairman of Student Affairs. Mrs. Knowles contributes on the whole range of board matters from her broad experience and good sense. Mrs. Snowden, beyond her high personal qualities, has brought a new awareness and a line of communication with the Black community. They add up to a big plus.

Vive La Causa

To the editor:

Many people are confused about the tangled situation of the current Lettuce Boycott. The following is a brief sketch of how the Boycott began and the current status of the Farmworkers efforts at Unionization.

After it was clear that victory was near in the grape struggle, Cesar Chavez, pacifist Farmworkers Union leader, asked Salinas growers for union representation elections. On July 27, 1970 the UFWOC ended its five year struggle with the table grape industry. Giummara Bros. 11,000 acres of grapes came under contract on the 29th, but the recognition came on the 27th. It was expected that the union would plan to prepare organization of the California citrus industry next. However, on the 27th, the day for the "celebration" over 30 vegetable growers in Salinas announced their recognition of the Teamsters as the union to organize their agricultural workers.

In August Cesar Chavez and workers "marched to Salinas" to call a selective strike against growers that signed with the Teamsters. By August 11 the Western Conference of Teamsters agreed to meet with the UFWOC. The Catholic Bishop's Committee also attended to mediate negotiations. On August 12, 1970 a jurisdictional pact was signed between UFWOC and the Teamsters whereby the Teamsters would rescind contracts with growers in exchange for UFWOC respect for Teamster jurisdiction. On August UFWOC called off its strike against firms that had signed with the Teamsters to allow for a 10-day "Moratorium".

By August 24, no growers had rescinded a Teamster contract and William Grami, Director of Agricultural Organizing of the Western Conference of Teamsters stated his union "will honor contracts signed with growers in early August. Picketing by the United Farmworkers would be considered a violation of the jurisdictional settlement."

The Teamsters agreed to a contract with Interharvest which called for an average wage of $1.85 while later, the UFWOC contract with Interharvest called for an average wage of $2.15 and missing from the Teamster contracts were clauses concerning bans on pesticides, union hiring halls, union labeling, no profiteering on labor camp food, no discrimination etc.

In December Chavez was jailed most of the month for failing to obey an injuction against the Lettuce Boycott grown by Bud Antle Corp., a subsidiary of Dow Chemical Corp. and whose land they lease from Dow. Corretta King and Ethel Kennedy appeared at vigils seeking for Chavez's release at this time.

In the last few months it was learned that the Department of Defense lettuce purchases of this last quarter from Antle increased from under 10% to 30% of the total purchases. DOD purchases from companies that had signed contracts with the UFWOC dropped. Antle's price to the DOD this last quarter averaged 16.06 cents/lb. while DOD purchases from all suppliers averaged 15.95 cents/lb. The Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that wholesale prices averaged 12.9 cents/lb.

Thus in the Los Angeles and New York City areas much of the Boycott activities have been directed toward the military bases where the Antle lettuce is distributed. Picketing by farmworkers outside the bases and leafleting by sympathetic GI's within the bases have occurred. Cesar Chavez and the UFWOC on behalf of the Farmworkers Union have filed suit against the Bud Antle Corp., Melvin Laird, the Department of Defense and several Commanding Generals for violating the civil rights of farmworkers by their attempting to "break the Lettuce Boycott". Chavez has asked $45,000 per farmworker in the suit.

Presently the iceberg (not rommaine, boston, chickory) lettuce Boycott is directed primarily at the two largest companies fighting the UFWOC, Bruce Church which sells Lucky and Red Coach brands (Red Coach is handled by Stop and Shop) and Bud Antle Corp. that markets vegetables labeled Bud, Rick, Anco, Jade, Buddy Boy, and Rex.

UFWOC contracts have been signed with Interharvest which markets Chiquita, Blue Chip, Pasco, Eagle Eye, King Pin, Nunes Brothers, King City, Amigo, Eagle, Favor, Hawk Eye and Gold Star, Fresh Pict, a division of Purex Corp. sells Prime, Ram, Sun Blush, and Three Crown. D'Arrigo Brothers sells Green Head, Andy Boy, Page Boy and Carousel. If the Aztec Eagle and the Farmworker AFL—CIO Union Label is on the lettuce wrapper or on the shipping crate, then we should buy this lettuce.

Besides refusing to buy non-union iceberg lettuce, concerned people could help by getting the institution in the area to order union lettuce; write Stop and Shop, 393 D Street, Boston, Mass. 02210; write Congressmen asking that they be vigilent for lobbying by growers who would want Congress to legislate against the Farmworkers preventing then their strikes and boycotts. Rather we should request from Congressmen that they initiate legislation that would guarantee the Farmworkers rights to collective bargaining and of specifying working conditions and benefits.

Our Campus Store

To The Editor:

Like everyone else at UMass, I am presently experiencing the frustration of buying and selling textbooks. Today was the day I finally amassed the courage to go down to the plant. After searching a number of tables and finding only half the books required for my courses, I made my way to a checkout line. An hour and a half after my arrival, I left; nine paperbacks richer and $45 poorer.

The hollow sensation I acquired earlier when emptying out my wallet had not yet abated when I ventured down to the campus center to sell my old books. Once there, I was told I would receive 50 per cent of the books' value after 10 percent had been deducted from their original cost -- providing they are still in use. A quick glance in his manual told the shylock that my books were no longer being used. He then offered me $1.50 for $20 worth of books. As the books were no longer of interest to me and no other market was available, I accepted. Later in the day, I chanced to meet a friend currently enrolled in the course I had just sold my books for. Sure enough, the books are still being used.

Well, my day of suffering through intimidation and exploitation has come to an end. Unfortunately, there are thousands of unsuspecting students awaiting similar fates.

Hard Narcs

To The Editor:

In Friday's article dealing with the Southwest drug busts, you quoted Dean Field several times. He is cited as saying that the charges will be for the possession of "hard narcotics" and that these busts were not directed at those using marijuana, but rather were in response to pressure against the "commercial traffic in hard drugs." Yet all but one of the Southwest victims were arraigned for possession of (or in the presence of) marijuana or hashish.

Can somebody please explain this?

Lost Dreams

To the editor:

"Once upon a midnight dreary, I have pondered, weak and weary, over many and many a forgotten lore" about racism, bigotry, and the American Dream. IT SEEMS THAT TOO MUCH LORE ABOUT America has been concealed, covered over, and forgotten. It is time we recalled our lowly heritage.

In my Education 251 course, Foundations of Education, I am reading about our American heritage. And to revert to the roots of our problems, such as Negro and American Indian bitterness, racism, strife, and all that jazz, I'd like to quote something from S. Alexander Rippa's book, Education in a Free Society: An American History:

"While the early settlers in the New World shared a common religious background, life in the wilderness soon brought about marked contrasts. Religion in the South did not serve as an instrument of civic discipline as it did in New England. The Virginia planters were no less religious than the settlers of Massachusetts. But the South lacked the cohesive strength of the New England town and the religious force of Calvinism. Weak and unstable, undistinguished by piety, the Anglican church established few local roots. There was, in fact, widespread southern apathy toward religious obligations. The Virginia pattern was typical outside New England: in Maryland, for example, the Roman Catholic priests could not sustain a religious unity and obedience. In the South neither religion nor family could induce men to conform in the frontier wilderness."

Thus it seems that the absence of a cohesive, religious force in the South ultimately created the situation of the Southern plantations and slavery, which has been projected into what we call racism today.

What does all this have to do with the American Dream? By the way, what is the American Dream? My interpretation of it is that America is supposed to be a Great Melting Pot into which all races and creeds are cooked to tender perfection. But something has happened to this lovely dream. Somewhere someone missed that thar message that we must try to live and work together as a great nation. F. Scott Fitzgerald wrote about the failure of the Great American Dream a half century ago.

And to go back further into the past, we must remember that the American Indians, our first true Americans, were not as savage as they have been portrayed. Was the white man justified in converting these "savages" to Christianity, when the Indian tribes had their own beautiful religion, a religion based on human need, human unity, and on an affinity for nature? Just what is the powerful white man trying to prove, anyway?

The American Dream states that all people in America belong to the country, and that no one race should dominate another. Let us make a concentrated effort to reach out and hold the hands of our countrymen. Then there might exist a dim hope that the Great American Dream will succeed.

In Person

To the editor:

In reading both sides of the SES controversy, I find the remarks of George Cheah very disturbing. He seems to be entirely missing the point of what Deaver is trying to say. Deaver never said that the SES program wasn't helpful and efficient systems of getting more information to students. His point was that for a course such as his, it can't work.

As a student in Comparative Literature 202, I feel that he is absolutely right. Every lecture of his is a performance. Certainly there are plenty of facts and "correct ideas" one could write down; but his words, his way of speaking, his excitement all present his ideas in such a way that one really begins to know and to understand the character or person about whom he is talking. One begins to see the influences, the questions, the pain and the passion that reach toward the deepest part of another life. And it isn't just one life; it is many. And sometimes they are one's own questions of which he speaks, and sometimes it is one's own passion.

This, I feel, is a real "revival of better communication in an institute of higher learning". Note-taking and editing and whatnot just don't seem to apply to the vibrancy of it. In this particular case, they miss much to much to make it worth it.

MOVIES
films CINEMA

By RUSSELL C. MUNDY
Fine Arts Staff

Let there be no mistake about it, film, movies, the cinema has arrived on campus with a vengeance. True, in 1968 a Bergman festival played to standing room only, and 1969 flashed moments of Chaplin, Antonini, and even John Ford, but the '70-71 season is an extravaganza even Cambridge might admire.

When once Dick Stromgren's Sunday night's Film Study series was the sole flickering interest for film buffs on campus, now there is barely an evening in which something of interest isn't being shown somewhere. Several departments including the Media Center in Education, Mass Communication in Speech, English, and Comparative Literature approach at least one aspect of film through course work.

Perhaps more visible than the formal course work focused on film are the programs sponsored by independent organizations across the campus. The Southwest Assembly brought Renoir's "The Grand Illusion" (1937) and Truffaut's "Jules and Jim" (1961) among others; the Orchard Hill Sunday night series included a varied program of documentary, experimental, and established classics, not to mention "The Hustler."

Surely the most noteworthy program of the semester past was produced by the Art History group in the form of the German Expressionistic Film Festival. I'm not sure that most of us were prepared for the cerebral tragedy of Lang or recognized the debt owed Murnau's prowling camera, but perhaps next time... This spring the Art History group will devote its attention to the works of great American directors. Last week, for instance, D.W. Griffith's "Way Down East" (1920) was shown at Mahar (to an audience of ten), as well as von Sternberg's "Underworld"(1927) and "The Shanghai Express" (1932). The latter seems not to have aged well; the sounds and movement of the train as the heart of the film are probably taken for granted by a modern audience. Attention is drawn instead to the unlikely relationship between the insouciance and ambiguity of Marlene Dietrich and the oaken postures of Clive Brook. Even if the film totters a bit in our jaded 70's, it remains vintage von Sternberg. The images on the platforms have an extraordinary density-- orchestrations of movement and lighting with sound overlaid that repeatedly draw the viewer into the scene.

We need a fish-eye lens to capture all of the local action and even then some distortion exists. I would not ingore for instance the much maligned Student Union series that brought a series of lesser known Bergman films or the many individual efforts that produced recently "Belle de Jour"(1967) of the Bogart festival during finals.

A new column in town like a new kid on the block demands a quick assessment of the past and then a dash into the future. It is my hope that the few sketchy remarks above satisfy the ghost of films past and that hereafter energy will be directed toward films in the future. I propose to preview rather than review; I will presume to call attention to a film that is to be shown locally, placing it briefly in historical context and commenting upon its ideas and the specific cinematic means for the working out of those ideas. I expect to brand a film "good" or "bad" or partly both and then explain why. I expect disagreement and discussion and comments directed to me at the Collegian resulting in a genuine film forum. A forum will only be far- reaching if it is begun before the campus showing. I recommend that groups producing films during the semester get in touch with me. News, developments in any aspect of film will be regularly worked into the column.

Philharmonia Returns With A Varied Program

Amherst, Mass.--The Boston Philharmonia under the direction of Leon Kirchner will be heard in concert Feb. 9-10 at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium on the Amherst campus of the UMass.

Appearing under the auspices of the University's Fine Arts Council Celebrity Series, this visit to the University is the second for the Philharmonia during its six-year history.

Leon Kirchner is considered one of America's leading composers, pianists, conductors and educators. He won a Pulitzer Prize in composition in 1967, has been Walter Rosen Bigelow Professor of Music at Harvard University for many years, and is considered one of the most articulate spokesmen in the country on the subject of music. Last year, Mr. Kirchner accepted the offer to become music director and conductor of The Boston Philharmonia, that unique ensemble specializing in works for chamber orchestra and utilizing some of the finest musicians in the Greater Boston area.

Joining Prof. Kirchner and the Boston Philharmonia for their concerts at the UMass will be the exciting, young American pianist, Murray Perahia. The program on these occasions will be Haydn's Symphony No. 92 ("Oxford"); Elliot Carter's "Minataur;" Stravinsky's Concerto for String Orchestra, and a Mozart concerto for piano and orchestra.

Reserved tickets for these concerts are available from the University's Fine Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall, telephone 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Box Office one hour before each concert.

"A Bit Of Ourselves"

By DON GLICKSTEIN
Fine Arts Staff

We're not really different. We share the same visions, are frustrated by the same realities. We put ourselves through the same anguishes that we're afraid to admit to each other. What does it matter that we feel loneliness and love, ecstasy and despair, joyful hysteria and screaming depression? What man endures, woman endures; in our age, never are we alone.

I, Woman, performed over the weekend at Mt. Holyoke's Laboratory Theater, was more than a shallow, cliched, women's liberation guerilla theater. It was a cartoon and a museum, a pantomine and a book, a reader's theater that utilized a multitude of techniques in order to reach its audience and enable the women to articulate their feelings and the men to understand them.

Compiled and directed by Daphne Reed, I, Woman was a collection of vignettes and readings, having no plot, only a theme. Occasionally, especially in the first act, the readings were long and required an extended concentration that many people were unable to give. While most of the readers performed admirably, some were immobile, and were not equipped for the difficulties of reading essay-type pieces. But these minor failures were more than overshadowed during the last act, when the troupe stopped trying to out-read each other and began to complement each other in what became an excellent revue.

"What Have You Done For Me Lately?", one of the more outstanding scenes, was painful to watch. To say that it told about the horrors of present abortion laws is not to give it justice, for the technical symbolism of it -- the black and white, male and female casting, paradoxes, and antithesis, the violence and brutality, the pain of all men and women -- went far beyond what the written word can say.

Women's Liberation is not a precursor of a new society, but a result of that new society. The changes the Movement effects will be political; a mere movement will not alter the way human think. I, Woman is less of the Movement than of the Arts, and in the long run, the Arts will succeed.

Black Community Meets On 'Hard Drug' Misuse

A general community meeting of the UMass Black Community has been called for its faculty, staff and students for 8:30 p.m. this evening. The meeting will take place in room 120, School of Business Administration.

This meeting arises out of the growing concern of black faculty and students over the increasing appearance of "Hard Drugs" in the University community.

"The meeting is not intended to represent any kind of punitive or police action on the part of the community, Johnetta Coles, associate Professor in Afro-American Studies told the Press. It is a community need to find out exactly how widespread the use of these drugs are and to find out whether it is the feeling of the community that we collectively can and should take some initiative for controlling and treating this problem before it becomes a major factor in the community."

All organizers of the meeting stressed that the meeting was merely an exploratory one to see what measures might be taken by the Black community.

"The history of addictive drugs and the national black community is interesting", John Wilson a black honor student pointed out. "I can remember back in the middle 50's there was a youth culture in the black ghettoes -- the so called fighting gangs. Various agencies spent a lot of the time trying to break up these gangs and failed. Then suddenly the various communities were riddled and saturated with dope. In less than two years the gangs had dissappeared. Just think of what those highly organized, militant gangs would be doing now in a time of heightened political consciousness in the general community."

The planners of the meeting feel that "addiction and education and political action" are incompatible. "If there are students among us who are unfortunate enough to have heroin habits, then we must find them and arrange for help for them. We must also try to see that drugs are kept out of our community so that no new students develop this habit. All people who want to help, or who have opinions and suggestions are asked to attend the meeting.

Frosh Overcome St. Thomas More, 77-59

By STEVE FERBER
Staff Reporter

As impressive as they've ever been, the Little Redmen hoopsters pulled away from St. Thomas More early in the second half on their way to a 77-59 win last Saturday night. The Cage crowd saw a tight contest for the first 20 minutes, but in the end it was all UMass.

St. Thomas More, with an extremely verbose coach, kept things close in the first half, employing a man to man defense throughout the opening period. From the 17:11 mark, when St. Thomas More gained the lead, until 8:20, the Little Redmen trailed in a seesaw type contest. At one time the lead grew to eight points, but the Redmen quickly cut down the 18-10 deficit with two quick hoops, as Art Levine and Rich Pitino provided the scoring punch.

With the Little Redmen employing a press, and a 1-2-2 zone defense, they managed to even the score, and after temporarily taking the lead at 25-24, they took it for good moments later when John Olson hit two free throws for a 27-26 Redman margin.

Al Skinner continued the surge making one of his patented rebounding-scoring maneuvers as he went right over a St. Thomas More forward, grabbed the rebound and laid the ball back up and in. The Redmen were on their way.

Led by Pitino's sharp shooting, the home club kept moving. Two long outside jumpers by the 6'1 guard put the Little Redmen on the long side of a 36-30 score.

Then with just three minutes to go in the first half, UMass set up a double pick at the foul line as the ball whipped around from Pitino to Skinner to Peter Trow, the latter hitting from the top of the key. This beautifully executed play, which found no opponent within 10 feet of Trow, produced cries of anguish from the St. Thomas More coach. His sarcastic remarks of "Look at this, look at this," rang out through Curry Hicks and gave a perfect account of the ease with which UMass was working the ball against the visitors.

With the final 20 minutes upon them, the Little Redmen held a slim 40-36 lead, but the host ballclub had no intentions of being caught from behind.

Two minutes into play, Pitino faked out his defender, and proceeded to draw Levine's man out to guard him. Quickly seizing the moment Pitino flipped the ball underneath to Levine and two more points went up on the scoreboard. UMass 46, St. Thomas 37.

Then the backbreaker came midway in the period, as UMass started a fast break. Pitino rebounded and found Trow downcourt. Trow drove down the left side of the lane and flipped the ball over to Skinner. As the two on one fast break evolved, Skinner set-up as if to shoot, but at the last moment he shoveled the pass back to Trow and the ensuing three point play put the game away.

Throughout the second half of action UMass used a four corner offense, one that forces the opposition to come out from their zone coverage in attempts to steal the ball, and prevent a freeze. Twice the offense turned the trick as Pitino to Skinner passes resulted in two easy lay-ups, but the best was still to come.

With a little over 10 minutes remaining, St. Thomas More decided not to press the four corner offense. Instead they seemed content to wait in their zone, a most interesting strategy, considering the fact they were trailing by fourteen points.

So Trow threw the ball to Skinner, and Skinner to Trow, and back and forth the ball went for over a minute, when finally Pitino, getting tired of standing around, called for the ball, and Trow let him join in the fun. Finally St. Thomas More came out of their zone defense, but not before the crowd had gotten its thrills from Skinner and Trow's passing antics.

At 11-1 (8-0 at home), personal fouls have been the Little Redmen's latest key to success. Committing a season low of four personal fouls, the freshmen allowed St. Thomas More only three points from the charity stripe.

With consistency abounding, the Little Redmen's 77-59 performance failed to produce a long streak of domination. Instead the freshmen kept edging away with short spurts here and there, as they outshot, outrebounded and outpointed their opponents, in dropping St. Thomas More to the .500 level on the year.

FIELD GOAL GARBLE - The Little Redmen continue to show fine scoring balance as their five starters are averaging within seven points of each other, and all in double figures....At halftime, one of the truly fine performances was put on as the Amherst Boys' club showed UMass fans how basketball was meant to be played....Pitino had seven assists and continues to dazzle UMass fans with his slick passes.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Good lunar aspect highlights travel, learning; ability to perceive future trends. Fresh viewpoint appears to be a necessity. Stress originality. Build self confidence.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Estates, wills, insurance policies: these are now in picture. Unusual experiences, responses dominate. Be willing to analyze yourself. What appears a necessity may not really be essential.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Stress versatility. Any tendency to be stubborn now could upset delicate relationship. Marriage and partnership are emphasized. Improve public relations. Express self in meaningful way.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): What appears a conflict could actually be an asset. Be perceptive. If you have a pet, give it attention. One who is argumentative is suffering from inferiority complex. Respond accordingly.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are creative, productive, have natural knack for business management. You are at home with money and know how to use it. You are breaking from old patterns. This is good; could lead to new, meaningful relationship.

Redmen Over UVM

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

Turning Vermont's game plan into Catamount errors, the UMass basketball team assumed control right from the start and coasted to an easy 86-51 victory at Curry Hicks Cage Saturday night before a crowd of 4000.

As was expected the Catamounts tried the same early game tactics that they used so successfully in the first meeting between the two teams two months before. With their inferior calibre of player this was their only prayer.

But this is two months later and the Redmen were waiting as all the shuffling of players in and out of the line-up and the intentions of getting early fouls on the Redmen went for not as UMass put it to Vermont right from the start and dashed any of its hopes with a quick assault that vaulted them into a commanding lead by the hallway point of the first half.

Upping their record to 15-2, the Redman starting five of Julius Erving, Tom McLaughlin, Chris Coffin, John Betancourt and Mike Pagliara played its cool during the early moments letting Vermont dig its own grave and then put the finishing touches on with nifty outside shouting, control of both the offensive and defensive boards and for final measure probably their most effective press to date.

At half time the score stood at 42-24, the verdict already in, with the second half more of the same with the Redman bench getting into the picture for the second game in a row.

Erving led all scorers for the umpteenth time with 26 points and also had 20 rebounds for his night's work.

Coffin and McLaughlin put in solid performances from their corner positions, especially in the first half as Coffin had seven points and 10 rebounds and McLaughlin had 10 points and five rebounds in the first twenty minutes of action.

For the evening Coffin's stats read nine and 11 and for McLaughlin, 14 and six.

Pagliara turned in an outstanding 35 minutes of basketball in the contest and the applaudets he received upon leaving the game bear this out. Besides his 10 points and eight assists his defense was stingy and his leadership was instrumental in the early Redman surge.

A welcome surprise for this game was the return to form of Ken Mathias who furnished his finest outting since his return to any lengthy action. His return will be a big boost to the Redmen in their coming encounters.

Playing his longest stint of the season Bill Greeley hit on four of five shots for eight points, three of his shots from the downtown range.

For Vermont, its record now standing at 6-10, Mark Miller and Jim Ducey were the only spots in the rather impotent Catamount attack, as they accounted for almost half of their team's points.

CAGE COMMENT - UMass shot only 43% from the floor and 63% from the line...Vermont managed to hit on only 35% of its attempts from the floor and 65% from the charity stripe...In rebounding the Redmen had an overwhelming advantage of 60 to 37 and at times it appeared Erving and company were having rebound drills at the expense of the Catamounts...For the first time this season the Redmen were under double figures in turnovers with nine...It one puts these stats in perspective then the final margin is no surprise...In other weekend hoop action of interest to UMass hoop fans, Fordham defeated Boston College in overtime, 54-50, at B.C., and Syracuse, whom the Redmen play February 22, upset 12th ranked LaSalle, 75-68 at Syracuse.

UMass Ties Merrimack

By DAN KAMAL
Staff Reporter

Billerica and Brunswick, Maine - --- Playing what has to be termed two crucial games in a span of 17 hours, the UMass hockey team earned a 2-2 tie against Merrimack College Friday night and absorbed its second loss of the year against Bowdoin College, 2-1 on Saturday afternoon. Both games were hard-hitting, well-executed contests in which the Redmen showed a marked improvement over the disappointing performance against Colby College a week earlier. The loss against Bowdoin leaves UMass with a 7-2-1 season record and a fourth place berth in Division II ECAC standings.

Before a partisan Merrimack College crowd of about 1200 at the Merrimack Valley Forum, both teams were a bit ragged in the first period. Neither team was able to maintain a sustained offensive drive.

Donnie Lowe had the first real scoring threat for the Redmen when his blast from the point on a power play was kicked out on a good save by Merrimack goalie Pat Finch.

UMass then opened the scoring at 9:20 when Dan Reidy coming down on left wing took a pretty pass from Pat Keenan and lifted a backhander high above the fallen Finch. Jack Edwards also assisted. Just after Reidy's goal, P.J. Flaherty made an outstanding stop of a Jim Colburn shot, and UMass retained the lead at the end of the first period, 1-0.

The tempo picked up in the second period, which was marked by a number of small scraps. UMass had a man advantage at the 4:26 mark of the period when the Warriors' Dennis Goryl was sent off for charging. The Redmen really put on the pressure during the two-minute advantage, but Finch put on an unbelievable display of goaltending and frustrated the visitors on numerous occasions during the power play.

However, about five minutes later, the Redmen again had the advantage as Merrimack's Fran Johnson went off for elbowing. Then with only about 20 seconds gone in the power play, Al Nickerson did a good job of keeping the puck in the Warrior zone and passed it along the left-wing boards to Reidy. The junior forward then centered it, and Keenan was there to finish off the play with a backhander past Finch. This gave UMass a 2-0 lead.

Merrimack cut the lead in half at the 14:57 mark when Mike Roy took a pass from Tom Pallotta, faked a pass and then slid a shot right along the ice to the near side past Flaherty who appeared to be looking for the pass.

The third period featured some hard hitting and good two-way hockey. Both teams had excellent scoring opportunities, particularly UMass on another power play around the six-minute mark. Once again, however, Finch thwarted the Redmen, especially Keenan who was robbed by the Warrior goalie at least four times during the game.

The home team then started to force the play as it attempted to tie the game. The tying goal did come at 16:20 as Merrimack center Steve O'Neil broke through the UMass defense at center ice and skated in all alone. He made a nice fake on Flaherty, caused the Redman goalie to make the first move and commit himself, and then slid the rubber disc underneath him.

UMass made a desperate effort to regain the lead, but Finch was again incredible as he literally took away goals from Keenan and Reidy, and the game went into overtime.

Merrimack, unlike the three previous periods, clearly had the advantage in the overtime session. Flaherty was called upon to make a number of good stops in order to keep his team in a tie. He was particularly impressive on a save on O'Neil who took a shot from point-blank range.

The ten minute overtime period ended without any scoring, and the tense, exciting match ended in a deadlock.

ICE CHIPS ...Finch was clearly the difference in this contest as he continually stopped good UMass scoring threats...Don Riley played his usual hustling game as he was all over the ice...the defense team of Lowe and Brian Sullivan did a particularly good job...Redmen followers got a scare at the end of regulation time when Merrimack's Al Portelance blasted a shot past Flaherty just after the buzzer....

Trackmen Place 4th

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

New York, N.Y. - Unable to assume good position in both lead off legs of the mile and two mile relays the UMass trackmen found their trip to Madison Square Garden a little rocky as they were only able to place fourth in the two mile relay and out of contention in the mile relay at the Knights of Columbus meet here Friday night.

In the two mile relay, freshman John Maloney found his first trip to Madison Square Garden to be awful rough as he was knocked from the track by an opponent only a lap from the completion of his opening leg. This mishap resulted in a big deficit for the Redmen which they were not able to close in the remaining three legs.

Seniors Larry Paulson, Ron Wayne, and Dave Evans used up all of their energies in the first 660 yards of their 880 yard leg and in so doing, faded near the end widening the deficit they had earlier made up. This was a result of the first leg deficit.

Wayne had the fastest time split of the group covering his half mile in 1:56.6. Evans was next in 1:58 with Paulson at 1:59.

In placing fourth this quartet was only four seconds off the winning mark of N.Y.U. Their time was 7:56.

The mile relay was decided on the first turn when Jerry Spellman was only able to get sixth place at this early point in the race. As a result this race turned out to be the same type of up hill battle that the two mile team faced.

Competing along with Spellman were Steve Levine, Mike Teasdale and Gene Costello. Their time of 3:33.3 was the slowest UMass mile relay time of the year and was unsatisfactory for coach Ken O'Brien.

In the next two dual meets at Dartmouth and Northeastern he'll be watching closely at both the varsity and freshman mile relay units in an effort to pick the four men to make up the best team for the Yankee Conference championships at UConn February 20.

Bowdoin Edges Redmen

Last Saturday afternoon the UMass hockey team took to the ice against a good Bowdoin team. The Redmen played very well, but suffered their second loss of the season, by a score of 2-1.

In the first period the Polar Bears started out like a hurricane at full force. They forced the play into the UMass zone and quickly scored at the 0:46 mark. Mike Waldron of the Redmen went behind his own net with the puck. Then he intended a pass for Don Lowe, which was intercepted in the UMass slot by Bowdoin's Jim Block. Block wasted no time in putting the puck behind P.J. Flaherty for an unassisted goal and a 1-0 lead.

There was no more scoring in this first period, as the Redmen got themselves untracked and held Bowdoin scoreless for the remainder of the period. Flaherty had 12 saves, while Bowdoin goalieTom Hutchinson had nine.

The Redmen caught fire in the second period and tied the game. At the 7:56 mark Brian Sullivan chased the puck into the Bowdoin corner, to the left of Hutchinson. He centered a pass to Waldron in the slot, who fired a backhander along the ice to beat goalie Hutchinson and knot the score at 1 apiece. This goal, Waldron's third of the season, came on the UMass power play, as John Taussig was sitting in the penalty box for a tripping infraction.

UMass skated well and outshot Bowdoin in the third stanza, but the final tally was registered by the Polar Bears. At 9:20 UMass wing Jack Edwards was sent off the ice for holding. Thirty-eight seconds later the Bowdoin power-play found the mark. With UMass setting up in its penalty-killing box defense in front of Flaherty, Bowdoin sent Jim Burnett into the slot, inside of the UMass box. Defenseman Bob Hall passed the puck from the left point into Burnett, who put it by Flaherty's glove side for a goal. However, the Redmen never gave up. With a little over a minute left to play in the contest, Coach Jack Caniff pulled goalie Flaherty, in favor of a sixth skater. But the Redmen could not put on the red light, and Bowdoin won the game, 2-1.

In this final period UMass played shorthanded twice, while Bowdoin had to kill just one penalty. The Redmen totaled 7 penalties in the game, while the Polar Bears incurred five. Flaherty blocked 8 shots in the last period, for a game total of 29 saves, while his counterpart Hutchinson stopped 10 UMass shots, for a game total of twenty-six.

One of the deciding factors late in this game was that Bowdoin kept stationing two defensemen in front of its goal, plus a third man at times, and they succeeded in blocking many UMass scoring attempts.

FROM THE BACK OF THE BUS - Against Merrimack and Bowdoin the Redmen faced some tough goal tending, as they took 66 shots on goal, but scored only 3 times....Next UMass hockey game is Wednesday at Orr Rink against Connecticut.

Central Area Notes

Clean-Up Coming

By C. ROSS STUART
Staff Reporter

If the phrase, "The Student As Nigger" can be applied to students at any particular time or place, then the Central Residence Area and the students who live there are its application. The Central Area is the Harlem, the Watts, the Roxbury, of the University.

The Central Area is in the worst physical condition of all the areas.

The Central Area gets the smallest cut of the money pie.

When the University, as "The Man," shows the rest of the world what it has, it does not show off the Central Area, instead it beams with pride at its glistening cement monoliths, or phallic symbols, depending on your particular hangup.

The Central Area is refusing to be a ghetto any longer. They are refusing to continue taking the shit end of the stick in things like repairs, renovations, and appropriations. The Central Area is going to grab that stick, shake the shit off it and pull itself out of the quagmire.

Work Week is now the cry to be heard from the bowels of our beloved alma mater. From the secret enclaves of the diabolical Office of Student Affairs of the Central Area, the mysterious plan to harness the incredible forces of the Physical Plant and the bureaucracy of Whitmore, has emerged. This devastating plan will do more to change the physical being of the Central Area than any plan any other mere mortals have ever conceived. It will shake the very fibres of the powers that be. Never before has man ever witnessed such a coming together of brute know-how, determination to improve an environment, and confidence of overcoming red-tape systems, such as are embodied in the Work Week proposal of the Central Area.

Spring Vacation will be the scene of a truly remarkable environmental revolution. The mind is staggered by visions of hordes of painters, carpenters, electricians, repair men, swarming over every inch of the Central Area. Just ponder for a moment the results of this soon to come revolution. Think for a moment about toilet stalls with doors, doors that work, about light fixtures that work, about walls that are not cracked and peeling, about faucets that work, about rugs and floors that are clean, about door locks that actually lock. All these and many more wonderous delights will be there for all to behold.

All of this will happen right in the Central Area.

Hand-picked troops, the elite working forces, of the Central Area will do battle with the corrupt forces of dirt, malfunction, disrepair, and neglect during the week of Spring Break. They shall emerge victorious for their cause is based on a most noble ideal, that of self-improvement.

Carnival Planned For Winter Carni

Since the ban on concerts in the Cage, the Winter Carni Committee has come up with an alternative idea: they plan to hold a Carnival.

With permission from the SUG Board, the Committee will let students organize, run and staff a booth for two days during Winter Carnival.

The individual student or student group may retain all profits made from the booth, which will hopefully offer for sale candles, ceramics, paints, leather goods, and jewelry. Also, in keeping with the idea of a fair, students are invited to set up games and the like.

The Committee plans to sponsor arts and crafts demonstrations, penny-arcade with pinball machines, a trainride, and other attractions from cotton candy to grinders. Prizes will be given for the best-decorated booths.

Applications for these and similar projects are available now in the Student Activities Office.

All students have been invited to the Carnival.

Nixon, Press In Cahoots-SMC

According to a statement made by the Student Mobilization Committee, the New York Times, the Boston Globe, and other prominent newspapers and news stations have collaborated with the Nixon Administration to create the longest, most severe news blackout since World War II.

CLAIRE MORIARTY

"Despite these efforts to keep the American public ignorant of the recent massive escalation of the war in Southeast Asia," said SMC spokeswoman Claire Moriarty, "we do know that 20,000 South Vietnamese troops have invaded Laos. In addition there are 20,000 more South Vietnamese troops stationed on the border between Cambodia and Laos and 9,000 American GI's on the eastern border of Laos ready to invade. Also, US bombing of Laos which continues around the clock is a clear violation of the 1954 Geneva Accords which the US then agreed to abide by."

The SMC contends that because Nixon is unlikely to make another public announcement of US escalation of the war in Southeast Asia as he did last spring, the anti-war movement can't afford to passively awaid a cue from Washington.

"Students at this University and across the country must act decisively to say no to the escalation of the war," according to SMC statement.

The National SMC has called demonstrations, rallies, and teach-ins across the United States this week to demand immediate withdrawal of all US troops from Southeast Asia. The response of students at this University to this most recent escalation will be decided at a mass meeting of the SMC to be held in room 904 of the Campus Center tonight at 8 p.m. Everyone in the University is urged to attend

Five Choppers Downed In Laos

SAIGON (AP) South Vietnamese troops driving into Laos encountered light resistance, but enemy gunners shot down five U.S. helicopters, killing four Americans and six South Vietnamese, field reports said Tuesday.

The American deaths were the first reported in the thrust into Laos that was launched at dawn Monday by South Vietnamese armored troops and infantrymen seeking to chop up the Ho Chi Minh trail.

U.S. troops who remained on the Vietnamese side of the border in the northwestern corner of South Vietnam to act as a rear guard also came under attack, the U.S. Command reported.

It said two Americans were killed and 15 were wounded in an ambush northeast of the Khe Sanh combat base and a fire fight eight miles to the west. Enemy losses were not known.

Field reports said seven American helicopters were lost in the first day of the push into Laos-five shot down and two crashing.

They said all of the fatalities were from one of the choppers. The crewmen aboard the others were rescued.

The helicopters were either carrying South Vietnamese troops into battle or were flying gunship support.

U.S. officials promised that no American ground troops would participate in the Laotian attack but said the South Vietnamese would receive full air support from American helicopters and fighter bombers.

Saigon spokesmen said the South Vietnamese had pushed six miles into Laos. Field reports, which are often more up to date, said the troops had traveled 10 miles and set up a fire base to provide artillery support as the force headed west toward Sepone.

North Vietnam, in a broadcast monitored in Tokyo, said the new operation "conducted under the U.S. Command is an open armed aggression against Laos" and a "very dangerous act of war."

Inventors Show Their Stuff

NEW YORK (AP)-Some of the world's latest technology and newest products-ranging from an automobile seat belt that massages you while you drive to aa automatic back scrubber-went on display Monday at an international patent exposition.

Exhibitors from 22 countries, showed off samples of new products, technology, processes and inventions in both consumer and industrial fields. The private show was for the benefit of businesses interested in acquiring the rights to the products.

Most of the American exhibits were devoted to consumer products.

These included the seat belt massager, designed to tone up midriff muscles while keeping the driver alert and awake during long road trips, and the pulley operated back scrubber that attaches to a bathroom wall for a daily scrub or invigorating backrub.

Other exhibits included a new paint dispenser which stores a supply of paint in the handle of a roller brush; a combination steam bath cabinet and shower constructed to form part of the bathroom, and a plastic device which can be attached to any conventional vacuum cleaner to wash carpets and upholstery.

Teacher Evaluation Guides Ready Next Spring

By ANNE STADNICKI
Staff Reporter

Teacher evaluation guides will be made available to students prior to pre-registration for the spring semester, it was announced by Chuck Hallberg, assistant director of the Teacher Evaluation Committee.

The booklet will list the results of the evaluation last semester and offer an expanded version of the course description booklet, he said.

Thomas Fillmore, director of the committee, termed the evaluation a success in spite of the group's "lack of direct experience." The number of unforeseen difficulties that arose mainly concerned methodology,he explained.

It was estimated that 90% of the results had been returned to the professors involved in the evaluation. Hallberg said that approximately 700 sections were covered.

"The only way to get into a class to evaluate it was by request of the faculty member" Fillmore said. This explained why only 50-60% of the class attitudes were expressed, because that number of students were in attendence at class on the particular day the forms were distributed.

Continuing, he said that a professor does not have to give permission to be evaluated. Outside the classroom evaluation forms could be distributed to students entering or leaving the class.

Facilitating the student in course selection is the primary purpose of the course evaluation guide, according to Hallberg. The form was a worthy method of determining teaching ability, he said.

"One of the numerable effects that I predict is that the quality of teaching has to improve in the long run as a result of the evaluation," Hallberg added.

There are possibilities that professors may be hurt or there will be low attendence in the classes of poorly rated teachers, but Hallberg said he is not overly concerned with this aspect.

CHUCK HALLBERG

"We don't view the situation negatively, because it is positive criticism," he went on. "Low evaluation is indicative that the teacher ought to review his methodology."

Optical scanning by a computer counts the evaluation results, Hallberg explained. He said that a 3% estimate of error was provided in the computation also.

One problem the committee faces in the compiling of the description guide is the fact that many teachers don't know which courses they will be teaching next year, because their departments don't decide until after registration, Hallberg said. His complaint was that this deprives the student of the opportunity to choose his intructors.

Along with the evaluation there may be included memos from professors in experimental courses, explaining exactly what those courses involve, Hallberg added. A comparative cross-analysis of all the courses evaluated will also be published at a later date, he said.

Marshall T. Spriggs and Tom Fillmore compiled the evaluation form this past summer and narrowed the number of questions to twenty four after submission to various professors for validity, said Hallberg. The Academic Matters committee of the Student Senate made budget requests for the undertaking, he continued.

Fillmore said twelve thousand dollars was appropriated to the group.

"Self sacrificing fools" accurately describes the evaluation committee of six, according to Fillmore. He said that two general interest meetings failed to net any volunteers and that the real job, if evaluation is to continue, is to guarantee participation.

Fillmore's rather ominous warning about the future of teacher evaluation was that it might have to be taken over by the administration if students were not willing to work.

Ted Gets His License Back

BOSTON (AP)-Edward M. Kennedy, D—Mass., has received a new driver's license to replace the permit that was revoked for one year following a July, 1969, accident on Chappaquiddick Island, the Registry of Motor Vehicles reported Monday.

A Washington secretary drowned in Kennedy's car when it went off a bridge into a tidal poll in the incident.

Kennedy took the required tests at the Plymouth office of the Registry of Motor Vehicles Nov. 27 and was given a license the same day, according to Registrar Richard E. McLaughlin.

A week after the accident which killed Mary Jo Kopechne, a former secretary to the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, (D.-N.Y.), the Massachusetts senator pleaded guilty to a charge of leaving the scene of an accident.

Judge James A. Boyle sentenced him to three months in jail, suspended for one year on probation. His license to drive was revoked for a mandatory one year period.

LONDON (AP)-The defendant cut through the formalities in a London magistrate's court Monday.

Pulling himself erect, he told the court: "The way I feel at the moment I'll plead guilty to anything."

He was fined $2.40 for being drunk.

SenateDovesCondemn Indo-China Escalation

WASHINGTON (AP)-Senate doves Monday attacked the South Vietnamese drive into Laos as a widening of the war. But initial reaction generally was muted compared to the protests that followed the U.S. move into Cambodia last year.

The United States declared in a policy statement that the strike, which is being supported by U.S. air power, is a limited operation and "not an enlargement of the war."

State Department press officer Robert J. McCloskey said the United States would like to see a new international conference called to make peace in Indochina. He said also the Nixon administration is considering making a report to the United Nations Security Council on the South Vietnamese drive against Communist position in Laos.

Senate Democratic leader Mike Mansfield said a failure by the South Vietnamese to cut enemy supply lines could create an extremely serious situation and force a reversal of U.S. policy of withdrawing troops from Southeast Asia.

Senate Republican leader Hugh Scott said "This is a movement to interdict supplies and insure orderly withdrawal of American forces and to protect American lives." He said it "is no expansion of the war."

But Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, (D Mass.,) told newsmen the Laos drive "violates the spirit if not the letter of the amendments that passed the Senate."

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, (D Minn.,) said the implications "are enormously dangerous for both the United States and South Vietnam as well as for the Kingdom of Laos and other countries of Southeast Asia."

Humphrey said "this invasion represents a stepping up instead of a toning down of the war."

Italians Dig Out After Major Quake

TUSCANIA, Italy (AP)-Italian authorities rushed health experts and medical supplies to devastated Tuscania Monday to try to avert an epidemic of typhus or other disease as a result of the quake which hit the medieval hill town, killing at least 20 persons.

Health Minister Luigi Mariotti dispatched three health inspectors to the town of 12,000 inhabitants, along with a team of chemists, bacteriologists and engineers to study the damaged water system and "insure the furnishing of potable water to the population."

The ministry said the health situation was believed under control in Tuscania and "does not give reason, at present, for worry."

But it ordered the immediate dispatch of antibiotics, anti-typhus vaccine, as well as blood plasma and other drugs.

Rescue squads extracted the bodies of a young boy and an elderly man from the rubble, bringing the death toll from Saturday night's quake to 20.

A government official estimated damage to the city's monuments, churches and museums at $800,000 and said the cost of restoring what is reparable could go much higher. Damage to nonhistoric sites has been estimated at more than $4 million.

President Giuseppe Saragat and Premier Emilio Colombo toured the debris strewn medieval quarter and visited some of the 139 injured persons in hospitals.

SENSITIVITY GROUP

This weekend, February 12-14, Friday 7:30 p.m. - Sunday 4:00 p.m.

Within each of us is the power to grow; to be more effective; to better relate with others; to find greater satisfaction in everything we do. This weekend, the New England Center for Personal and Organizational Development will conduct an experience in personal growth based on the TORI philosophy of Dr. Jack R. Gibb, one of the pioneers in sensitivity training and co-author of the classic T-GROUP THEORY AND LABORATORY METHOD.

Through the development of the TORI experiences (Trust, Openness, Realization and Interdependence), the participant discovers his potentiality for more open, honest and satisfying relationships with others. As a warm, supportive environment evolves, each person becomes increasingly more responsible for his own experience. Thus he discovers he is stronger, more lovable and possesses a greater potential for joy than he had previously thought. For this reason, TORI is called the "Intimate Community."

REGISTRATION: All registrations must be made by mail with the full fee enclosed. Fee: $20.00 general, $10.00 students. Limited to 200 participants. Send to: New England Center, P.O. Box 575, Amherst, Massachusetts 01002

Viets Continue Drive Into Laos

SAIGON (AP) - South Vietnamese forces drove 10 miles into southern Laos Monday and set up a fire base about a third of the way to their apparent objective - a key supply junction on the Ho Chi Minh Trail, field dispatches reported.

They said the forces advancing across South Vietnam's northwest border met only light resistance.

But heavy antiaircraft fire greeted the initial waves of air borne troops and four U.S. helicopters were reported shot down. Two others crashed because of mechanical difficulties, the dispatches said, but the crews of all six were rescued.

The American helicopters either ferried South Vietnamese troops into Laos or supported their ground operations. No U.S. ground troops were involved, the U.S. command said.

The South Vietnamese fire base was reported established on Highway 9 which leads to Sepone, about 30 miles west of the frontier and believed to be a center for the transshipment of supplies and men down the 300 mile Ho Chi Minh trail from North Vietnam.

Sepone apparently is at least one of the objectives of the drive that got off at daybreak Monday with South Vietnamese troops waving and laughing as they crossed into Laos.

U.S. helicopter gunships crews reported destroying rice and other supplies as well as antiaircraft weapons in the operations area.

About 140 U.S. helicopters took part in the initial assault.

The incursion, called Operation Lam Son 719, brought North South Vietnamese hostilities into the third of the Indochinese countries - a little more than nine months after the allied drives into Cambodia.

But the United States and South Vietnam insisted this does not mean an enlargement of the Indochina war.

This was disputed by the Soviet Union, Red China, North Vietnam, the Viet Cong and to some extent, according to informants in Paris, the French government.

Britain voiced its support for the operation, agreeing with the United States that the North Vietnamese are to blame for the situation in Laos, which nominally is a neutralist nation. Australia, Cambodia, Thailand and South Korea all expressed approval.

The U.S. State Department said the drive by the South Vietnamese, with U.S. air and artillery support, is not an expansion of the war because "the territory involved has been the scene of combat since 1965."

The first phase of Operation Lam Son - or Green Mountain - apparently was confined to one sector of southern Laos - a nation a little smaller than Oregon - and the announced aim was to interdict the Ho Chi Minh trail, something six years of bombing by U.S. planes has failed to accomplish.

The widely heralded offensive, expected for 10 days or more, was undertaken "to help end the war soon and restore peace in this part of the world," according to President Nguyen Van Thieu's announcement.

In a message to his people, Thieu promised the operation would be limited both in time and territory, although he did not define either limit.

He declared "that when the limited operation ends, the armed forces of the Republic of Vietnam will withdraw completely from Laotian territory."

A few hours after Thieu spoke, a leader of the pro Communist Pathet Lao in Vientiane, Laos' capital, declared that Communist led forces would "turn southern Laos into a graveyard for South Vietnamese troops."

But on the first day, South Vietnamese commanders reported only light and scattered ground contacts with North Vietnamese units and said they took only a few casualties.

Saigon headquarters did not announce the number of troops that crossed into Laos in helicopters and armored vehicles along Highway 9. Field reports estimated the total at somewhere between 4,000 and 8,000 before nightfall, with more to follow in the next few days.

The South Vietnamese had massed 20,000 troops along the Laos frontier in the northwestcorner of South Vietnam. The U.S. Command repeated that no American ground troops would enter Laos.

The United States promised to support the Saigon forces with the entire range of air power from bombers to medical evacuation helicopters and with frontier artillery guns firing into Laos.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Robert J. McCloskey said the operation will protect American lives during continued U.S. troop withdrawals from South Vietnam.

McCloskey said the operation would be kept within the southern Laos panhandle and in the region of Sepone.

Defense Department officials in Washington said the strategic goal behind the drive is to keep the enemy from mounting an offensive while the United States is turning over its role in the war to the South Vietnamese.

The Laotian premier, Prince Souvanna Phouma, issued a mild protest against the South Vietnamese drive but declared that the primary responsibility for the situation rested with the North Vietnamese because they have been using the Ho Chi Minh trail for years.

Souvanna was officially informed of the invasion by the South Vietnamese ambassador in Vientiane on Monday afternoon, hours after the drive had begun.

Harrisburg Six Plead Innocent

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) - The Rev. Philip Berrigan, imprisoned antiwar priest, and five other persons pleaded innocent Monday to charges of conspiring to kidnap presidential adviser Henry Kissinger and blow up heating tunnels in the nation's capital.

Tight security prevailed through the federal building as the 47 year old Josephite priest was led by federal marshals before Judge R. Dixon Herman of U.S. District Court.

Father Berrigan, a Roman Catholic, was brought here in handcuffs from the federal correctional institution at Danbury, Conn. He is serving a 3 1/2 year term for destroying draft board records.

Berrigan had spent the night in jail in a nearby Bloomsburg, not far from Lewisburg Federal Pententiary where he was first imprisoned last summer and from where the government claims he masterminded the alleged plot to kidnap Kissinger.

Those who sought admission to the tiny courtroom needed special passes. Access to the stairways was restricted and identification was needed to get on elevators. Uniformed guards checked everyone entering the building, and all had to walk through a metal detector in search of hidden weapons.

Besides Berrigan, the defendants are Eqbal Ahmad, 40, a student at the University of Chicago's Adlai Stevenson Institute for International Affairs; Sister Elizabeth McAlister, 31, Upper Montclair, N.J., a member of the Religious Order of the Sacred Heart; the Revs. Joseph Wenderoth, 35, and Neil R. McLaughlin, 30, both of Baltimore, and Anthony Scoblick, 30, a former Josephite priest in Baltimore. Scoblick is the son of a former Pennsylvania congressman.

All six waived reading of the indictment handed down by a federal grand jury here last Jan. 12. They earlier claimed the charges were fabricated and part of a deliberate effort to destroy the peace movement in America.

Judge Herman told their lawyers he would give them 60 days to file motions.

"I will set a trial date later," he said.

Witness Claims Linda Asked Her To Kill

LOS ANGELES (AP) - The state's star witness at the Sharon Tate murder trial once asked her to "go out and do some killings," a loyal member of Charles Manson's hippie style family testified Monday.

"Catherine 'Gypsy' " Share, 28, indicated that the invitation was made a few days before the August 1969 slayings of the actress and six others.

The star witness was Linda Kasabian, a onetime family member granted immunity from prosecution for her account of the killings. Mrs. Kasabian has said that she thought robbery was the only goal when family members headed out the night of the slayings.

Miss Share, testifying for the defense at the penalty phase of the trial of Manson and three women followers, was cut off after her remark about being invited to do the killings. The judge called attorneys to the bench to discuss the line of questioning by Manson's attorney, Irving Kanarek.

Miss Share said the remark was made at the clan's ranch commune, with herself, Mrs. Kasabian and defendant Leslie Van Houten, 21, present.

"They were talking about Bobby getting arrest and how it wasn't his fault...and how they wanted to get Bobby out of jail because they had put him there," she said.

Bobby is Robert Beausoleil, who since has been convicted of murdering Malibu musician Gary Hinman. Witnesses have testified that Miss Van Houten was in love with Beausoleil in 1969 and that Mrs. Kasabian once was pregnant by him.

An early prosecution theory in the case was that the Tate slayings were to divert suspicion from Beausoleil in the Hinman case, as they were carried out in similar style, with bloody scrawlings on walls.

Consumers Will Spend More, Save Less

WASHINGTON (AP) - Many government and private economists believe consumers will spend more and save less this year. But some are skeptical and say President Nixon's economic goals will be in jeopardy if a high savings rate continues.

Americans in 1970 saved more than 7 per cent of their disposable personal income, exceptionally high by historical standards, as inflation, unemployment and sluggishness plagued the economy.

I think the savings rate is going to come down," said Dr. Harold C. Passer, Assistant Secretary for Ecomme Affairs in the Commerce Department. "I think it will be heading in the direction of 6 per cent by the end of the year."

For all of 1971, he said, the savings rate should average a little above 6 per cent compared with the 1970 average of 7.3 per cent.

With the economy expanding and business getting better, many economists say consumers should be using up their huge supply of savings at a faster clip.

If consumers should, loosen up, it will make Nixon's goal of economic recovery easier and help him reach the objective of a $1,065 trillion Gross National Product this year.

But, economists say, the prospect of heavier consumer spending is by no means certain. They say the savings rate is affected by many changing and hard to measure factors, such as warfare in Indochina and the Mideast, and the mood of the country.

"A high savings rate reflects inflation, rather low consumer confidence that is determined by such things as international events and high unemployment" Passer said. "I think we'll see some improvement on some of them."

In 1969, the savings rate was 6 per cent. It climbed steadily in 1970 , in one three month period reached 7.6.

"The main point," said one private economist, is that it is fairly clear that in order to come anywhere close to achieving the over all economic forecast in the economic report, there will have to be a dramatic fall in savings in 1971."

'Kitty Hawk' Continues Home, Astronauts Clean Up Craft

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) - Apollo 14 astronauts packed away their moon treasure Monday and tidied up the spacecraft with a vacuum cleaner as they prepared for splashdown in the South Pacific Tuesday.

Alan B. Shepard Jr., Edgar D. Mitchell and Stuart A. Roosa worked much of the day stowing the 108 pounds of rock gathered during their lunar adventure and trimming their command ship.

Newsmen submitted questions to Mission Control for relay to the astronauts for a televised news conference Monday night.

The astronauts also tied down an 80 pound docking mechanism they are returning for engineering analysis. The apparatus failed five times shortly after launch Jan. 31 and experts on the ground are anxious to find out why.

Following instructions from Mission Control, the spacemen secured the docking probe in a lower equipment bay of their craft.

"When it came to the point about all the rope tying, I was glad I'm flying with two sailors," said Roosa, an Air Force major. Shepard is a Navy captain, and Mitchell a Navy commander.

The astronauts make their scorching reentry Tuesday into the earth's atmosphere and splash down at 4:04 p.m. EST in the South Pacific. They took star sightings to tune up their navigation and used the vacuum cleaners on board to remove any moon dust floating in their craft.

Mission Control awakened the crew from a 10 hour rest period and Mitchell, the first one up, said he had trouble rousing his crewmates.

"There's some grumbling going on over here about getting up," he said, "but I think they'll be around in a minute."

Capsule communicator Fred Haise reported to the crew that at the astronauts' homes the temperature dropped to freezing during the night, a rare event in Houston.

"Man," said Mitchell, "have you moved Houston to the North Pole already?"

The spacecraft had left the moon Saturday and started a long climb up a gravity hill toward the earth, 238,000 miles away, its speed slowly dropping to a low of 2,260 miles per hour.

Civil Rights Struggle Continues With Changes

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) - "There is a different feeling when you go into these places now," said John Lewis. "You don't think about what might happen to you - if you're killed. That time has passed. Now there are other concerns."

The words came slowly and quietly from Lewis as he reflected on the violent early years of the civil rights struggle in the South.

Lewis, in faded, sweatstained dungarees and work shirt, was a familiar figure during the period as the national chairman of the activist Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee. Succeeded by the more militant Stokely Carmichael in the spring of 1966, he faded into civil rights oriented foundation work in New York. The mustached Lewis, a figure on the national scene during the '60s, is now a largely deskbound executive who heads the Atlanta based Voter Education Project.

"I'm pursuing the same goals now, but differently," said Lewis. "It took the other and now it takes this. When I was in Mississippi during the summer project of '64, about 23,000 black people were registered to vote. That figure is now about 286,000 and black people are holding office."

The 31 year old graduate of Fisk University, a native of Troy, Ala., took part in the first test sit ins in 1959 in Nashville, Tenn., and a few months later at Greensboro, N.C. He was at the meeting in Raleigh, N.C., in April 1960 when SNCC was established as the result of a suggestion from the late Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

King envisioned SNCC serving his own Southern Christian Leadership Conference as a youth corps - but the activists of SNCC, Lewis among them, swiftly struck out on their own, moving guerrilla like through the Southern countryside.

Lewis was also on the first "Freedom Rides" in the spring of 1961. He was beaten by a white mob in Montgomery, Ala., during one of them, and was saved when a white official stood over him with a pistol and warned his attackers away. His face was mangled, bruised, and he suffered a concussion.

In March 1965 he was among more than a score of persons bloodied by highway patrolmen trying to halt the Selma to Montgomery march. He spent three days in a Selma hospital.

There were more big campaigns and Lewis was at the head of them. But the SNCC split on tactics and Lewis, always a scholarly, introspective man, was ousted by supporters of Stokely Carmichael, who felt that the nonviolent tactics of Lewis were no longer viable.

Lewis left the staff a few weeks later.

Today, says Lewis, SNCC exists only on paper and in the memory of those who worked within it. Some of its leaders have turned to teaching, others have lost touch with Lewis and the others.

Carmichael now lives in Africa.

Placement Office Services Available To All

By JANET PEARLMAN
Staff Reporter

This will be the first in a series of articles sponsored by the Student Senate Services Committee on the Placement Office on campus. What services can it provide for you? It has counseling services. Here, undergraduates as early as their freshman year can go to the Placement Office to help them decide on a career and a program of study for that career. Once registered there in your senior year it helps plan job compaigns, i.e. finding an opportunity to perform in the career you have selected. It refers registrants to part-time, summer and full-time employment jobs. It serves as a reference and credentials source for interested employers. How does it do this?

Its two principal tools are the career library and the counselors available. The career library contains general career information and specific employers who are seeking help and what kind of employees they are seeking. There is information of graduate schools here and even on the mechanics of job-hunting itself. The Placement Office is there to help all students inquire into careers and find jobs.

As for members of the senior class, if you have not registered in the Placement Office please do so as soon as possible for your own good. Interested employers will go here for your credentials and if you are not registered you may lose many important opportunities. Employers are coming on campus to interview students as well. Sign up for an appointment at the Placement Office.

For all those who are wondering what all your courses can add up to, in terms of a future career, why not go talk to somebody who knows and is waiting to help you? Placement Office, Room 239 Whitmore.

Lettuce-Lovers Unite To Help Strikers

The Committee on Poverty has formed another committee dedicated to seeing that only union lettuce is served in University Dining Halls and restaurants.

Led by Alwyn Schmitt, the group claims its first priority is to check out whether or not union lettuce is being served. They are planning a confrontation with the Food Services people about this.

If non-union lettuce is being served, they say they will take the matter before the Student Senate.

Anyone wishing to join with the Committee on Lettuce is invited to the organizational meeting tonight at 8:30 in 801 Campus Center.

American University Women To Meet

A meeting of the American Association of University Women, Conn. Valley Branch, will be held tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. at the First Congregational Church, Amherst, to discuss the topic: Day Care: A Key To Managing A Family And A Career Too.

The meeting will center specifically on the problems of setting up a day care center on a university campus. There will be a panel discussion followed by a question and answer period. The panelists are requested to make a ten minute presentation of their chosen topics in order to allow time for questions.

The panelists will include Dr. David Day, Prof. of Early Childhood Education, School of Ed., UMass., Amherst; Dr. Evelyn G. Pitcher, Prof and Chairman of the Eliot-Pearson Dept. of Child Study, Tufts U.; Mr. Terence Dumas, Lecturer on Human Development, UMass, and Miss Susan Widland, spokesman for the student proposal to set up a day care center at UMass.

Also participating, in the capacity of resource persons, are Dean Joseph Sol Marcus, Administrative Asst. to the Chancellor, Mr. Felipe Consuegra, Chairman of the Graduate Student Senate Day Care Comm., UMass, and Mrs. Florita Mortlock, former president of the Conn. Valley branch of the A.A.U.W. and area state representative, who will act as moderator.

The meeting will be chaired by Mrs. Erma DeBoer, branch president.

A DYLAN MASTERPIECE.

"It came on the radio in the late afternoon and from the first note it was right. Bob Dylan bringing it all back home again.

"Then 'New Morning' [title song] came on. Like an early mist. So clean, so sweet. 'This must be the day that all my dreams come true.' What a love song! What a message to all of us blinded as we are by paranoia, grimly trying to see through the murk and the smoke and the blood. 'So happy just to be alive underneath the sky of blue . . .'

"God it's beautiful . . . it is the most reassuring thing that has happened this year of the bombings."

—Ralph J. Gleason, Rolling Stone

"Put simply, 'New Morning' is a superb album. . . . If poetry can be a story that must be sent by telegraph, then this is certainly one of Dylan's foremost achievements as a poet. Words, music, singing, piano work, all of the highest order.

"It seems almost superfluous to say that this is one of the best albums of the year, one of Dylan's best albums, perhaps his best. In good conscience, all I can really say is get it yourself and prepare to boogie."

—Ed Ward, Rolling Stone

"Economic Report? I Thought He Was Talking About The War"

Mark Silverman

The Nation Of Apollo

Because Norman Mailer wrote a book about it, the Apollo program has raced beyond its original bounds of scientific nationalism and has firmly entrenched itself as a part of the continously growing American folk culture. So much part of the national spirit, it can now matter of factly touch upon the smallest detail of Americana as it moves along; and this attention it pays to the hum-drum nuances of American thought and culture has become the most endearing aspect of Apollo's citizenship.

This ability to concern itself with the everyday and still remain noble was displayed again Sunday, as Alan Shepard and Ed Mitchell took a leasurely stroll across the surface of the moon. It was, afterall, a weekend afternoon, and Shepard was not about to go without his round of golf. So he snuck away from the office, put down his sachel of rocks, and took out his six iron. After a couple of practice swings, he exploded from a sand trap and sent the ball into some distant crater. He was immediately hailed by the television networks, who even managed a slo-motion replay of his swing.

It is this touching upon the fabric of American society that makes the astronauts so endearing. It is Shepard's golf swing, Frank Borman's evening readings from the Bible, Wally Shirra's comedy routing and Neil Armstrong's embarrasingly humble sentence fragments that makes the nation love its spacemen.

Human, loving, God-fearing Americans ride off into space, no different from the millions who watch them on television, they are not the superhero's of another nation. No, these Astronauts are the same as the rest of us--with the same hopes, fears and notions of reality that we all share.

And as they sped earthward the other day, after rekindling that fire on the moon, they spoke on another of the nation's pet topics, discussing in their spaceship the same thing which is bantered back and forth in livingrooms across our land. They spoke of the War in Vietnam and of how they hoped it would end soon. Perhaps not as dramatic as the golf swing or the earlier troubles with their magnitomiter (to which John Chancellor commented "maybe they should just kick the thing"), this discussion brought the spacemen right into the hearts of all Americans.

These great and noble fellow citizens, millions of miles in space, want the War in Vietnam to end. How noble, how beautiful, how perfectly American. Here again, the astronauts have proven their knowledge of the American spirit, their feel for the American conscience and their instinct for the American talent of saying the right thing at the right time.

But these men, like our President, are Americans, and perhaps we should now expect this exacting perfection from them. For, just a few hours after the astronauts called for an end to the War, the President acted in honest and informed good faith by not issuing a statement as South Vietnamese troops invaded Laos.

Our President felt it in good taste not to comment on an extention of the war into yet another IndoChina country, obviously not wanting to rile up the ugly American temper which is so embarrasingly misdirected whenever it does surface.

So, the military will cautiously slip deeper and deeper into Laos, just like, a year ago, it slipped deeper and deeper into Cambodia. First the helicopters to support the Vietnamese, then the planes to support the helicopters and, finally but assuredly, the ground troops for, say 30 days, to clean out those festered enemy bases. Another year another country.

But this should not really concern anyone of us. For, after all, the military are Americans too, and they know what is acceptable in our all-pervasive mythology of ourselves.

For we are the nation of Apollo and, our folksyness aside, we are the leaders on earth as well as in space. Perhaps we should just accept supreme manifest destiny our enevitable mission and dedicate that same Apollo effort to wiping every gook off the face of the Earth.

Sing It Again, Sammy!

Town and University officials have indicated that there is a great deal of confusion concerning the applicable residency laws of Massachusetts, the University and the town. The reason why everyone refers you elsewhere for answers to the question is that no one knows the answer or, at least, no one agrees with whatever sage or seer does.

To clarify the issue, "residence" means "domicile"-sometimes. It is equally clear the "domicile" means "residence"-less often. Against this solid framework consider the following proposition:

Domicile is that singular geographical unique identity that every mortal always has with a fixed point in earthly space. Residence customarily means that place where your head (not some other part of your anatome - unless your brains are located there) rests at night. Usually that means "last night", but may mean "tonight", and, if neither of those serve, try "most nights" or "most nights, most recently and again soon."

If you have "residence" clear, let's look at "domicile." "Domicile" is sometimes called your "permanent residence", your "legal residence" and even your "voting residence." As a matter of legal fact, it is and it isn't, depending.....About the safest way to use the concept of domicile is that at birth its the same as both your Mommy and Daddy. Up until a few years ago they both had the same one, but today, even they may be different even though they are married and living together. Assuming you don't have that hassle, you can start the problem. All anybody knows about domicile is how to get rid of one, its a lot harder to acquire a new one and remember, you always have one. To get rid of a domicile you must first leave it. Since you haven't legally left it until you get to the new one, or almost, you must really leave it a great deal-you must not intend to return to it - at least not to live at it (figure that out). Then you have to get to the new domicile and intend to stay there. But you don't have to intend to stay there forever. Some people hold that you have to intend to leave and actually leave your old domicile, intend to have a new domicile in a real place and you must arrive at it-or at least make a darn good try at it. Since you seem to be required to arrive at the new domicile in fact, in order to keep the concept functional you can be a Phillip Nolan, without a country, and yet have failed to lose your previous domicile.

I hope the foregoing answers all questions anyone has about the problem we have in answering your questions regarding residence and domicile. The straight answer in every case depends upon the reason you are asking the question and the circumstances pertinent to that issue. In the face of all this complexity, try these easy rules:

1. Residence - where you are staying right now unless you are accepted as a guest or visitor. You don't have to have a residence.

2. Legal Residence - where your family lives and where you regularly "go home" to until you are old enough to vote or are emancipated, orphaned, disowned, or, I suppose, a fugitive. It is also where you vote (but see below), register you car, pay for you insurance, register for the draft, get inducted from, get a passport at or from, get born, die and do lots of other things. You are entitled to have a functionally infinite amount of "legal residences" but they are all inextricably bound to a particular reason for having it.

3. Voting Residence - this is easy - its where a voting Registrar says you live. Any test employed does not depend, in Massachusetts, on any statutory formula except, wherever it is that you have it you must have had it for six months prior to the election in which you intend to vote, or thirty days for federal elections. You don't necessarily have one of these if you are in Amherst. You might in Holyoke, Cambridge, or Springfield, but not in Worcester either.

4. Tuition Residence - Massachusetts seems to feel that this is the place from which you apply to go to the University. If its in Massachusetts you are called a "resident". If you apply from outside the state, you are called a "nonresident" nothing you do seems to be able to make you a "resident" short of waiting at least four years. In Nebraska this was held an unconstitutional prohibition (Collegian 1/22/71) at least if you buy a house, pay a lot of taxes and vote.

5. Permanent Residence - a combination of legal, voting and, sometimes, tuition residence and you appear to have an infinite number of possibilities.

6. Intent - most of the confusion seems to revolve around the idea that for any given purpose youare only supposed to have one of whatever it is and the person judging whether or where you have it or not uses different evidence to determine the answer all of which turns on the question of: "For this purpose where do you intend to be found?" or something like that. Incidentally, of all the evidence and tests that I am familiar with there is only one that is consistently and systematically avoided - they never ask you.

Eldorado?

(Reprinted Holyoke Transcript 2/8/71)

The potential power of the youth vote is vividly demonstrated in the town of Amherst where the vast majority of the approximately 20,000 students are eligible to vote. This could well mean the town's regular 5,000 voting populace would be swamped in a local election.

Should the young men and women decide to register in Amherst rather than their home localitites, and under current law it seems they can do so legally, we would have the first youth-run, organized community in the nation. What they might do with their power boggles the imagination, and would most certainly make for interesting observation. Local legalization of marijuana? Abolition of the town's police force? Truth in politics?

There is also the pesky possibility that the sudden rise in voting population would mean the addition of more state representatives and senators. And youthful members of the Legislature might not be that appealing to the politics-as-usual boys in Boston.

Negative legislation has already been filed to the effect that college students who live on campus could not be registered in the college community. This might resolve the matter, but it is also possible the courts might think otherwise, and thus the spectre still haunts the political establishment in areas with a high density of college students.

Life Or Death

To the editor:

You're taking a course in History? In Thermal Dynamics? Don't just take it? Witness it. It's 100 miles from Amherst, in New Haven. History and Thermal Dynamics. The state is trying to kill Erica Huggins and Bobby Seal. The state is trying to cool out the voices of dissent. These are Black Panther voices, so the threat is death.

You can go any day of the week and see it. Be there. It is frightening, but it's real. It is alive and breathing. Laotians, Vietnamese and Cambodians are exploding and bleeding 10,000 miles away on television. You can only guess about the lies you are told. The state is trying Bobby and Erica, to kill them, 100 miles from here and you can go down and see for yourself. For yourself you've to go down, , if you are to understand. Be a witness, be alive, be there. Or stay caged in your seat of ignorance.

The Courthouse, in New Haven, is off the green. It is a white building decorated by a facade of pseudo-Roman paste-on authority marble. In front of it stand archaistic cut stone pillars, made to look as if they supported the structure, but which in fact ate disconnected from the structure and standing only to support themselves.

If you get there around 9:00 they will let you in to stand in line for the 32 public seats in Court 15. (That's right Court 15. It looks more Roman, more ancient and legitimate, like the Roman numerals on the clocks that don't work in the building.) In Court 15 they are still choosing the jury. Erica and Bobby are there. Charles Gary and Catherine Roraback their lawyers are there. Jury selection is the state's attempt to make the execution look fair and legal. It isn't even legal. The Jury is the state's weapon and only people's witness can loosen the state's authority over it.

You stand in line until 10:00 when they open the doors. Before you can go into the room, you have to be searched. They have women to search the women, and men to search the men: official non-sex. They pat you down and try your body, looking for Jonathan Jackson's gun, looking for George Jackson's spirit, looking to put you in your impersonal place.

The people sit in the back of the court. The judge sits in the front. In the center of the room at a large table sit Charles, Bobby, Erica and Catherine. At another table, behind them is Markel, the state's prosecutor. All around sit court functionaries. They only people who talk to each other, or touch each other are the ones at the defense table and the ones in the back of the room. Everyone else looks objectively on, maintaining official postures.

The state is trying to kill Bobby and Erica. They are trying them, to kill them. They are trying them for being BAD NIGGERS, for getting out of line. You come see. You come look at the state's line. I want you to come down and see your state on trial. Your state against your sister and brother. It is you. True. It is US on trial: life or death.

CEQ-Where Are You?

To the Editor:

Rumor has it that youth in general and college students in particular have a deep set concern for environmental quality. UMass students have something going for them. They are fortunate enough to have a vehicle through which they can express their concern--the Coalition for Environmental Quality.

Now let us consider just what CEQ has going for it. It has a handful of interested and dedicated people, stimulating lecture programs, and alas, limited finances. Also, unfortunately, CEQ has received literally no response from UMass students, which has inevitably resulted in a lack of manpower to support CEQ inspired projects.

If the students are so concerned about their environment, where are they? Are they so intense about their studies that they forget about the crisis going on all around us? Are they merely armchair activists who blame the establishment for our environmental troubles? CEQ has certainly gone to a lot of trouble to avail itself to the students, but the lack of response is disheartening and the apparent lack of interest is down right discouraging.

Where do your priorities lie? CEQ is there to aid student involvement in environmental projects. Get involved and get on down to the CEQ meeting tonight. Room CC 162 7:00.

They'll Do It Every Time

To the editor:

In regards to the present controversy over the refusal of the administration to re-hire Prof. Best, I would like you to know that the vast majority of the students who took Economics 125 feel that the course was relevant to them. There are very few professors that can match that claim. Damn it, you students are paying for your education and when you have a teacher who exposes the economic fumblings of our govt., don't let him be silenced for not publishing. This is just an excuse for firing someone who teaches! Even if you haven't taken Prof. Best's course help abolish the publishing requirement in support of a relevant education. If you let them fire him they'll do it to anyone that favors education.

To the editor:

In your editorial of February 2, 1971, entitled NEW TRUSTEE, you urge the Governor to replace Louis Lyons with a trustee who will provide the University with the "human leadership" with which "students can identify." This suggestion is commendable, and we can only hope the Governor will listen to it. It is, however, less commendable to assume, as the language of the editorial suggests the Collegian apparently does, that such leadership can come only from a man. Since humans are both male and female, it would be merely reasonable to urge the Governor to look for either a man or a woman who displays the qualities you describe. In fact, since approximately half the students at this University are female and since, at the present time, only three of the trustees are women, it would have been more just, and indeed more consistent with the stated objectives of the editorial, had the Collegian urged the Governor specifically to find a woman rather than a man to replace Mr. Lyons, however generally the editor may have intended the term "man" to be understood.

But When The Finger Points At You...

To the editor:

The recent drug busts in Southwest and the response for the "Southwest 11" represent only one thing; that the drug users and pushers of this campus are not martyrs, but merely poor losers.

It seems strange to me that those who break the law and blatently advertise their violation should seek sympathy, band-wagon protests or classifications of martydome for their stupidity. They are quite simply "sitting ducks" and those who protest in their behalf are in reality protesting for themselves, in fear that they might be the next "victims". In this situation, the police cannot be blamed. They are merely doing their jobs. The blame must remain with the violators.

The Southwest 11 are not martyrs. They are fighting for no cause and have accomplished nothing. In reality they are merely spoiled children. They choose to advertise their illegal acts, yet cry when they're caught. The Southwest 11 and their protestors are not victims of the establishment, but rather victims of their own lunacy.

The Great Strike

On April 7, 1971, Spiro Agnew, astride his White charger Hurtling Invective, led his elite corps of speech writers into Perth Amboy, New Jersey, to put down the boycott against local barbershops.

On April 8, 1971, the Great Strike began.

At UMass, the first action was a student call for all "Passing" grades. Unlike the 1970 Strike, the Administration refused to negotiate, and called for total class attendance. This is when the fighting began.

The first incident was the throwing of a water balloon from a high-rise in Southwest. It was widely reported to have splashed a small amount of water on a UMass co-ed. This action was denounced by members of the State Legislature as "vile barbarism", "savage radicalism", and "rampant anarchy". Several represenatives called for an immediate assault on the Amherst campus "to put down the rebellion". Soon Spiro Agnew supporters and readers of the Boston newspaper accounts of the incident crowded the streets of the state capital, demanding all-out war on the Amherst campus. Several hardhats actually planned to hijack a planeload of nuclear bombs for the assault on UMass, but satisfied themselves with an assault on a UMass-Boston co-ed.

UMass students countered by mobilizing campus defenses. The School of Education and "F" Lot were established as remote "Early Warning" outposts. Dormitory residents were organized into fighting units. Cars were converted to tanks, armored with the toughest substance known to man--Dining Commons steaks.

At this point, "conservative" elements on campus staged their "counterrevolution". Whitmore provided the ideal fort for this group, having been patterned after a Medieval castle, situated atop a hill, and being generally inaccessable to students. The drawbridge from the direction of Herter Hall was destroyed to prevent invasion or desertion.

At this point, the danger of attack from outside the campus was minimized, as the State Legislature decided its business was too important to be disrupted. Namely, another pay raise for themselves.

But battle lines were already drawn on campus. Sides were taken, buildings were seized, and battles were fought. Students in the Physics Department immediately set about creating a 500-megaton atomic bomb for use against the enemy. The Chemistry Department began work on a combination nerve gas/armor-piercing acid. The Botany Department contributed booby traps consisting of man-eating plants. There was some question of whose side these students were on, but the question was irrelevant after the creation of the Ultimate Weapon. This was called the "Dining Commons breakfast". The mere sight of this caused severe abdominal pains in the victim, tearing eyes, and eventually, total paralysis. The horror generated by the introduction of this weapon led to a unanimously-approved total ban on weapons research by the warring UMass factions.

By this time, the English Department had taken over Mahar auditorium, and turned it over to the "Left" students. This was set up as a siege tower for use against Whitmore, being already designed in the form of a gun turret.

NOTES ON HUMANITARIAN SIDE OF THE STRIKE:

Despite the intensity of the fighting, agreements were reached and kept. The Cage was declared a demilitarized zone, having already been the scene of destructive fighting in the Fall, 1970 Concert Wars. And the first warm days brought an uneasy truce to Southwest. In this case, the residents of JFK tower proposed the truce, to allow sunbathing on the roof of Thoreau.

The last major engagement of the Strike was the Dining Commons Siege. Several regiments, spearheaded by the First Gorman, surrounded the "Copper Kettle" in Central area, and allowed no food to enter. There was some question as to the strategic value of this building, but it was selected as a target after this group failed an attempt to scale the Cliffs of Orchard Hill.

In any case, those inside the Dining Commons were soon forced to surrender. There are conflicting reports on the cause of this. Some say those inside were starved into submission because no edible food was kept inside, some talk of an epidemic of Dining Commons Jello. The most reliable sources report that a broken tape player kept repeating the same demoralizing music that students had been subjected to while eating there. In any case, leadership of those inside was virtually nonexistent, since all those in Authority were out to lunch the attack was launched.

The Strike ended with the first major injury. One student reported to the Infirmary early in the Strike, with a small cut on his right index finger. After two weeks spend in the waiting room of the Infirmary, and another three days of intensive care, the student emerged. The sight of this empty shell of a former human staggering about campus on his crutches finally broke the spirit of the student fighters. An armistice was immediately signed, and most students left campus. Soon, only roving bands of looters disturbed the tranquility of the Amherst campus, along with sporadic panty raiders. Even these were gone by the time Boston Legislators chose their fighting forces, and 10,000 sex-crazed Boy Scouts descended on the UMass campus.

In the end, of course, UMass was closed down by the Massachusetts Legislature, and converted to other uses. There was talk of a conversion to a prison farm, but this was universally denounced as inhuman, and the idea had to be abandoned. Legislators agreed that the buildings were unfit to house criminals.

Finally, the overall setup of the UMass campus suggested an answer, and the one-proud UMass campus was converted to a combination plastics factory and state dump.

Pandora's Milk Carton

Once upon some time, way back when men were men and women were women, there lived in the ivy-colored halls of sexual degeneracy a round up-stooping lass named Pandora. She was big for her age, but she still resembled in physical appearance a skinny underfed Camel filter; however, not to be deterred by anything short of the plague, (or a reasonable facsimile thereof) Pandora, wringing her hands in unbridled fecundity, she skulked up behind Iconoclastes, her arch-enemy and the local travel agent and, drooling with a perverse lustful dullness in her eyes, she.....

Draft Counselor's Corner

Think CO-You May Qualify

DRAFT COUNSELOR'S CORNER
By GILBERT J. SALK

If you are opposed to the war against Vietnam, or opposed to the draft, or opposed to killing, or opposed to war in general, you should consider the possibility that you may qualify for classification as Conscientious Objector. This is especially true if you have no other legal alternative to serving in the armed forces, but should be considered even if you qualify for some other deferment.

The only way to tell for sure that you are or are not a CO is to consult a qualified draft counselor. It is not true that you must be a pacifist, a Quaker, a regular church-goer, or sure that you would not have fought in World War II to be a Conscientious Objector. So don't simply assume that you are not a CO and stop thinking about it. Talk to a draft counselor. Excellent advice may be obtained from Mrs. Frances Crowe of Northampton, one of the best counselors in New England. Her phone number is 584-8975. Or you can visit Draft Counseling Services on this campus in 418E on the second floor of the Student Union. Or stop in at the group CO counseling sessions in 805 CC on Monday and Thursday afternoons.

I feel that it is important for a Conscientious Objector to seek recognition of his status even if he is entitled to other deferments. The other deferments may be obtained at a later date, and there are both personal and political points to be made by seeking a I-O.

The political points are simple. First, you are declaring yourself and making a statement about your personal beliefs. You are directly confronting the members of your local board with moral questions about what they are doing. (The effectiveness of this illustrated by the fact that draft board member resignations have increased over the past two or three years in direct proportion to the increase in CO applications. It seems obvious that these men are being faced with moral decisions which they had not previously considered. This puts a great deal of internal pressure on the system.)

Each request for CO status legitimizes the position in the eyes of the board. Four years ago a Conscientious Objector was a freak--a board dealt with only a handful each year. Now, boards must process several applications at each monthly meeting. This has helped move the board to view the CO as the genuine classification it is. Since a major determining factor for a I-O is sincerity, a request for a I-O from somebody who already has some other "out" carries a great deal of weight with board members. Thus, if you are out of the draft because of a high lottery number but request a I-O anyway, it may make it easier for the guy behind you, who has no other outs at all, to get recognition as a CO.

The final political plus is that having received a I-O, you almost automatically become a missionary. Too many people never try for a I-O because they think it's impossible to get. When you get into a rap about the draft and mention that you have a I-O, it will show others that it is possible to obtain and maybe encourage them to seek it themselves, thus putting more pressure on the draft and starting a whole new cycle.

The personal plusses may be even more important. For most people, it requires a great deal of introspective thought to answer the questions on the CO form. This usually means that for the first time you are really considering what your values are, where you got them, how they affect you, and where they are leading you. It's a trip into self-understandin. Almost everyone I've seen go through the CO process comes out with greater self-awareness and confidence, because he has forced himself to question who he is, where he's going, and why, and for the first time has some semi-solid answers for himself.

So think about it. It takes time and effort, and can be one of the most frustrating experiences you've ever had. But the advantages, even if I am guilty of romanticizing them a bit, are real. Can you dig it? Peace.

Open Theater Next Week

No they are not playing Chess, rather THE OPEN THEATER perform a scene from TERMINAL, one of the plays they will perform while in residence on campus next week. Along with performances in Bowker, the troupe will take part in workshops, seminars, and master classes throughout the week.

The Open Theatre Ensemble, co-directed by Joseph Chaikin and Roberta Sklar, will be in-residence at the Amherst campus of the UMass Feb. 16-20 under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council.

The Open Theatre is recognized as one of the country's most exciting off-off Broadway ensembles, and its productions of such works as "Terminal" and "Serpent" have met with public and critical acclaim.

During its five-day visit to the University, the Ensemble will perform three 8 p.m. programs in Bowker Auditorium. Thursday and Saturday, Feb. 18 and 20, the Ensemble will perform "Terminal" and on Friday, Feb. 19, there will be an open rehearsal of a nameless new work.

Mel Gussow, writing in The New York Times, has characterized "Terminal" as "stunning horror". In Mr. Gussow's words: "'Terminal' deals with appearance and reality, exteriors and interiors of life and death, all those generalities that most so-called serious theatre claims to concern itself with, and seldom does, except superficially. Under Chaikin's direction, the Open Theatre has created a horrifying, unnerving and moving artistic experience."

An important part of the week-long residency by The Open Theatre Ensemble at the UMass will be its daily workshops, seminars and master classes which will be open without charge to those purchasing tickets to any of the evening performances. Full information on these sessions and the evening performances may be obtained by contacting the Fine Arts Council ticket office, 125 Herter Hall, telephone 545-0202.

Mr. Perahia is a protege of Rudolf Serkin, the great pianist, and has concertized frequently at the Marlboro Music Festival in Vermont. He is the winner of the coveted Kosciusko Chopin Prize. Mr. Perahia is scheduled to perform Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 25, K. 503. The Philharmonia's program will also include Haydn's Symphony No. 92 ("Oxford"); "Minotaur Suite" by contemporary, American composer, Elliot Carter and Igor Stravinsky's Concerto for String Orchestra.

Chronicles Reconsidered

Hell Ain't Half Bad

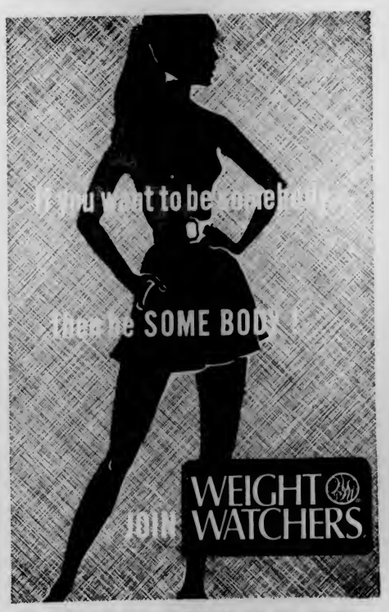
By JUDITH KATZ
Fine Arts Staff

The University of Massachusetts has been consistently treated to a series of substanceless plays during the one and one half years I have been here. There have, of course, been exceptions, among them Waiting For Godot, Danton's Death, and to a certain extent, The Clouds. It is for this reason that I feel Robert Rotenberg deserves a great deal of praise for attempting to do something as substantial as Michel Ghelderode's Chronicles Of Hell.

There is always the hazard in plays of this nature that audiences will not understand. Their answer to this is all too frequently boredom. There is also the hazard that, because the play is not light and jolly, and because there isn't a little song and dance routine, the audience member may feel that he shouldn't understand it, even if he is reasonably sure he does, and again become bored.

The Chronicles Of Hell, despite this fault, was a very pleasant change from meaningless drivel. It was theatre for art's sake, rather than purely for entertainment.

Now don't start getting all up in arms and calling me an intellectual snob. This is not true. I enjoy an evening of meaningless drivel as much as the next person. It is only that with a play like Waiting for Godot or The Chronicles of Hell I am asked to think. And at a place like the University of Massachusetts, this somehow presents itself as a novel and exciting experience.



Pinter Play At Smith

Harold Pinter's modern masterpiece, THE HOMECOMING, will be performed at Smith College at 8 p.m. on Feb. 12, 13, 14, 20 and 21 as the second play in the Theatre 14 Series.

THE HOMECOMING, written in 1965 and originally performed by the Royal Shakespeare Company in London, concerns a family of men in an old and slightly seedy house in North London. They are: Max, the aging but still aggressive patriarch; his younger ineffectual brother, Sam and two of Max's three sons - Lenny, a small time pimp, and Joey, who dreams of being a successful boxer.

Into this sinister yet comic atmosphere comes Max's oldest son Teddy and his wife Ruth who come back from America after a six year stay to visit the family. The play continues with the relationships becoming less and less subtle until the true nature of the family finally emerges.

Tickets for THE HOMECOMING are available at the Theatre Box Office, weekdays from noon until 5 p.m. Admission is $2.00, students $1.50, or by Superticket.

BBC Influence Felt On U.S. TV

NEW YORK (AP)-Since the inception of public television in this country in the early 1950's at least a quarter of the programming has had a distinctly British accent.

The British Broadcasting Corp. has provided a nucleus of programming first for National Educational Television, when it was the public television network, and now for the Public Broadcasting Service.

More significantly, BBC has provided a huge share of the programs and series which have had the greatest impact and drawn the biggest audiences to public television.

PTV's all time smash hit, "Sesame Street" is, of course, an American product. But outside of that and Julia Child, the TV cook, the only hits have been the BBC produced "Forsyte Saga," "Civilization" and the current "Masterpiece Theater."

Hartford Gunn, president of PBS, said, "The most obvious thing has been that BBC, representing one of the world's best broadcasting systems, has brought a substantial audience to public television.

"'Sesame Street' and Julia Child do as well or better, but BBC does provide a standard of excellence."

BBC has been a means by which American public television has obtained a first rate product at a low cost. But it also serves to emphasize the financial problems that continue to plague public television.

The entire PTV network programming budget is only about $20 million, or about what commercial television spends in prime time programming in two weeks.

Basil Thornton, director of the international division of NET, said, "Let's face it, we don't have the money to produce 25 dramas with American authors. We have to look elsewhere. BBC obviously isn't doing American drama, so it's the American authors who get short changed."

A protest was sparked in Hollywood when the Mobil Oil Co. announced in October that it would put up $490,000 for the 39 part "Masterpiece Theater."

The craft unions said it was unfair to spend the money on production in England at a time when Hollywood movie economy was depressed and so many craft members were out of work. The Motion Picture Pension Fund threatened to sell its 21,000 shares of Mobil stock.

But Mobil pointed out that it was not paying for new production, but was buying shows previously aired on BBC.

Skull-capped Student Returns To Class

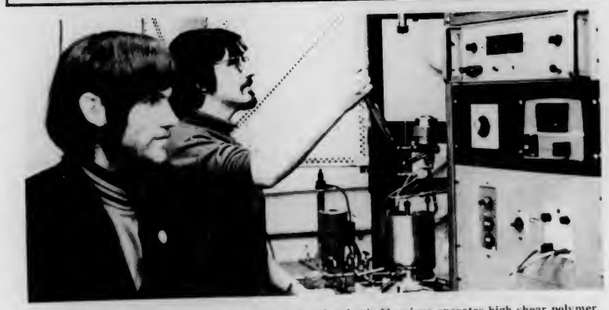
FALL RIVER, MASS (AP)-A 12-year-old student at Morton Junior High School, James Pepper, returned to classes Monday after a legal opinion said the principal could not interfere with the practice of wearing his Yarmulke.

Pepper, who is Jewish, was sent home last Wednesday by school Principal Manuis Shapiro, also a Jew, for wearing the yarmulke, a skull cap worn by some Jewish men.

Shapiro contended anyone entering a public building should remove his hat.

But a legal opinion filed Saturday in the office of the city corporation counsel ruled that school authorities had illegally suspended the youth because he was wearing the cap.

Virginia Beal Joins Faculty



The Nutrition and Food Department of the School of Home Economics has announced the appointment of Miss Virginia Beal to the Faculty effective with the Spring semester of 1971.

Miss Beal is a distinguished nutritionist in the area of infant and child nutrition and prior to her appointment here was assistant Clinical Professor of Pediatrics at the University of Colorado. She has acted as consultant in her field to Harvard University, the University of Oregon, Columbia University, and the National Institute of Health. She is a member of the American Association, as well as being a Fellow of the American Public Health Association.

Miss Beal has written innumerable articles and other publications and delivered several papers at International Meetings.

MISS VIRGINIA BEAL

David Manrique, left, jots down data while his father Louis Manrique operates high shear polymer research apparatus at the polymer science and engineering department. Father and son are UMass students, the father doing graduate work in polymer chemistry and the son taking undergraduate courses while still a senior at Amherst Regional High School.

Father, Son Team Up On Homework

The educational paths of Louise Manrique and his son David have intersected in an unusual way this year at UMass.

Both are students, the elder Manrique doing graduate work at the polymer science and engineering department and the younger taking undergraduate courses. He is enrolled as a special student through an arrangement by the University and Amherst Regional High School, where he is a senior.

"I came to UMass primarily because of its strength in my area-polymerscience," Louis Manrique explained. He is a polymer chemist on educational leave from the IBM company to work for a master's degree. His son will enter the University full-time next fall as a freshman.

Mr. Manrique's field is high shear viscometry--the measurement of behavior of polymers and similar materials when stressed in a parallel direction. The study has application in plastic manufacture and in the flow behavior of some liquids. David expects to major in theoretical physics. His other interest is the conservative political organization YAF--Young Americans for Freedom.

"We've got a pretty good arrangement," the elder Manrique commented. "When he has difficulties with chemistry I help him out and when I have difficulties in higher mathematics he helps me out."

The Manrique family--father, son, two daughters and Mrs. Manrique--live at the University's North Village married student housing area.

New Challenges Await Former UM Grid Greats

By MARK VOGLER
Staff Reporter

Former high school heroes love to sit and boast about their bone-crunching days on the grid iron. Those one step higher, who made it in the collegiate ranks, fight nostalgia by reminiscing the good old Saturday afternoons.

Although the weekend game is temporarily gone for former UMass greats Bob Pena, Nick McGarry, and Pierre Marchando, there's no time for talk. For with two being selected in the annual National Football League draft, and the later in the shuffle as a free agent, a newer challenge has beckoned which could spur them on to greater heights -- the challenge of professional football. So move over Greg Landry and Milt Morin. You may have company shortly.

Bob Pena

To evaluate the factors which enabled All Yankee Conference guard Bob Pena to be drafted by the Cleveland Browns in the fourth round, it might be wise to take a glance at the numerous honors that showered him this past season. Besides being voted a front line berth in the conference on offense, the hard-nosed performer received the following recognition: UPI's All New England (first team), Mr. Z's ALL NE (first team), Kodak All-America (second team), All East (team not confirmed as yet), AP's ALL NE (third team), AP's All-America for small colleges (honorable mention), varsity M award winner for the season on offense, and Allan Pond award recipient-emblematic of the outstanding player on the UMass squad.

A graduate of Falmouth High (Mass.) where he lettered in football and basketball, Pena went on to build a name for himself on the grid scene of Dean Junior College. A brilliant defensive end, the team captain was lauded by his mates two successive campaigns as the club's MVP. He was the only player in the east to be selected to the All-America Junior College Team for both seasons.

Upon transferring to UMass, he was converted to offensive guard and complimented the shift in his first year by nailing down second team All YanCon honors, UPI's All NE (first team), All East (second team), Mr. Z's All NE (second team), and AP's All NE (third team).

In view of his reactions to being drafted and his intentions of giving it another try on the turf, Pena commented:

"I was expecting to be drafted, but I honestly didn't think I'd go in the fourth round. I was quite pleased with my selection. I anticipate anybody that gets drafted has the potential to play. It's probably the top percentage of all college players that are in the professional ranks right now."

Nick McGarry

"Football has been a full time thing for me. Next to the family and the very few that are close to me, football is the number one thing in my life. It's been my life time goal to play in the pros. I've surrounded this idea as a childhood dream. My next ambition is to start for the Cleveland Browns next year on opening day."

"I expect a tremendous challenge, but a challenge that I think I can meet. Otherwise I wouldn't have dedicated my whole life to a game."

Pena expressed gratitude to the entire coaching staff which gave him adequate assistance and encouragement along the way. "I hold Coach Fusia in high esteem. My relationship with him has been nothing but rewarding and I consider him head and shoulders over any man I've met in football."

The Redman team had high hopes for Pierre Marchando, whose service on the opposite side of the interior line would have supplemented the power of Pena nicely. But when it was discovered last spring that he had not projected a 1.6 cum in his freshman year, he was slapped with the biggest letdown in his life and was proclaimed ineligible. The sad point about it is that Marchando has since been progressing normally at the university and never knew beforehand that such a rule even existed.

Convinced that he couldn't be inactivated for a year if he were to play pro ball, Marchando joined the Hartford Knights of the Atlantic COoast Football League where he emerged as one of their toughest linemen.

He was under contract with the Knights at the time of the draft, so he was bypassed completely. However, opportunity knocked for him as a free agent. Two clubs currently negotiating terms with Marchando are the San Francisco 49'ers and the Boston Patriots.

As a four sportsman during his schoolboy days at Cambridge Latin, he accumulated seven letters.

Although deeply disappointed over not being able to play out his senior year for the Redmen, Marchando admits that he is at a bigger advantage having played with Hartford and being tabbed a free agent.

"I think my chances are pretty good. As far as going into a training camp is concerned, I think I'm a little ahead of the gang because of the Hartford experience where I was exposed to the pro offensive and defensive systems and I played against a better quality of player on the overall. This should give me a head start.

"I feel I have the physical attributes to make it. It also depends upon the team I choose to play for. This is an ace in the hole for myself. I get to select the team that I want to play for. So I'm going to shop around and find out which team needs the most help on its offensive line."

Pierre Marchando

After being posed the question of his desire to play for Boston, Marchando responded: "I'd really like to play for the Pats. It's definitely closer to home and my family. But that doesn't mean I'm going to shut down any other offers. I'm at the point now where football isn't that much fun anymore. I'm in it for the money now as well as the enjoyment of the game. It's a business now. Since it's going to be my living I must treat it as such."

Marchando made notable mention of thanks to Coach Fusia and his coaching staff, citing George Karras in particular. "Coach Harras developed me from a fullback who couldn't block into a pretty good offensive guard."

His status as the Boston Patriots' 15th round draft choice doesn't seem too impressing in itself. But considering the circumstances, Nick McGarry thinks it's all worth the while.

Cream of the crop as a YanCon pass receiver in his junior year, the first team selection proved to be an instrumental cog to Vic Fusia's 1969 championship machine. He was voted All New England by one poll.

But McGarry, like Marchando, fell victim to the axe on last spring's 1.6 eligibility ruling which dated way back to his freshman year. He too, is academically stable as far as grades go. Hence, he has been absent from the field for an entire season. The big question mark that must be dealt with is whether the lost time will inhibit his playing ability any.

An All-Stater in both football and basketball for his high school in Arlington, Virginia, he attended Columbia Prep school before coming to UMass.

"I think with Boston I have a fairly good shot, asserted McGarry. I have a better chance with them then with any other club, because their tight ends aren't that good in comparison to the rest of the league."

"Because of the year layoff, I'll

Ski Movie I Plays At Union

Fresh air, blue sky, and freedom are in the mountains. Skiing is fast becoming the nature lovers number one excape. Learn what skiing can offer you. Ski Movie I from Summit Films offers you the opportunity to escape and enjoy. Enjoy Ski Movie I on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Feb. 8, 9 and 10, and escape to the Student Union Ballroom at 7 p.m. and 9 p.m. for 90 minutes of the best footage from Summit Films of Denver, Colorado, plus a dune buggy movie.

It excerpts and expands sequences previously introduced in such award winning films as The Moebius Flip, The Great Ski Chase, Ski Racer, and Ski The Outer Limits. Ski Movie I is a potpourri of all the crazy happenings that didn't fit the sponsor's script, but most important of all, it includes miles of exciting current action that only Summit has viewed.

Ski Movie I is advanced. It dwells within the new limits to which today's skier has taken the sport. Greater speed, more aggressive mogul skiing, accelerated turns, jumps, flips and an attitude which treats ice cliffs and gigantic crevasses as if they were home slope bumps.

Ski Movie I is different. Summit has avoided the standard ski film structure. Many scenes show skiing feats never seen before that are tied together with an artistic arrangement of dazzling visuals which command the viewer's attention.

The pure beauty and excitement of Ski Movie I makes it excellent entertainment for everyone, skier and non-skier.

ONE MOEBIUS FLIP-Hermann Goellner, a wellknown ski aerial stuntist, performs his amazing Moebius Flip, a somersault combining a full 360-degree twist. More feats of this sort can be seen in The Number One Ski Film: Ski Movie I.

Pro Football Lures Redman Trio

be a bit rusty and it will take a little longer to get into the swing of things. But because Boston works out at UMass, I figure that I'll get a more decent looking over.

"Plus the fact that when I get into good shape and get out there, my attitude is such that I feel I can make it anyway. It is something that I want, something I've wanted for a long, long time. And now that I have the shot at it, I'm going to make the most of it."

Extending credit to his teammates and coaches, McGarry singled out Fusia and Bill Carty. "Coach Fusia was just great all the way through. I thank Bill Carty for having helped me with the different techniques of defensive end. He gave me a lot of confidence in myself, confidence that drove me to success."

Asked to size up the chances of either one or all going pro, former head football coach Vic Fusia commented:

"I can't size up their chances. But I think they're all possibles. Now for what makes a possible in the pros, the following factors are essential. One, ability is necessary. The pros wouldn't be thinking of them if they thought otherwise. Secondly is size, and for their particular positions, their size is almost perfect."

Then there is speed. I think that both Bob and Pierre have excellent speed for their position. In fact, both of 'em can run as fast as most fullbacks in our league.

For a receiver I like Nick's hands. His hands are as good as anyone who I've ever coached and that includes Milt Morin, Mike Ditka, Bill Carty, and Bobby Meers. And I don't slight any of 'em because they were all outstanding.

Finally the desire to excell, that self urgency to be good. All of them have been ideal in this respect. All three have been very coachable. They've been a credit to the university and it's been real nice in playing a small part in their football life."

For Pena, Marchando, and McGarry, their football futures are not automatic. They only have their feet half on the threshold of greener pastures. They'll have to prove themselves over again at the respective camps they head for. The trio plans to work out together before each splits his separate way.

Redmen Host BC In "The Game"

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

The day has finally arrived. Tonight the UMass basketball team hosts the Boston College Eagles at the Cage at 8 p.m. in what can only be termed a revenge match. The Redmen are 15-2 and the Chestnut Hill boys are 12-7.

It was just over a year ago that these same Eagles dropped the Redmen, 83-76, at BC in a game that UMass thought it should have won. The loss, possibly the low point of what turned out to be an outstanding season, served to seemingly recharge the Redmen as they went on to win ten consecutive games and end up as the New England champs.

Somehow though, the BC game is always a big one for UMass, regardless of the sport. The Eagles, being big recruiters and possibly the most well-known and respected team in New England, represent some sort of special challenge for UMass.

On top of all this, the Redmen have had little luck with the Eagles of late. UMass has not defeated Boston College in basketball since 1964 and the Eagles lead the overall series, 12-4. The Redmen simply don't seem to play their best ball against the Eagles.

Although only 12-7 on the year, don't let BC's record fool you. Among the opponents that the Eagles face are St. John's, LaSalle, Canisius (which beat Providence) and Davidson. Considering common opponents between the two clubs, BC has defeated Providence, UConn and Rhode Island and lost to Holy Cross by two and Fordham in overtime. The Redmen have defeated UConn, Rhody and Holy Cross while losing to Providence, by one, and Fordham. In this respect anyway, the game looks about even.

Any discussion of BC basketball has to center around captain Jim O'Brien. The All-American guard is one of the finest players in the country as well as the spark that makes the Eagles go. When O'Brien is on his game, which is most of the time, the Eagles are tough to beat. He is not only an excellent shooter and ball handler, he also set the Madison Square Garden Holiday Festival record for assists last year when he collected 16 in one game. O'Brien is the key to BC.

Joining him in the backcourt is Bob Smith, mainly considered a defensive specialist and ball handler. His main job is to set up O'Brien. Another strong guard for the Eagles is Rick Bolus, a 6'1 transfer from VMI who averaged 33 points per game there as a freshman.

Up front, the Eagles have Pete Schmid, 6'7, Frank Fitzgerald, 6'7, and Greg Sees, 6'5. Schmid netted 23 points against Fordham and can be tough off of the boards. Sees is a good shooter and Fitzgerald is effective inside. The Eagles have been hurt by the loss of Vin Costello who sustained a foot injury and is doubtful for the UMass game.

Also, the Eagles have a couple of other 6'7 men on the bench who can do the job. Their names are Dave Freitag and Tom Anstett, both members of last year's frosh unit. So the Eagles have some depth up front.

Coach Chuck Daly has molded these boys into a fine basketball team. Though not blessed with the height and overall talent that marked BC under Bob Cousy, Daly has none the less continued BC's winning ways in basketball.

The game shapes up just as every BC-UMass encounter does, close. There is just no way of knowing or predicting how the thing will turn out as the emotional factor is always so important in this battle. It should be a game worth watching.

For UMass, Coach Leaman will go with the same starting line up as he used against Vermont. That means that John Bentancourt and Mike Pagliara will start in the backcourt and Tom McLaughlin, Chris Coffin and Julius Erving will be up front. Leaman also speculated that Ken Mathias, still rounding into shape after his illness, will be in the game early and often.

So the game has arrived, a game which in some ways seems a season in itself. With both clubs looking towards an NIT bid, the game may be just that.

Remember...?
Doubting The Redmen

(Editor's Note: The following paragraph is reprinted from the student newspaper at Boston College, the "Boston College Heights." The writer of the article it came from is unknown, but it appeared on Monday, Nov. 30, 1970 and was a reaction by the writer to a story that appeared in the game program of the UMass-BC football tilt. That story was a preview of the Redman basketball season. The writer of the paragraph below seems to feel that UMass shouldn't bear the label of defending New England basketball champions, even though, yes even though, the Redmen were rated the number one team in N.E. last year by the United Press International (UPI) and presently, have in their possession the plaque that designates them as such. Nothing more need be said. It is recommended here that one read the paragraph and react to it as he may.)

Those of you who read the UMass game program must feel that our biggest score is yet to be settled with the Mass. Aggies. BC travels to Amherst for a game with the "Defending New England Champion" Redmen on February 9. That's quite a claim for a team that hasn't beaten BC since 1964. They ought to play a schedule of comparable toughness before making such self-proclamations. It'd be nice to see a large contingent of fans make the trip to UMass for that game to watch the Dalymen stick it to those bums, Erving and all.

The UMass varsity gymnasts suffered their first defeat of the season as they bowed to a powerful Penn State team, 164.30-155.25. Undefeated Penn lead by only .8 of a point after the first event, floor exercise, but the Nittany Lions continued to pile up their lead throughout the course of the meet.

Penn State was overpowering as they took first in every event and swept the top three places in two events, sidehorse and still rings. UMass could manage only three third and two second places. State also won the event total in every event but long horse vaulting, which the Redmen won by a mere .1 of a point.

Top honors for UMass went to Steve Cary who tied for second in both the longhorse and parallel bars events. Other outstanding performers for the Redmen were Jay Thomsen, who tied for second with Cary in vaulting, John Calabria, who placed third in floor exercise, Tony Vacca, who captured third in vaulting, and Scott Stover, who was third on the high bar. All-around Norm Vexler turned in a good performance as he scored 50.40 points in the all-around event to place second in that total.

In floor exercise, the Nittany Lions jumped to a 27.50-26.70 lead behind the performances Calabria, who took third for the Redmen, scored a 9.05. He was followed by Vacca's 8.85 and Berner's 8.80.

The next event, sidehorse, saw UMass collapse as the Nittany Lions outscored the Redmen, 27.65-24.25. Led by Avener's 9.40, Penn State swept the top three places. Vexler was high scorer for UMass with an 8.8.

The still rings event saw Penn State again sweep the top three places as they increased their lead, by outscoring UMass, 27.65-25.45. State's Mitchell won the event with a 9.40, followed by William's and Dunn, who scored 9.15 and 9.10 respectively. The score at intermission read: Penn State 82.80, UMass 76.40.

The Redmen opened up the second half of the meet by winning the event score for long horse, 27.35-27.25. Penn State's Kreust won the event with a score of 9.35, followed by Cary and Thomsen of UMass who tied for second at 9.15. Mitchell of Penn State and Vacca of UMass tied for third with scores of 9.05.

The next event, parallel bars, saw the Nittany Lions enjoy their best scores of the afternoon, as they again outscored the Redmen, 27.80-25.50. Dunn of State won the event with a 9.45, high score of the meet. Cary of UMass tied with Mitchell of Penn State for second with scores of 9.40 and 9.10 respectively. Third place went to Stover of UMass who had a 9.05. The event score was Penn State 26.45, UMass 26.00, bringing the final score of the meet to Penn State 164.30, UMass 155.25.

The following afternoon the Redmen travelled to the University of Pittsburg and barely came away with a 141.85-126.40 win. The Redmen did not meet Pitt with a full strength team, as evidenced by the fact that going into the last event, the Redmen were leading by a mere .2 of a point.

The Redmen were not psychologically up for this meet after having been beaten by Penn State. What should have been an easy win almost turned out to be a disastrous loss, a loss which they could ill afford, as they still have several tough opponents to meet.

Gymnasts Bow To Mighty Penn State

The UMass wrestling team continued to have problems with its middleweight wrestlers and it cost the Redmen dearly as they dropped a close 18-17 decision to Coast Guard on Saturday. The loss dropped the Redmen record to 5-3-1 on the season and they are still looking for their first win since before Christmas.

The final score gives every indication as to the closeness of the match. The lead see-sawed back and forth for the first four bouts and then Coast Guard forged ahead only to have the Redmen close fast and come within a hair of victory. For UMass, Dave Amato and Shelly Goldberg won two of the first three matches, but the Polar Bears countered with a pin and a decision to lead 8-6 going into the 150 lb. match. This has been a costly weight for UMass this season and once again, the form held up. The Redmen suffered a pin, their third pin in a row at this weight, and Coast Guard widened the lead.

Jim Godkin came from behind in the third period with two points on riding time to salvage a 4-4 tie at 158 and the Coast Guard lead remained seven points. A loss at 167 opened the lead to 18-8 and the Redmen were faced with the prospect of needing a pin and two decision in the last three weights to win.

This was nearly accomplished by what coach Homer Barr called his "best group of heavyweights at UMass". The trio of Ed Carlsson, George Zguris and Chris Hodson put their opponents on their backs a total of nine times, but none could get the pin and the Redmen comeback went by the boards. Carlsson won 16-2 with three predicaments, Zguris won 9-4 with two predicaments and Hodson won 13-2 with four predicaments. This totalled a score of 38-8 for the three bouts and it was a frustrated group of Redmen that came back to Amherst.

Grappling holds....The loss will no doubt drop the Redmen lower in the New England rankings. UMass was fighting for number one ten days ago, but two losses and a tie have knocked them out of the top five. Goldberg continued to be one of the few constants on the team. Shelly has won his last three matches by a combined 19-2 score. Injuries and weight problems continue to plague the team and cause coach Barr to juggle the lineup. Familiar names such as Nick DiDomenico, Dave Reynolds and Brian Urquhart are out of the lineup due to injuries and coach Barr is hoping they recover quickly in time for the tourney. Others such as Tom Young, Mike Brauner, Clay Jester and Carl Dambman are having problems getting into a hot streak, which is so important in the demanding sport of wrestling. The Redmen hope to get back into the winning habit when they host the UConn Huskies tomorrow night.

Playing what Coach Pete Broaca has called its "toughest opponent of the season" the UMass freshman basketball team will host a much taller Boston College frosh team in the Cage tonite at 6:00. The UMass frosh are 11-1 going into the game.

BC will start two very capable guards in Jere Nolan (6'0) and Dave Ulrich (6'2). Nolan is an excellent ball handler and passer, and like UMass' Rick Pitino will consistantly hit the open man with precision passes.

Up front the Little Eagles will start three out of the following four players: Dan Kilcullen (6'5), Mark Raterink (6'6), Steve Reid (6'8), and Herrick Lengers (6'9). They can also bring in 6'6 Maruice Walker off the bench.

Many Cage fans may remember Herrick Lengers from last year's Rockwood Academy team which defeated the UMass frosh in overtime last year.

BC has height and depth. UMass has the shooters. According to Coach Broaca the Little Redmen will "need a great team effort." They must box the taller Boston College forwards off the boards and they must play great defense.

Senate Set To Debate Own Salaries

By BETH GOODELL
Staff Reporter

A major issue facing the Student Senate at tonight's meeting is the question of whether or not Senate officers should start being paid salaries. The motion before the Senate resolves that compensation be given according to the following schedule: President--$150 per month, and Vice-President and Treasurer--$125 per month. The Secretary is already a paid employee of the Senate.

Senate President Glenn Elters, relatively confident that the measure will pass, says that the payment of salaries "is in keeping with a trend for professionalism in student affairs. Why shouldn't student government be as professional and as organized as the University administration?"

Being an officer of the Senate is a fulltime job, according to Elters. He reports that he spends 30-40 hours a week in Senate business, which leaves him with little time for studying or holding a part-time job.

Recognizing this, the Senate last year amended its constitution to allow the President to be a non-student during his term in office if he so desires. President Elters is enrolled as a student.

Two objections to the salary proposal, as expressed by various Senators, center around the questions of whether any salaries should be paid and of whether the retroactive clause of the bill should be included.

Some Senators and their constituents object to the payment of salaries because it would, in their minds, "corrupt" the positions because students might run for the offices largely for the sake of the money.

Strong objections have been made by some that the bill has been presented at the wrong time. The resolution calls for the compensation to be retroactive to November 1, 1970 so that the current officers will be paid for most of their terms in office. Opponents have said they "don't like the idea of people voting themselves the money."

These Senators say they support the principle of paying salaries but think the measure should be included in the Budgets Act later in the semester. This would make the motion a request for funds to pay the next set of officers, who will be elected in April, and not the current officers.

Those Senators opposed to making the salaries bill effective retroactively expect to make amendments on the floor to remove the retroactive clauses.

President Glenn Elters discredits the first objection that students will run for the offices for the sake of the monetary compensation. He contends that officers will be elected on the basis of their merits. The payment of salaries will open up the positions to more students only because more of them will be able to afford to work fulltime as officers.

Elters says the measure has in mind those students who must work at parttime jobs to afford to stay in school. These people could not currently serve as officers because they could not hold down a job and also devote sufficient time to tulfilling the duties of their offices. To Elters, this means that more competent people will run for office rather than less competent.

In studying the concept of paying salaries to Senate officers, the Senate Activities Committee conducted a survey of precedents set on 50 other college campuses. The report of the committee, to be presented to the Senate this evening, is a collection of results received from the 18 colleges and universities responding to the survey.

13 of the respondents now compensate some or all of the officers of their student governments. Payments range from $100 a year at some schools to a salary of $3600 a year for the President of the student government at Forida State University.

The University of Maine pays its student President $1,000 a year and five other officers a sum of $2050. Two of the schools not paying salaries have university senates instead of student governments, and the other three not paying their officers report that they are considering the idea.

The resolution before the Senate tonight calls for the appropriation of $2100 to cover the salaries for the months of November and December 1970 and January through May 1971. This would place the salaries proposed for UMass officers in the middle of the range of those reported by the other schools.

The salaries resolution requires a simple majority of the vote to pass. A bill proposing salaries was defeated last October in the Senate. The motion made at that time was in a form that required a two-thirds vote for passage and was defeated very narrowly. The present motion calls for the appropriation of funds to be made from a different category, so that it requires only a majority.

Students To March Against War

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Asst. News Editor

Sprawled on the slate floors of the Campus Center Concourse level, approximately 200 people decided to call for an anti-war demonstration on the Amherst Commons today, the sixth anniversary of the first "anti-war" demonstration held at UMass.

The demonstration will start at 3:30 p.m. near the Student Union and will move to the snow-covered Commons where groups from other colleges in the area are expected to converge.

Student Mobilization Committee organizers had called the meeting last night to begin the "mobilization" of as "many people as possible" in reaction to what Claire Moriarty of the UMass SMC, called "Nixon's escalation of the war into Laos."

The meeting was moved from the small conference room on the 9th floor to the main level of the CC, after the crowd had spilled into the halls from the room at the top of the campus.

Several alternate proposals, including the "blockade" of all entrances to Westover Air Force Base, were discussed and rejected by the group, which had been gathered together on short notice by SMC flyers which called for "immediate" withdrawal from Southeast Asia of "all" U.S. troops.

The group decided tentatively to hold "continuation" meetings later tonight, after the Amherst Commons demonstration. Several persons at the meeting, including Sid Finehursh of the SMC steering committee stressed the importance of "building the anti-war movement to include the trade unions, blacks, chicanos and others" outside of the academic community.

Competing with the constant banter of the sportscaster broadcasting the UMass -B.C. basketball game from speakers in the ceiling, the group debated for an hour the alternatives to holding the Amherst Commons demonstration. Defeated or ignored were proposals to hold an "educational meeting" at a UMass facility indoors; demonstrate at the Northampton draft center; join a demonstration in Springfield; commit some kind of "civil disobedience"; and hold the Amherst Commons gathering in the evening.

One veteran of demonstrations from California, privately expressed the feeling that the group was going about "organizing the wrong way."

"You've got to get the student's shit together before doing anything," he said, recommending that the group would do better calling a meeting to organize on campus, followed by a dorm to dorm leafleting with "information".

At the beginning of the meeting one student argued that demonstrations just aren't "impressive" and that he was "sick of marching". Sid Finehursh countered saying that "as long as the Vietnamese are marching", after years of war, the anti-war movement should continue to man the streets.

Another tall, pallow-faced, young man stood up during the meeting and told those assembled that the anti-war movement has to "work towards more violent---not violent--more dramatic demonstrations" if it is to have an effect on the national policy in Southeast Asia.

Claire Moriarty, who acted as "partisan chairwoman" during most of the meeting informed those who attended, that the National Student Mobilization Committee will be holding a conference at Catholic University in Washington, D.C. starting February 19.

There is also a march on Washington planned for April 24.

THINKING ABOUT DEMONSTRATIONS AGAIN-The 200 people who gathered in the Campus Center last night to discuss possible actions which could be taken to show opposition to the expanded war into Laos. The perplexed expressions on these students faces perhaps show more truth of feeling than any of last night's rhetoric.

Campus Group Plans Aid To Calif. Lettuce Strike

By DAVID CASTALDI
Staff Reporter

A group formed out of the Committee on Poverty met last night in the Campus Center to plan their course of action on the present lettuce boycott led by Cesar Chavez of the United Farmworkers Union.

After the boycott of California grapes came to a successful conclusion last summer, the United Farmworkers Organizing Committee (UFWOC) was asked by lettuce workers to represent them, and the lettuce growers in the Salinas Valley were approached and asked either to recognize the union or allow free secret ballot elections among the lettuce workers, according to a fact sheet issued by UFWOC.

The growers signed secret, 5-year contracts with the Teamsters without consulting the workers and without calling for ratification of the contracts. Cal Watkins, personnel manager for Interharvest, a subsidiary of United Fruit, the largest lettuce grower in the country, admitted in court testimony that his company had suggested to the other growers the idea of substituting the Teamsters for the UFWOC. The growers then called a Teamsters local to "feel out" the possibility of signing with them and the 5-year contracts were signed.

On August 24 a general strike was called and 10,000 farm workers from the Salinas and Santa Maria Valleys walked out of the fields in protest of a violation of their right to choose their own union. Since then, with the intervention of AFL-CIO President George Meany, a pact has been signed between the UFWOC and the Teamsters, guaranteeing that each will protect the other's traditional territory.

The teamsters have announced that they will not enforce the 5-year contracts and have offered the growers recision agreements. The growers have refused to accept the recisions and have instead obtained court injunctions on the basis that the strike is the result of a jurisdictional dispute. This prevents the UFWOC from engaging ineffective strike activities because the union is not strong enough financially to risk the consequences of any violation the court order.

UFWOC plans to boycott all non-union lettuce, and the growers, using their contracts with the Teamsters as cover, are stamping their boxes as union lettuce and are advertising their produce as "union" to the chain stores and the wholesalers. UFWOC feels that their dispute is not with the Teamsters but with the lettuce growers who have managed to put the union in a difficult position. The boycott applies to all lettuce from California and Arizona that does not bear the Farm Workers label-a black Aztec eagle. The boycott does not apply to lettuce from other states or varieties of lettuce other.

The committee on campus, headed by Jack Clark, Alwin Schmidt, and Paul Sheinkopf, plan to show their support for the striking workers by setting up a table in the student union in order to collect signatures for petitions to remove all non-union lettuce from the dining commons and presenting it to Mr. Joel Stoneham, Director of Food Services.

Laird Defends U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of State William P. Rogers and Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird said Tuesday South Vietnamese drives in Laos and Cambodia will speed the end of the U.S. ground combat role in Vietnam.

But they left in doubt the question of when all U.S. forces would be withdrawn.

Laird told the House and Senate Armed Services Committees in separate, closed sessions that the new operations are on schedule and will enable the United States to meet or beat plans to bring home 50,000 more troops by May 1.

Rogers, speaking to newsmen after a closed hearing before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said "the fact is we will have Americans by and large out of combat roles by the middle of this year." He declined to give a more precise date.

Rogers said also U.S. policy "contemplates a withdrawal of all of our forces eventually from South Vietnam."

But in response to another question from newsmen about residual forces that might be left behind indefinitely, he said "let's wait until we get to that."

The twin appearances by the Cabinet officers, both armed with maps and charts, came two days after several thousand South Vietnamese troops, borne by American piloted helicopters and backed by U.S. air and artillery firepower moved against supply routes in Laos. Another 20,000 South Vietnamese have been operating in Cambodia for the past two weeks.

Laird added, however, that some 10,000 U.S. ground troops are being used for "backup responsibilities" in South Vietnam. Rogers said the Ho Chi Minh trail in Laos, target of the latest thrust, is the "choke point" or the last major supply route available to the enemy.

Rogers, who promised new troop withdrawal announcement by President Nixon in April, said "when people talk about war escalation it just isn't true."

He said that over the past two years casualties are down, air sorties are down and the cost of the war has been halved.

"There is practically no combat in Vietnam now," he said.

"The only conclusion I can draw is the President made clear we are operating in Laos in a way we consider in the national interest," said Foreign Relations Chairman J. W. Fulbright, D Ark. "I have grave questions about it."

In The Nation And The World

DEVELOPMENTS IN LAOS AND CAMBODIA--Map locates where South Vietnamese troops swept into southern Laos Monday. The most probable target is Sepone. State Department press officer Robert J. McCloskey said his understanding is that the operation in which the U.S. is supplying air support for the South Vietnamese troops will be limited to area in Laos between 16th and 17th parallel, shaded. Meo tribal troops repelled an attack by North Vietnamese sappers near Sam Thong in central Laos. In Cambodia, heavy fighting was reported within 10 miles of Phnom Penh.

Viets Press Into Laos

SAIGON (AP) - South Vietnamese troops and tanks pressed westward across branches of the Ho Chi Minh trail in southern Laos Tuesday behind enemy forces retreating under the furious lash of U.S. air power.

At last reports, the main column in the second day of the operation had proceeded about 12 miles inside Laos along Highway 9, slowed by U.S. bomb craters in the road and bad weather that suddenly closed in. They also were halting to seize munitions caches. Helicopter borne troops set up a fire base 15 miles west of the Vietnamese border.

Ahead of the South Vietnamese, 25 miles deep into Laos, lay Sepone, heavily bombed and almost deserted. It is a main transshipment point on the trail and a North Vietnamese operating base.

Operating in front of the South Vietnamese, U.S. helicopter Cobras attacked enemy supply depots 15 miles inside Laos. Frontier reports said the Cobras hit at least one oil dump and an ammunition storage area, causing large fires and some explosions.

Field dispatches said the South Vietnamese had set up two artillery fire bases inside Laos, one of them 15 miles west of the border.

These reports said U.S. cargo helicopters air lifted five 105mm howitzers and half a dozen mortars along with ammution and other supplies for the new fire bases.

South Vietnamese officers said their intelligence reports indicated that the North Vietnamese troops in the operation area are mostly young and untrained and that the main force veterans were deployed in Cambodia.

The object of the South Vietnamese incursion is to cut the Ho Chi Minh trail, the last major supply route of the North Vietnamese to Cambodia and South Vietnam, and to smash bases.

Field reports indicated some South Vietnamese troops, probably reconnaissance units, may be in the Sepone area, but Saigon headquarters reported the base had not yet been taken. Sepone has a dirt airstrip and South Vietnamese engineers are expected to rebuild it.

A South Vietnamese field commander said he expected his troops to push on westward along Highway 9 during the next 10 days toward Savannakhet, on the western border of Laos, thus snipping off all the branches of roads that form the Ho Chi Minh trail.

While the North Vietnamese were putting up little resistance in front, some units were striking at the South Vietnamese lifeline farther east in South Vietnam.

North Vietnamese launched a sharp attack against a U.S. position northwest of Lang Vei and less than a mile from the Laotian border. About 9,000 U.S. troops are acting as a blocking force for the 20,000 South Vietnamese troops entering Laos.

The South Vietnamese in Laos were moving under a U.S. air umbrella. U.S. tactical combat planes had been flying 300-400 missions daily against the Ho Chin Minh trail and other targets in Laos.

Military spokesman said this action had been stepped up 20 per cent since the South Vietnamese incursion.

In addition to the tactical air effort, Strategic Air Command B52 heavy bombers are supporting the South Vietnamese.

The eight jet Stratofortresses flew about 50 sorties in support of the South Vietnamese in the first two days of the push into Laos, concentrating their strikes north of Highway 9. A sortie is one flight by one plane. Each B52 bomber carries up to 30 ton of explosives.

In Washington, Defense Secretary Melvin R. Laird said the South Vietnamese drive in Laos is on schedule and will enable the United States to meet or better its plan to withdraw 50,000 more troops from South Vietnam by May 1.

The offensive schedule, however, received a temporary setback Tuesday when unexpected rains swept into the northern end of the South Vietnam from the South China Sea. This cut severely into U.S. helicopter airlifts. Forecasters said the rains would end by Wednesday.

About 300 miles south of the Laotian operation, a parallel westward drive into eastern Cambodia by another force of 20,000 South Vietnamese ran into fierce resistance.

North Vietnamese forces deployed near the town of Snuol, five miles inside Cambodia, launched three attacks against the advancing South Viet namese. Snuol is 90 miles north of Saigon.

In the ensuing battles, 73 North Vietnamese were killed, Saigon headquarters reported. The South Vietnamese took loss of 10 killed and 42 wounded.

Farther west, where South Vietnamese forces have speared 35 miles into eastern Cambodia, fierce forest fires raged in the huge Chup Rubber Planation.

South Vietnamese and North Vietnamese forces have been heavily engaged here and the fires were believed touched off by allied air strikes. The French owned plantation covers 75 square miles and is the largest in Indochina.

A dispatch from Vientiane, the capital of Laos, said the North Vietnamese were putting more pressure on the major base at Long Cheng, 79 miles to the north, despite the incursion into southern Laos.

Long Cheng is headquarters for Gen. Van Pao's Meo tribal army southwest of the Plain of Jars.

Earthquake Blasts L.A.

Agnew Sent To City, Nixon:"Disaster Area"

LOS ANGELES (AP)-A powerful earthquake staggered Southern California yesterday, leaving at least 24 dead and forcing the start of evacuation of as man as 250,000 people because of a leaking dam.

Nearly five hundred people were treated for injuries at various hospitals in and around Los Angeles. Seven of the fatalities were caused by heart attacks.

Property damage was extensive as walls collapsed, streets buckled and caved in and windows were shattered in the heavily populated areas around Los Angeles, the nation's third largest city.

In Washington, President Nixon issued a formal declaration of a major disaster, opening the way for help for the stricken area from more than a dozen government agencies. Vice President Spiro T. Agnew will go to the area Wednesday for consultations.

The heaviest loss of life was at the Veterans Administration Hospital at Sylmar, at the western end of the hard hit San Fernando Valley. There, 11 bodies were found and 100 persons were injured when two aging buildings collapsed into ruins.

Tall buildings swayed in downtown Los Angeles when the quake hit at 6:01 a.m. PST, just at dawn. Windows shattered and some older buildings collapsed in showers of bricks and plaster.

Rescuers were searching for persons possibly trapped in damaged buildings.

The quake registered 6.5 on the Richter scale, according to experts. The scale grades anything over 7 as a major quake. The quake center was in the San Gabriel Mountains, 10 miles from the San Fernando Valley.

It was followed by hundreds of aftershocks, the most severe of these being a 5.5 tremor which hit several hours after the first.

Plans to evacuate families near the dam, at Van Norman Lake in the valley's west end, were revealed in Sacramento by Gov. Ronald Reagan, who also issued a declaration of disaster before flying to the scene.

He said that 250,000 persons would be moved out because of leaks in the earth fill dam. It holds 6.7 billion gallons of water, the city's largest store.

By 4 p.m. PST, hundreds of families were already taken away, authorities reported. The valley has a total population of 1.3 million.

Two of the dead were found at Olive View Sanitarium, a new $23 million complex a mile from the veterans hospital, where walls collapsed.

Two others were killed when a freeway overpass collapsed at Sylmar, another died in a bridge collapse at New hall and another in the collapse of a roof at a skid row mission in Los Angeles.

A photographer in a helicopter flying over Los Angeles and the valley a few hours after the quake reported most of the scores of fires touched off by the initial shock under control BUT SAID THERE IS WIDESPREAD DEVASTATION TO BUILDINGS. "A scene of destruction right out of a war," he called it.

He saw giant cracks in the walls of the threatened dam, with chunks of cement as large as buses tossed around, a smashed water tower oozing liquid down a hill, fractured freeways and crumpled overpasses, and at the veterans hospital a roof flat on the ground.

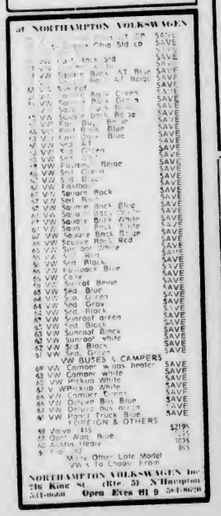
Anatomy of An Earthquake: A Report

NEW YORK (AP)-There are forces within the earth, in certain well defined regions, bending and straining the earth's crust.

When the strain becomes too great, the earth's crust snaps, or moves. That's what happened Tuesday in California.

This is the way the Rev. Joseph Lynch, director of the Seismic Observatory at Fordham University in New York, describes an earthquake-a sudden movement of a portion of the crust of the earth.

The precise nature of the forces causing earthquakes are not fully understood, Father Lynch says, but he suggests they could be "thermal currents," flowing heat energy perhaps 500 miles deep within the earth.



The U.S. Geological Survey has estimated that 80 per cent of all earthquakes occur in the so called "ring of fire," a belt surrounding the Pacific Ocean. The survey says a catastrophic earthquake strikes about once a year. Bit more than a million quakes are recorded each year, most beneath the sea.

While the California eartquake Tuesday was centered in the San Gabriel Mountains, the best known source of concern for residents there is the San Andreas fault, a 600 mile fracture of the earth extending from north of San Francisco into Mexico.

An earthquake is a readjustment of the earth's crust to the pressures around it. So is a landslide or a snowslide on a sloping roof.

And the pressures continue to build up on the San Andreas fault, geologists say.

Spacemen Land After Moon Trip

ABOARD USS NEW ORLEANS (AP)-The Apollo 14 astronauts splashed safely into the South Pacific yesterday, back from the moon with man's most important lunar treasure.

Astronauts Alan B. Shepard Jr., Stuart A. Roosa and Edgar D. Mitchell returned to earth with scientist's already hailing their nine day, 1.15 million mile lunar voyage as the most successful of man's three moon landings.

"We're all fine in here," said Shepard, seconds after the craft hit the water.

"Welcome home," the carrier radioed.

"Thank you, sir," came the quick reply.

Three huge orange and white parachutes blossomed within sight of this prime recovery ship and the spacecraft dropped smoothly toward the warm Polynesian waters.

Shepard and Mitchell were back from a 33 1/2 hour visit to the moon, a visit that will provide data to science for years. While there, they set up an atomic powered science station which is already giving out information. They also gathered geologically valuable rocks. Helicopters were deployed to bring the astronauts to the recovery ship.

Shepard said in a news conference from space the mission was "a smashing success" and scientists on earth agreed.

Lee R. Scherer, director of Apollo lunar exploration, said,

"We are extremely pleased with the scientific job they did."

Although Shepard and Mitchell failed to reach the rim of a wide, deep crater as planned, scientists said they apparently came close enough.

The moonwalkers collected 95 pounds of rock which may include samples dating from the very birth of the moon 4 6 billion years ago. They gathered the rocks from the Fra Mauro highland region that may have been blasted from the moon's bedrock by the impact of some ancient meteorite.

More than 100 scientists will receive the rock samples, and the studies of the age, composition and magnetic properties of the material should give clues as to how the moon and perhaps the solar system itself were formed.

The astronauts also set up a moon science station, which is already sending valuable data to earth. Scientists have so far received hours of readings from a seismometer left at Fra Mauro. An observatory has already bounced a laser beam off of a reflector set up on the moon by Shepard and Mitchell.

In a brief news report Tuesday, Mission Control told the astronauts of an earthquake which smashed buildings and highways in the Los Angeles area.

"Sounds like the San Andreas fault is kicking up again," said Shepard.

The earthquake also broke communications briefly with four stations tracking the astronauts toward their splashdown.

The stations affected were Hawaii, Guam and Canberra and Carnarvon in Australia. Communications were resumed within five minutes when telephone circuits were rerouted.

The astronauts face 18 days of isolation on earth. They will ride in the mobile quarantine facility, a trailer-like isolation van, halfway around the world and then go into another isolation facility at the Lunar Receiving Laboratory at the Space Center near Houston.

The isolation is to protect earth creatures from any germs the astronauts may have contracted while on the moon. No such germs were found during the moon landings of Apollo 11 and Apollo 12, but scientists fear the moon highlands where Apollo 14 landed may harbor bacteria not found on the flat lunar plains where the other two landings were made.

The rocks will also go into quarantine at the Space Center. Scientists there will open the boxes and bags containing the moon material in chambers sealed against the outer world.

Bits of the material will be exposed to mice, cockroaches, shrimp and other animals to determine if it has any dangerous effect on earth creatures.

Scientists will also study the material for any evidence of life. Some of it will be placed in a rich growth medium in an attempt to nuture any unseen bacteria living in the lunar soil.

The astronauts will be released from quarantine on Feb. 26. Samples of the lunar material will later be released to selected scientists all over the world.

The $400 million moon mission required the full complement of the space agency's engineering skills. Time after time Mission Control and the astronauts worked together to overcome problems which threatened man's third moon landing.

Shepard Jr., commander of the Apollo 14 moon mission, adjusts his throat microphone as he answers a question during the press conference conducted Monday night between the homebound spaceship and the Manned Space Center at Houston, Tex. Rail Strike Looms Larger WASHINGTON (AP) - The railway clerks union Tuesday threatened to renew a nationwide rail shutdown at 12:01 a.m. March 1 at the expiration of an emergency 80 day postponement ordered by Congress.

Union President C. L. Dennis said his 200,000 ticket sellers and other clerical workers would walk out then unless a new agreement is reached.

Such a walkout would mean a total shutdown of the nation's railroads if other unions honor the clerks' picket lines, as they did during a 24 hour, four union strike last December.

However, Dennis offered to make exceptions for military goods, passenger trains and coal shipments to electric utilities. He also said he had indications some western railroads might block the industry's historically united front and sign individual agreements with the clerks.

Dennis accused the rail industry of backing off from previous offers on wages and job security and of failing to pay about half his men back pay owed under the 13.5 per cent retroactive pay increase Congress ordered in delaying the December strike.

The renewed strike threat brough no comment from the White House or from the National Railway Labor Conference, which bargins for the industry.

Assistant Secretary of Labor W.J. Usery Jr., who has been working with both sides in the protracted dispute, said though a spokesman he remained hopeful a strike can be averted.

Of the four unions that struck last December the two smallest representing trackmen and dining car workers, reached tentative agreements last Thursday.

Champlain Pulp In Doubt

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP)-Atty. Gen. James M. Jeffords abandoned plans Tuesday for a court battle with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers over the discharge of effluent into Lake Champlain by International Paper Co.'s new pulp mill in Ticonderoga, N.Y.

"Because of a federal executive order issued in December, we have no basis for a suit," Jeffords said.

He said Vermont will fight IPC's efforts to secure a federal pollution permit for the mill. Jeffords had planned to sue the Army engineers for allowing the pulp mill to discharge effluent into the lake without a pollution permit, required under the Federal Refuse Act. An executive order issued in December gives industries discharging waste into waters under federal jurisdiction on or before Dec. 23 until July 1 to comply with the act.

At first, Jeffords said he questioned whether the IPC mill was actually in full operation before the cutoff date, but he acknowledged Tuesday that this would be difficult to determine.

Company officials said the new plant started full operations in mid December. It had a New York state permit plus a letter from the engineers stating that a pollution permit would be issued as soon as the necessary paperwork was completed.

Vermont officials have requested a public hearing on IPC's permit application and say they will oppose it until assurances given that discharges from the mill will not downgrade water quality in the lake.

Meanwhile, Jeffords still was awaiting word on whether the U.S. Supreme Court will hear an earlier suit filed by Vermont against IPC and New York.

Ward Nets Pinicle Of Amherst Collegians

Dr. John W. Ward, professor of American History at Amherst College since 1963, was unanimously named by the board of trustees as the 14th president of Amherst College yesterday.

Ward, 48, will succeed President Calvin H. Plimpton who announced last June that he would retire at the end of this academic year.

A member of the faculty at Amherst since 1963, Ward was graduated from Harvard in 1947 and earned his M.A. and Ph. D. degrees at the University of Minnesota. He then taught from 1942 to 1963 at Princeton University, where he was professor of history and chairman of the program in civilization.

Dr. Robert Wood, UMass president, said he was delighted to welcome Ward to Amherst, and looked forward to a continuance of a close relationship the university has enjoyed over the years with Amherst under Plimpton.

And Chancellor Oswald Tippo said, "I would like to offer my congratulations to Dr. Ward on his appointment as president of Amherst College, and look forward to continued cooperation with him in the five-college program in the years ahead."

The author of two books and many articles in his field, Ward has twice been awarded the John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation Fellowship and in 1963 was a fellow at the Center for Advanced Study in Behavioral Sciencees at Stanford, Calif.

In 1967-68, he was a Fulbright lecturer in American History at the University of Reading, Berkshire, England, and is currently serving as a Phi Beta Kappa lecturer.

TO HEAD AMHERST--American History scholar John William Ward, above, has been named Amherst College's 14th president succeeding Calvin H. Plimpton who retires in June. Ward is 48.

"There's Something Wrong About This"

Keith Bromery

The Revolution Of Myth

What is the state of the revolution today? Has it moved from the college campus to the city street? Has it changed form from the peace marches of the sixties to the bombing of the seventies? Is there indeed a revolutionary movement in this country today?

These are but a few of the many hundreds of questions being asked by tens of thousands of educators, legislators, presidential advisers, journalists, and F.B.I. agents concerning the revolution in this country today. Most of them agree that there does exist such a movement or several such movements which they believe to be afoot in the land. But for the most part, they disagree on the form and the location of the movement (s).

Most of the confusion which surrounds these questions revolves around the obscure definitions (and there are many) that Americans apply to the term "revolution". The Weathermen of mostly pre-1970 fame was seen by the F.B.I. as "a revolutionary conspiracy" shortly after the infamous Chicago Convention of 1968, and the Weathermen Organization last year in a belated retort attributed to the Young Americans for Freedom many of the aspects found in the Hitler Youth Corps of the 1930's.

The Webster's Seventh Collegiate Dictionary defines revolution as "a sudden, radical, or complete change." After reading both the Weathermen's and YAF's party platforms, and related literature, I found myself more confused over their alleged revolutionary natures than I was when I merely followed their escapades via the skim coverage that the New York Times gave to them.

Right off, one runs into the very formitable problem of determining what a sudden change is and what it involves. It is something that occurs in a split second, an hour, a year? And what of the term "radical". What is a radical change? The problem should be obvious. Working within the structure of a highly relative and subjective termonology, it is near impossible to find agreement - not even through the several centuries o'd democratic process of the compromise.

The fact that appears most obvious to me is that none of the above mentioned groups or any of the above-ground, easily assessable, unrestricted membership groups are really totally revolutionary in nature. They may indeed think themselves so and employ a revolutionary rhetoric and party platform, but the fact remains that revolutionary they are not.

All of these groups, even though they sincerely intend to be revolutionary, are actually reactionary. They adopt liberal and benevolent causes and take up certain issues against certain others, but this isn't revolutionary; its reactionary.

All one need do is look at the many diverse areas that these groups porport to be involvement in. The Black Panthers attack racism among other things including the police. The Weathermen attack the military-industrial complex. The Student MOBE attacks the war in Southeast Asia. The YAF attacks SDS. They all go after the symptoms and sometimes each other, while the causes behind these symptoms elude them completely.

In accordance with the definition, true revolutionaries are very impatient (sudden), very extreme (radical), and they must desire and fight for a complete change of the political and/or social system now in existance. An organization which is merely anti-racism, anti-war, or anti-industry is not revolutionary; it is reacting against a particular social and/or political condition in society. A true revolutionary wants the consistance of the whole cake changed, not just the icing.

Indeed, these kinds of organizations have much in common with the nineteenth century benevolent societies. They are merely latter day abolitionists, prohibitionists, and peace seekers. In fact, the benevolent societies of the nineteenth century were often called revolutionary by their contemporaries. But they were hardly such. Much of what these groups accomplished was badly needed in that society. They forced this model democratic nation to stick closer to its utopian ideas nievely set down by the founding fathers; ideas which today are still very much utopian and almost as unattainable. The results of much of this internal dissention lead the country into the Civil War, but that was hardly a revolution. It was a sectional rebellion between two factions within the country brought on by pressing sectional issues (slavery, internal improvements, tariffs, etc.). It was certainly not an attempt by an organized revolutionary group to affect "a sudden, radical, or complete change."

Today, as in the 1830's, organizations are pushing for improvements and reforms in society. Some of them, today as in the past, stage mass rallies and marches, and others, today as in the past, resort to the gun and the bomb in attempting to meet the same ends. The effects of such activity on the nineteenth century can be seen in history. The effects of this same activity today will definitely become part of a latter day history. Most students or observers of current trends in society find it hard to foresee a civil war or a revolution in our near future. Perhaps we are living in the first era of recorded history where a total socio-political revolutionary reform will evolve - not naturally or through blood shed, but through relentless and steady social and political pressure brought about by these very same groups which so romantically deem themselves revolutionary.

FACULTY TENURE IS UNDER ATTACK on many campuses (including the Best situation at UMass). And it is making banner headlines at Berkeley, where the DAILY CALIFORNIAN has been coming to the defense of the UCal faculty against attacks by Governor Ronnie Reagan. In a State of the State message to the Legislature, last month, the Governor said that "The original and legitimate reasons for tenure no longer exist. Tenure has become a haven for the incompetent teacher. It should be altered to include a system of merit pay which provides real incentives for quality teaching. This should not be precipitous; a judicious, sensible phase-out would be a real service to all concerned...."

Some quoted reactions from the faculty: "A reign of terror which existed on many campuses before tenure was adopted" is what one History prof foresees. He adds, "It's better to live with a few incompetents on a faculty than to live with a terrified faculty."

A Drama prof says: "Tenure is absolutely essential to protect the academic freedom of the professor from the politicians."

And the California Teacher's Association says it "vigorously" opposes the Governor's stand.

All of which should come as some surprise to some.

SUIDIDE, a subject which has been taboo in other generations, makes the headlines at Northern Illinois U. The campus newspaper, NORTHERN STAR, recorded eight suicide attempts reported to the NIU Health Center, last Fall.

This average of one a week for the campus put NIU on a par with other midwest colleges and universities. During a one-year period, the report said, 42 suicide attempts had been reported at NIU. Overdose of pills accounted for 33 of the attempts; slashed wrists for 9.

Here are some other statistics: the Suicide-Attemptee is most likely a female underclassman who took pills to "solve" an interpersonal problem, such as quarrels with a boyfriend.

According to mental health officials, "The low number of successful attempts in relation to attempts is attributed to a feeling of ambiguity on the part of the student - it is not a wholehearted attempt."

TEASER PIECE for this column comes from the OKLAHOMA DAILY, which carried this headline over a three-column story, recently: "Sex prior to Marriage increases in college coeds."

Citing statistics of a Purdue U. prof that a ten-year period showed increased activity from 10 per cent to 32 per cent in 1968 among college women of a western U.S. university which "represents a highly restrictive Mormon culture," the story revealed also that a university in Denmark recorded an increase of sexual activity from 60 to 97 per cent.

From the ridiculous to the sublime?

Campus Comment

Don't Let It Get You Wet

To the editor:

This is kind of personalized, but try to dig it anyway. I've been out of the college scene for three years and I just returned a semester ago. I have weaved in and out of campus organizations; I have faded in and out of people's lives looking for the hope I expected to find in an academic community. In all my weavings and fadings, I have come to realize that if what we do and are here is the hope of the future world, that world is in a lot of trouble.

From dope smokers to beeries to straights, from radicals to pacifists to conservatives, from the Hatch to the Concrete Coffee Pot to the Newman Center, there is a creeping disease of despair and rigidity. Violence among ourselves. We claw at each other's guts hoping we are right, demanding our way as better.

The choice is otten between pea-brained students or pea-brained administrators. In this sea of fraud and power struggle, an individual is lost and despaired into silence. The fucking revolution nor the System won't work because no matter what we claim to be, we have seen power and lusted after it. There will be no change except in rhetoric or appearance; Machiavelli would be proud of us.

All of this is prompted by a verbally violent conversation between a student of the revolution and one of the establishment, overheard in a place where such insanity should not occur, a place where freedom and gentleness should grow. I went in smiling, believing I really had found a corner of the zoo where beauty grows. The only smile left now is for the Snake who conned us into believing he is the enemy.

--God, judge us that we might be spared our own condemnation.

It's Only Water Dripping

To the Editor:

During the student strike last spring thousands of students pledged themselves to leaving school this fall to work in the mid-term elections. The war was still continuing on schedule when we came back this fall, yet the student enthusiasm from the spring never carried through the summer. The elections were disappointing, to say the least. Now we are invading Laos and our campuses remain quiet. Why has the mood of the campus switched to selfishness and depression when it was once one of compassion for one's fellow man? OK, perhaps you felt the political system has become so bureaucratic that any of your time spent on a campaign would have been a waste. And perhaps you are right. But is there not a need for some commitment, political or otherwise, by the members of our university community to restore social justice within our society? For those of you who haven't quite completely given up on politics, I might remind you that next year we'll be electing a President. The New Hampshire Primary, the first of the many primaries throughout the country, is barely a year away. And just maybe there really is a man that we can trust somewhere out in that "nasty" area known as politics. In 1963, George McGovern, speaking in the Senate, condemned American involvement in Vietnam. This has been generally acknowledged as the first time any Congressman spoke out against the war on the floor of the Capitol. And he has continued to speak out--not only on the war, but against the draft, and for increased aid to the poor, as well as on the many other issues facing our nation. On Jan. 18 George McGovern announced his candidacy for the Democratic Presidential nomination. George McGovern cares enough to commit himself to bringing this country back together. Do you? Find Someone Who's Tripping

To the editor:

I know where my friend Andy is now. I was so worried when I didn't receive his usual weekly letters. "Viets Continue Drive into Laos", that tells me why I haven't heard. I read about our continual involvement in south east asia, and I just feel so tired inside. I kept believing that if man could never love all men, he could at least tolerate differences. But suddenly everything is black or white, stop or go, love or hate. How do we people hope to achieve peace? by war? apathy? distrust, or lies? Oh God, the absurdity and the games we play. Todays' Collegian also stated that some of the major news papers such as the New York Times and Boston Globe have agreed to tell the public and avoid the recent issue of our increased involvement in Laos.

It is so sad. Our country was founded on so many beautiful idealistic dreams: Equality, freedom of speech and press, pursuit of happiness. Somewhere along the line we people lost our purpose for being. I hope that enough still believe in those ideals to continue to strive for the principles. We don't have all the time in the world-if we continue to avoid what is happening around this world we will only aid to its ignorance.

I know where Andy is now...I only hope he makes it home.

And You Will Be All Set

To the Editor:

The reply by the "Ushers" over my chagrin concerning my I.D. problem necessitates a rebuff.

I stated in my previous letter that the "man at the door" refused me admittance. This was my point. I never attempted to gain free admittance for my wife. I realized it would have cost me $3.00 for her but I understood that students were admitted free.

I have since contacted Mr. Rufe, Financial Manager who assured me that my I.D. should have been honored because I offered collaborating proof of my identification.

My only reason for writing the Collegian is to help eliminate the possibility of this situation arising

Pandora Gets Her Oats

When last we saw Pandora she was having trouble with her skulking. Iconoclastes, hearing the characteristic sound of sweat dripping from behind him whirled with graceful ease and, immediately ascertaining the whole awful truth, offered Pandora a navel orange and set down for a game of cat's cradle. Pandora, seizing her opening, immediately pounced upon the reclining Iconoclastes with all the passion of a bull dyke with a new master cylinder. The innocent Iconoclastes, taken aback.....

Cleopatra's Asp

And it came to pass that in the land of Am-Herst was established the Ewe of Mass. And lo! The chariots of the people were fruitful and multiplied, even unto the overcrowding of streets. And so the hand of the Man said. "Let us have the Parking of Lot". And there was the Parking of Lot, and many said: "F--Lot, which is nigh unto the Southwest".

And the people said, let us not have the Parking of Lots, for they seem so near and are yet so far (to walk through the Storm of Snow).

And the people did not use the Parking of Lot, and so still was there the overcrowding of streets.

And so there came unto the Ewe of Mass a great Plague. And It was called the Son of Ander, whose machines of destruction struck terror unto the hearts of the bravest of charioteers.

And the curse of the Son of Ander was thus: that whosoever should trespass against the Laws of the Man, his chariot should be taken even from the Ewe of Mass, and cast unto the depths of the A. Garage. And a sum of gold should yet be taken from the transgressor, that ere he should receive yet again unto his hands his chariot, he should lose even unto his purse.

And it came to pass that the people of the Ewe of Mass grew weary of the Plague, and said, let us have an end to this Terror. And there came unto the land a prophet, called the Student of Senate, speaking even of an end to the Plague of the Son of Ander. And so said the Student of Senate: "Let us even create our own engines of destruction, to relieve the overcrowding of streets while yet destroying the excess of Profits of the Son of Ander. And the people made a joyful noise unto the Student of Senate, for the evil Plague was even to be destroyed. But yet the tale is only begun, for thus begins the Battle of the Tape of Red.

Slowing Down

I'm tired of getting dumped on. I'm tired of getting pushed and pulled in this mass hysteria which calls itself a university environment. I'm tired of the run-around, the senseless, mind-fucking run-around that keeps things moving in this fantasy world of babbling, paranoid, encrusted intellectuals. Sometimes, when I feel myself involved in thewhole mess, I even become tired of myself and my "friends". This is what I've become lately-tired, spiteful, nervous, pressured-pursued by the petty horrors of everyone's discontent, a discontent and uneasiness fostered by the infertile, barren wasteland of the spirit that characterizes the outpourings from those who'll proudly and senselessly affirm their roles in this untogether non-community. Holy Moses, I have been deceived! I am a Jerk.

You Say It's Your Birthday?

I'm tired of working for a mass audience, of coming in five nights a week for three hours for a mass audience, of editing for a mass audience, of listening to the discontent of a mass audience. Who do you think had to read all those obnoxious letters to the editor over the past year. If you only knew how nauseating they sometimes were; how angry, how lonely, and how sick sometimes. And you should read the ones I didn't print. Ah, who cares? I've had it. I've decided to run out my life among the unknown wisemen who mumble in damp corners, "Ah, LIFE, when it's good it's not so good, and when it's bad, it sucks."

UMass Adds New Faces

Tabler, Durgin To New Slots

William B. Tabler of New York City, internationally-known in hotel design and architecture, has been named an adjunct professor in the department of hotel and restaurant administration at UMass in Amherst.

He will be at Amherst for two days each semester for the next four years and participate in classes and seminars, providing to students the latest information and insights from industry, according to Dr. Donald E. Lundberg, head of the department.

Mr. Tabler is regarded as the leading hotel-motel architect in the world today. He heads William B. Tabler Architects, whose 60 architects and other staff have designed more hotels than any other group in the industry. This firm has completed architectural plans for more than $650 million in hotel construction around the world—from the Hartford Hilton Hotel in Connecticut to the Hotel Karachi Inter-Continental in West Pakistan.

He is a graduate of Harvard University, and the Harvard Graduate School of Design and has been a registered architect since 1940 and a registered professional engineer since 1947.

Commenting on the appointment, Dr. Lundberg pointed out that the addition of Mr. Tabler to the teaching staff will strengthen the department in the hotel and restaurant engineering area, and will also provide an international aspect that has not previously been available to the University's hotel and restaurant administration majors.

The new faculty member will work with Dr. Stevenson Fletcher of UMass in hotel and restaurant engineering. Dr. Fletcher holds a joint appointment in food and agricultural engineering and hotel and restaurant administration.

Harold C. Durgin, University Conference Coordinator at the University for the past 12 years, has been appointed to the Division of Continuing Education as assistant director for programs.

The Division of Continuing Education encompasses conferences, seminars, short courses and evening classes for both academic and non-academic credit. Beginning this week 21 subject areas from accounting to anthropology to speech and sociology will be taught at Amherst, Greenfield, Pittsfield, and Springfield. More than 65 conferences are registered to be held in the near future, ranging from the National Astronomical Society and National Association of Mutual Savings Banks to the annual State Highway Conference and the Massachusetts Association of Assessors.

Groups this summer will vary in size from 25 to over 2,000, with most of the activity being held in the new Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center.

Mr. Durgin is President of the Rotary Club of Amherst, a member of the American Society of Association Executives and a member of the Education Committee for that organization. He is also Vice chairman of the Hampshire County American Red Cross, Chairman of the Amherst Unit of the Salvation Army and a Director of the Amherst Community Chest.

A former resident of Springfield, Mr. Durgin was active in civic and church organizations in that community.

Dean Mortimer H. Appley of the Graduate School has announced the appointment of Dr. Pat W. Camerino as associate graduate dean for research and chairman of the Research Council. Dr. Camerino replaces Dr. Samuel Seely in these posts.

His major functions will include consultation with members of the academic community with regards to the administration of research proposals and awards, liaison between the University and granting agencies and, in general, supporting and expediting research programs and activities within the University.

Dean Camerino has been with the National Institutes of Health for the past five years as a scientist-administrator. His most recent position was as assistant director of the Division of Research Resources. Prior to that he was program director and branch chief of the National Institute on Arthritis and Metabolic Diseases.

A graduate of Kent State University, Dr. Camerino received his Ph. D. in biochemistry from Cornell University. Before joining the National Institutes of Health, he was on the staff at Oregon State University and at Dartmouth Medical School. In addition to his Graduate School post, he will hold the rank of associate professor in the University's department of biochemistry.

Dr. and Mrs. Camerino and their three children will reside in Amherst

UM Students Fight Power Plant

A coalition of antipollution groups has agreed to meet at the University of Massachusetts Friday to map out plans against the proposed Vermont Yankee atomic power plant on the Connecticut River in Vernon, Vt.

The new group, the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution, was organized Saturday at a meeting in Brattleboro, Vt.

Its chairman is Mrs. Esther Poneck of Putney, Vt.

With the help of scientific advisors from the university and Marlboro and Bennington Colleges, the group hopes to persuade the Atomic Energy Commission not to grant a permanent license to the Vermont Yankee Nuclear Power Corp. to operate the $135 million plant, which is scheduled for fueling this summer, and the first test runs in the fall.

The group claims to have $10,500 pledged for its fight, and is seeking an additional $20,000 to assure a full-scale battle.

The controversy centers around the water to be discharged into the Connecticut River.

Vermont Yankee is building a $6 million cooling tower to abate effects of the heated water on the environment.

The AEC plans to schedule a public hearing sometime this spring on the granting of the license.

Draft Counselors Training To Begin

A new training program for those wishing to become draft counselors will begin tomorrow at 7:00 p.m. in 804 C.C. It will be open to all members of the University community and other interested individuals.

Although a fee of five dollars will be requested to cover the cost of materials, subsidies will be available to those who need them.

The course is being sponsored by the Draft Counseling Services at UMass, and will be taught by DCS Co-ordinator Gil Salk.

Salk, who also writes the twice-weekly Draft Counselor's Corner in the MDC, has received training from the Valley Peace Center in Amherst, Committee for Non-Violent Action, in Voluntown, Conn., and at the Central Committee for Conscientious Objectors in Philadelphia.

Materials used in the course will include the Draft Counselors' Manual, Handbook for Conscientious Objectors, various Selective Service forms, and other literature prepared by the Draft Counseling Services.

The course will run for four consecutive Thursday evenings, each lasting 3-4 hours depending on the material covered and questions asked.

This will give prospective counselors between 12-14 hours total training time, including some role playing. At the end of the formal training program, trainees will be expected to do some counseling under supervision in order to check their grasp of the material and refine their techniques.

Draft Counseling Services points out that only those who have a serious interest in counseling should plan to take the course. Those who are simply curious about their own individual options under the draft would do better to seek personal counseling and advice from DCS in 418E on the second floor of the SU, or from some other source.

Those people who are interested in the draft counselor training program but are unable to attend due to schedule conflicts should contact Draft Counseling Services to make other arrangements.

Glenn Slaps Viets Wants War Ended Now

BRIDGEWATER, Mass. (AP)- Former astronaut Col. John Glenn said Tuesday that he was opposed to using American air power or ground troops in Laos saying he was "100 per cent against widening the war."

Glenn commented on the war in Southeast Asia in answer to a question before approximately 1,500 students and faculty members at Bridgewater State College.

He spoke on changing technology as part of the college's lecture series.

"When Americans are shooting at someone, it is combat," Glenn said, adding that during World War II and the Korean conflict, his aircraft was shot up 12 times, and "I thought I was in combat."

He said that if American aircraft are used over Laos and shot down, ground troops would have to be used to seek the downed pilots.

"We can be bogged down for 50 more years fighting a guerilla war with conventional warfare," he said.

Glenn said that "to militarily solve the war we would have to occupy the entire country Vietnam and this would take 2 1/2 million men."

River Review Comm. Boosts Diversion Scheme For Conn.

The Connecticut River Basin Citizens Review Committee has recommended diversion of river water into Quabbin Reservoir for use in eastern Massachusetts.

The recommendation was announced by the committee Tuesday at a final presentation meeting completing its three-month study of comprehensive plans for the river basin.

Among 38 pages of recommendations, the committee favored the controversial river water diversion, but added several reservations. They included the right for waters to be returned to the river basin when needed in the valley, diversion only at times of heavy water flow, and close watch on environmental effects.

On another controversial issue, the citizens' team sharply questioned the feasibility of constructing 200 new dams in the Connecticut River watershed, calling for much more information on flood control and the effects on the environment.

The most hotly contested proposal for a new dam is the Deerfield Meadows dam on the Deerfield River in the Conway area. The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers report, which the citizen group has been reviewing, called for the largest and most expensive dam at that site. But the committee says severe environmental damage would follow construction of the $41 million dam.

In general, the committee's report says the need for the proposed system of large, multi-purpose dams is not substantiated.

The report attached the "highest priority" to essential waste treatment plants planned for area waterways.

Following Tuesday's public presentation at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, the committee's findings will be reviewed for three months by the New England River Basins Commission, which will also consider the views of the governors of the four basin states and the heads of affected federal agencies before submitting its final review to the National Water Resources Council on May 1.

The entire package will then be transmitted to the President and Congress for implementation of the recommended water and land resource programs.

The citizens review committee was created after a suggestion from Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Mass., who thought the citizens' voice was needed.

The committee moderator was Bernard Berger, director of the UMass Water Resources Research Center.

SENSITIVITY GROUP

This weekend, February 12-14, Friday 7:30 p.m. - Sunday 4:00 p.m.

Within each of us is the power to grow; to be more effective; to better relate with others; to find greater satisfaction in everything we do. This weekend, the New England Center for Personal and Organizational Development will conduct an experience in personal growth based on the TORI philosophy of Dr. Jack R. Gibb, one of the pioneers in sensitivity training and co-author of the classic T-GROUP THEORY AND LABORATORY METHOD.

Through the development of the TORI experiences (Trust, Openness, Realization and Interdependence), the participant discovers his potentiality for more open, honest and satisfying relationships with others. As a warm, supportive environment evolves, each person becomes increasingly more responsible for his own experience. Thus he discovers he is stronger, more lovable and possesses a greater potential for joy than he had previously thought. For this reason, TORI is called the "Intimate Community."

REGISTRATION: All registrations must be made by mail with the full fee enclosed. Fee: $20.00 general, $10.00 students. Limited to 200 participants. Send to: New England Center, P.O. Box 575, Amherst, Massachusetts 01002

TIME: Friday 7:30 p.m. - 11:00 p.m., Saturday 9:30 a.m. - 10:00 p.m., Sunday 9:30 a.m. - 4:00 p.m.

Audubon Air Expert Slates CC Talk Tonight

Dr. James MacKenzie, research associate with the Massachusetts Audubon Society, particularly concerned with problems of air pollution, nuclear power, population and technology assessment will discuss the topic of "Power and the Future" in Rooms 162-175, Campus Center, tonight at 7:45.

Dr. MacKenzie's talk is the first in the series of Distinguished Ecologists Lectures scheduled for the second semester at the University of Massachusetts under the auspices of the University's Coalition for Environmental Quality and cooperating groups.

Dr. MacKenzie holds a PhD. in nuclear physics from the University of Minnesota. He has been a research associate at Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory and spent two years at Argonne National Laboratory working in the field of low energy nuclear physics. Since 1968 he has been an instructor at the Mass. Institute of Technology, and he still maintains an office and the title of visiting scientist at MIT.

He is currently studying power needs and their true environmental costs, preparatory to leading Audubon efforts in educating the public to better understanding the issues and choices confronting them in this area.

James MacKenzie

"With the ever-increasing population the problems of pollution, growing power needs and finite resources are reaching crisis proportions," says Dr. MacKenzie. He brings welcome expertise to CEQ's effort and the University's to deal with these crises.

Culturnatives

About Values And Such

By GILBERT J. SALK
Staff Reporter

It seems to me that, if people are going to deal seriously with cultural alternatives, there is a distinct need to examine many of our old values. My personal belief is that one of the most cruel hoaxes being perpetrated today is the insistence on using dollars as a means of determining cost. There is a distinct need to awaken to the fact that any monetary unit of cost is artificial, and, although convenient, is a luxury we, the travelers on Spaceship Earth, can no longer afford. We must begin calculating cost in ecological terms.

A few simple examples will point out the urgency of such a change. At present, the cost of coal is calculated by adding the wages of workers mining the coal, expenses involved in the purchase and upkeep of machinery, transportation, and profit margins of all the middlemen along the way. Simple, no? However, you have only to view the skeletons of mountains ravaged by strip-mining to realize that the present cost of coal is totally unrelated to its ecological cost. Mountain streams become polluted, poisoning farmland and animals (wild as well as domestic.) Game cover and mating grounds are utterly destroyed. These and other environmental factors make coal, in reality, one of the most expensive fuels in existence.

The cost of war goes far beyond the annual defense dept. budget. Body counts are an integral part of that cost. (I don't count American bodies vs. Vietnamese bodies, by the way--I count human bodies--I count the bodies of my brothers. More painful, but certainly more honest.) In Vietnam, defoliation may well have utterly destroyed the ability of the land in the south to support the lives of the people. We won't know for sure for several years, but if you destroy trees over that extensive an area, there is no way you can avoid changing the climate to some significant degree.

Our cities cost a certain dollar amount to build, maintain, support, protect. But what about the psychological cost of jamming people in so close that they are poisoning the very air they breathe, are deafening themselves by the combined noises of their own life-support functions, are so deprived of privacy that neurosis and near-psychosis is the rule rather than the exception? What is the cost of building thousands upon thousands of floors of heated, air-conditioned, well-lit offices which are vacant 15 hours per day--and weekends--while Blacks, Puerto Ricans, Indians, Chicanos, and poor whites are either freezing or sweltering in ill-lit cold-water tenements with poor or no plumbing?

What is the real cost of an automobile when you calculate the damage of exhaust emmissions, the rusting hulks on our roadsides, the way we are totally insulated from our environment, and each other, as we whizz along?

How much richer would we be if we refused a job doing paperwork and paying $15,000 for a chance to make and sell-what? whatever expresses you as an individual: candles, macrame, silver, woodcarvings, furniture, clothing, tapestry, inventions, yourself as a handyman--on your own time, when you want to work, bound only by your own needs and the needs of those in your community. For some, perhaps, not richer at all. But I suspect that the ecological gain for most of a feeling of self-worth would be incalculable. It's a pity that our structures are such that we are taught to put no value at all on such things, because it would destroy our usefulness as cogs in the machinery of progress as defined by a gross national product which is truly gross.

In the coming weeks, CULTURNATIVES will deal with many different aspects of cultural alternatives. If you're into it and want to rap, or if you want Mother Earth News, stop by the Draft Counseling Office in ABE SU 2nd floor. You'll have to take your chances because draft counseling comes first, but if we're free, we'd enjoy sharing ideas.

Hidden Moon Shocks Instruments Today

Today the moon will pass through the earth's shadow and, within minutes, the temperature at the two lunar sites where instruments left by Apollo 12 and Apollo 14 are operating will drop radically.

Some experts estimate that where it is noon on the lunar surface, during this total eclipse, the drop will be as much as 200 degrees Fahrenheit in from 10 to 30 minutes.

The resulting "thermal shock" may cause lunar rocks to crumble and gas to escape from within the moon, some of which may be detectable with the instruments there.

However, scientists monitoring data from the moon will keep their fingers crossed, lest the shock also damage the instruments themselves. It will be the first time that the instruments will be subjected to a total eclipse.

The sudden shutting off of sunlight is expected to have a wide range of effects. One of them, presumably, will be to bring the Soviet vehicle, Lunokhod 1, to a halt in its wanderings across the Sea of Showers. The vehicle is powered by sunlight.

It was announced in Moscow yesterday that the vehicle, now 323 yards from its landing stage, had resumed operations after waiting out another 14-day lunar night.

Tomorrow's eclipse of the moon will be visible, where skies are clear, throughout the continental United States and Canada.

While the earth will begin to reduce the amount of sunlight reaching the moon before midnight, this entry into the earth's "penumbra" will not be noticeable.

According to the American Museum-Hayden Planetarium, the moon will begin entering the umbra, where all sunlight is shut off from part of the lunar disc, at 12:52 A.M.

Totality will begin at 2:03 A.M. and last until 3:26 A.M. The moon will leave the umbra at 4:37 A.M. and the penumbra at 5:42 A.M.

The instruments from which the most dramatic results are expected are those designed to record any traces of a lunar atmosphere and measure the out-flowing solar gas, the solar wind. All except the Apollo 12 atmosphere-measurer are operating.

In fact, the Apollo 12 solar wind device, known as a supra-thermal ion detector experiment, or SIDE, has proved extraordinarily sensitive.

Although more than 100 miles from the Apollo 14 landing site, it recorded exhaust from the lunar module descent engine as the astronauts landed last Friday.

It detected the exhaust from their takeoff Saturday and followed their ascent into lunar orbit until they reached a height of more than nine miles.

Dr. John Freeman of Rice University in Houston said this was comparable to detecting the exhaust of a small jet engine 100 miles away.

Dr. Freeman is in charge of the SIDE observations.

Normally, as the sun slowly sets on the moon, the drop in temperature is gradual. But if sunlight is shut off when the sun is high in the lunar sky, the drop is rapid and, Dr. Freeman said yesterday, "you're surely banging something pretty hard."

Sudden shrinkage of the lunar surface may release pentup gas that can be detected by the instruments, he said. It may also crack and crumble some larger rocks.

In fact it appears that the thermal shock of total eclipses may play a role in breaking up such rocks, much as the freeze-thaw cycle cracks rocks on earth.

It will not yet be noon at either the Apollo 12 or 14 sites, but the sun is high enough in the sky for the surface temperature to be nearing its maximum. Two partial eclipses occurred last year, but the temperature drop at the Apollo 12 site was only about 108 degrees.

Unfortunately, a severe magnetic storm occurred at the same time and it was difficult to separate the effects of that storm from those of the eclipse.

The total cutting off of sunlight will also bring to an abrupt halt the interactions between solar radiation and the lunar surface. These interactions are far more intense than on earth, where the surface is blanketed by an atomsphere that cuts off much solar radiation.

Hopefully, some of these effects will also be observable.

As in other lunar eclipses, the face of the moon will not become completely dark since some light is bent around the earth by the atmosphere. Since the blue component of sunlight is scattered by the atmosphere (making the sky blue) primarily red light reaches the moon at this time and it assumes a dull red glow during totality.

Lunar eclipses are not so rare as those of the sun and at least one can be seen each year from most places on earth. The next, in August, will be visible in Asia and the South Atlantic. One will be visible from the United States next Jan. 30.

College Lifers Meet Tonight

Another "College Life" will be held tonight at 8 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union. "College Life" is an informal, weekly program sponsored by Campus Crusade for Christ.

Dick Sandquist from Springfield will be sharing his new philosophy and style of life.

Last Wednesday night, sixty students heard three members of the Springfield College gymnastics team and Jerry Nave, a pro tennis player from Boston, tell of how their relationships with Jesus Christ have affected their lives. Nave, also a talented guitarist, sang some folk songs for the group.

Today, college students have little interest in organized religion, but still feel a need in their lives for something else. "College Life" is open to all to come and explore another meaning to life, its members say.

UM Skiers Victorious, Remain In First Place

This past weekend, the UMass ski team traveled to Dartmouth, N.H. for a Giant Slalom hosted by Amherst College Saturday, and a Downhill hosted by UMass on Sunday. The experienced team captured first place both days and their standing was boosted by 10 seconds to help widen the gap between first and second place by a strong 40 sec.

In the Giant Slalom on Saturday, co-captain John Gray fired through the course not only to capture first place for the team but also first place overall in the league. His leadership and skill set the pace for his teammates to follow.

Skiing second for the team, Gordie Speed, in his usual fine form, put in a stupendous run to strengthen the team's position, and placed second for the team and third overall in the league.

Ted Martin, having a little trouble with a shoulder injury, nonetheless dazzled the spectators with his silver racing suit as he captured third place for the team and ninth overall.

Co-captain Jim Latimer, after having a record time first run, encountered some difficulty in the upper part of the course, and wasn't able to finish the race.

This left all the pressure again on Jerry Curran and Chuck Walker. It was up to them to finish the now rutted, well used course to enable UMass to walk away with the title. Curran finished the course with an excellent time to place fourth for the team and clinch the first place team standing for the day. Chuck Walker was only mere seconds behind Curran to strengthen the team's position. Northeastern was the nearest competitor with Amherst holding third place.

Sunday's Downhill saw an equally impressive race by Coach MacConnell's boys. The course was hard, fast, and dangerous, but the training and skill of this first place team could not be stopped. Unfortunately though, UMass lost three of its best skiers; John Gray was disqualified because of a gate conflict, Gordie Speed had difficulty with his binding, and Chuck Walker had to forfeit the meet because of sickness. However, the team was not to be discouraged and Jim Latimer, recovering from the mishap the day before, captured a first for the team and third in the league. His excellent performance was followed by runs of equal importance by Curran who placed third for the team, tenth in the league, and Martin who placed fourth for the team and 12th in the league.

Mark Fisher, filling in for Walker, proved invaluable to the team, not only was he skiing in Walker's position on the well torn up course, but because of difficulties encountered by some of his teammates, the race was up to him. Finishing with a winnning team, he placed second for the team and seventh in the league.

Sunday the scoreboard again read UMass first, Northeastern second, and B.U. replacing Amherst for third. The UMass ski team put out another real fine performance.

ECAC, YanCon Select Erving

Julius Erving was honored twice this week for his excellent all-around performances in UMass' last three wins by being named both to the All-ECAC team of the week as well as being selected once again as the Yankee Conference top frontcourt player of the period.

The 6'6 junior forward scored 87 points with 55 points as the Redmen beat Holy Cross, 60-58, Iona, 92-51, and Vermont, 86-51. Erving scored 27 of his 32 points in the second half at Holy Cross to spark the Redman win and became the sixth UMass player to go over the 1100-point mark with 1122.

Also selected by the YanCon were URI's Dwight Tolliver and Vermont's Jim Ducey.

Tolliver, the top backcourt man, scored 30 points with seven assists as the Rams lost an 86-80 thriller to Boston College before making their conference record 4-1 by defeating Vermont. The 5'10 guard scored 23 points against the Eagles.

Ducey, the top sophomore selection, scored 38 points in three games as Vermont topped Adelphi before losing to URI and UMass. He scored 19 against Adelphi and hit 10 of 14 field goals and 18 of 19 free throws in the three games.

Other nominations were: backcourt-Paul Bessey (Maine), Bob Boyd (UConn), Mike Pagliara (UMass) and Brian Peters (UNH); frontcourt-Nick Susi (Maine), Bob Staak (UConn), Nate Adger (URI) and Tom Clay (Vermont); sophs-Pete Gavett (Maine), Steve Rowell (URI) and Tom McLaughlin (UMass).

UMass Sticks It To B.C. 85-77

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

It's been a long time coming but the waiting was well worth it as the UMass basketball team "stuck it to" the Eagles of Boston College before a jam-packed assemblage of 4400 fans at the Cage last night in what Coach Jack Leaman called "the biggest game of the year", 85-77. The high-flying Redmen are now 16-2 while BC slumped to 12-8.

What can you say about this one? UMass stayed with the Eagles for a good part of the game even though things really weren't going well for the Redmen. In the end, though, when the decision was a question the Amherst lads had more than enough to put the ball game away.

As far as stars are concerned, the first name that comes to mind is Ken Mathias. Seeing his first really substantial action since the Fordham game, the senior co-captain came through with an effort that Leaman could only describe as "fantastic" and "great". In the first half, when the Eagles were dominating the boards, Mathias entered the tray and turned the carom contest in the home club's favor.

For final stats, Mathias ended up with 16 points (six of nine from the floor) and ten rebounds, but what he did for the Redmen can not merely be measured in figures. He took some of the rebounding pressure off of the shoulders of Julius Erving and opened up the whole U Mass attack.

As for Erving, he didn't do too badly himself. Although he suffered a cold shooting first half (five of 18 field goals), he came back in the crucial second period to control the boards and hit some important hoops. Overall he had 24 points and 16 rebounds, which, though not overly impressive for him, proved more than enough to do the job.

To go down the list, John Betancourt, who seems to pull the big effort out when the team really needs it, gunned in 20 points including some clutch one and one free throws in the waning moments of the battle. Mike Paghara, the other backcourtman, did all right for himself, too, with eight points.

To round out the squad, Chris Coffin and Tom McLaughlin did their jobs when they had to. Coffin had nine points and five rebounds in only 18 minutes of action before fouling out and McLaughlin had eight important free throws.

The stars weren't limited to one side however. Jim O'Brien, a super ball player, had 28 points, ten assists and a team high of eight rebounds and what more can you ask of a guy" If he isn't one of the best guards in the country then he put on a great act last night. Leaman summed it up by saying that "he was the best backcourt kid we've had to defend all year".

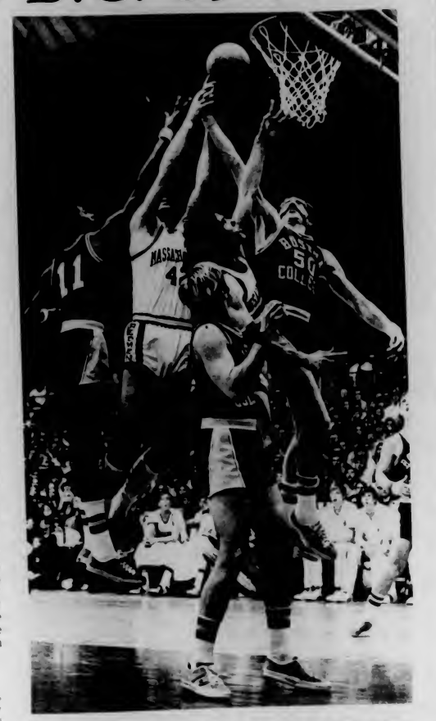
From a statistical point of view, the game was won at the free throw line. The Redmen shot an incredible 89.7% from the charity stripe, hitting 35 of 39 attempts including some pressure-laden tries in the last five minutes.

After the first eight minutes of play, the game was close all the way. With The Eagles building up a 20-12 edge on O'Brien's shooting eye and Erving having trouble getting untracked, the outlook was ominous for the Redmen. Mathias began to pull his club out of the hole and at 7:31 of the period, Erving scored on a Paghara feed after the two had combined on a steal to put UMass on top, 24-23.

Vin Costello, who had eleven first half points for the Eagles, was bombing from all over the court and his scoring kept BC on top for most of the first stanza. The half ended with the Redmen down by three, 44-41.

The second half was more of the same with one slight alteration. Erving was beginning to dominate the boards. That was the signal for UMass to move.

The Redmen were playing well in the second half but were just not able to pull away. Whenever they would pick up a three or four point lead, the Boston boys would come right back with a Frank Fitzgerald fifteen footer or an O'Brien bank shot. This was the story for the first thirteen minutes of the period.



Betancourt sank a pair of free throws with 4:36 on the clock and UMass had its biggest edge of the evening, 73-68. When Erving made a beautiful layup on a pass from Mathias, the Redmen looked in firm control but such was not the case.

Pete Schmid scored an easy hoop for the Eagles and victory, which the home fans were waiting to celebrate, was yet to be secured. Even Betancourt's four more free throws couldn't do the job as O'Brien and Fitzgerald answered with hoops to make it 79-75 with 0:47 left. Erving and Pagliara combined for three free throws, however, and that sealed the long awaited verdict. O'Brien scored on a layup and appropriately enough, Mathias ended the scoring with a three point play. Final score, UMass, 85, BC, 77.

LAYUP LINES -BC shot 51% for the game while the Redmen managed only 41%. The Eagles turned the tables from the charity stripe however as they shot only 58%....As Leaman said after the game, "the win makes us the leading contender for the NIT in New England". Amen.

Frosh Drop Eagles, 87-67

By FRED ROSENTHAL
Staff Reporter

After falling behind early in the game, the UMass freshman basketball team came back to defeat the Boston College frosh 87-67 in the Cage last night. The win boosted UMass' record to 12-1 while BC dropped to 8-4.

With 14:17 to play in the first half the Little Redmen trailed 15-7 as 6'5 Dan Kilcullen scored nine points for the BC frosh in the early goings. Then, over the next three minutes, UMass outscored BC, 10-1.

At 13:14 John Olson started the surge with a three point play as he was fouled while putting in a layup on a pass from Rick Pitino. With 11:17 showing on the clock Pitino picked up a loose ball at about midcourt and dribbled down court all alone for an easy two points. Moments later Pete Trow picked up another BC fumble, dribbled the length of the court, and then fed Al Skinner who made the score 17-16 UMass.

With about four minutes to go Skinner helped the Little Redmen boost a one point lead into a seven point lead by scoring six straight points including two on an unbelievable baseline drive. And at halftime UMass held a solid nine point lead 39-30.

BC tried to fight back early in the second half; but with the UMass frosh playing great defense and Olson and Skinner doing a great job on both boards the Little Redmen held on.

The UMass frosh finally broke it open with about seven minutes left in the game while BC's frosh were employing a half court press. With Olson playing in a high post the Little Redmen passed the ball around until finally Skinner got open underneath. Olson hit him with a pass and the UMass frosh had a 65-51 lead.

For the rest of the way it was all UMass as BC committed foul after foul trying to get the ball. And down the stretch the Little Redmen hit on 10 of 11 free throws.

UMass put icing on the cake when, with about 30 seconds left and the score 81-64, Skinner grabbed a defensive rebound and passed out quickly to Pitino. The 6'1 guard dribbled up the court and while looking to his right flipped a bounce pass under his legs to Skinner on the left for an easy two points.

At this point Coach Pete Broaca cleared the bench and the reserves gave the capacity crowd one more thrill as Peter McMahon tipped in a Dennis McHugh shot at the buzzer.

HOOP NOTES-Coach Broaca called this victory "the best team effort of any team of mine in ten years." He added that it was John Olson's "best game of the year against tough competition."...The Little Redmen outrebounded their much taller opponents by a 45-23 margin with Skinner and Olson setting the pac with 14 apiece... Pitino and Trow, the UMass backcourt scored 33 points between them. Trow had 15; Pitino had 18...Pitino also had 10 assists...UMass shot 54% from the floor.

Trackmen In Action

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

The UMass track team returns to dual meet competition this afternoon traveling to Dartmouth for a 1 p.m. encounter with the Indians. Dartmouth is the third Ivy League school the UMass tracksters have faced this season and will probably be the toughest of the three.

Last year the Redmen were only down by four points going into the last two events, the mile and two-mile relays, but were unable to come up with a win in either one. With the competition for today's meet expected to be nip n' tick down to the end the relays could once again decide the meet and this year the Redmen will have to win at least one and preferably both to come out on top.

To date Dartmouth and the Redmen have had only one common foe, that being Yale. The Indians defeated Yale, 59-50 while the Redmen were defeated 54-39. But this can be no barometer as the Redmen have been putting it together since mid-semester break and are on an even keel with Dartmouth on paper.

Besides the relay, the key events that may lead up to the grand finale, will be the dash and the hurdles. Last year UMass swept the dash and is looking for a repeat.

In the middle distances UMass has had its problems in its first two dual meets. With the return of Dave Evans in the 1000, and with Al Mangan moving down to the 600 the Redmen should be improved in these events.

In the distance events, probably the two best units in New England will be meeting. Last fall Dartmouth won the N.E. cross country championship and UMass came in second so some bitter rivalries will be renewed.

Running for the Redmen will be Ron Wayne, Larry Paulson, Tom Jasmin, and Don Dunsky. For Dartmouth Tom Shiland and Eric Potter will be their opposition.

Dartmouth has always been known for its strengths in the weights events and this year is no different as Bill and Ed Moody have thrown over 53' in the shot and around the same in the 35 pound weight. UMass will be counting on Eddie Arcaro to score well in these events.

Jumping competition should provide some of the closest competition of the meet. Cal Carpenter and Ed Shauaghnessey have both jumped well this season and will be facing George Leach of Dartmouth who has jumped 6'4".

Dick Dyer and Shauaghnessey will be in the long jump against Eddie Spike and Tom Johnson of Dartmouth and in the pole vault Johnson, who has cleared 14'6", should have this event all to himself.

Football Coaches Named

UMass yesterday named two coaches to fill positions on the Redman football team.

Named to the coaching positions were Robert Pickett, an assistant coach at the University of Maine for the past five years, who will serve as defensive coach in Dick McPherson's staff and George Flood, head football coach at Union College for seven years who will become offensive coach for the Redmen.

A native of Augusta, Maine, Pickett was an outstanding athlete at Cony High School and then at the University of Maine where he played quarterback for three years before graduating in 1959. His high school coaching experiences include successful tenures at Laconia (N.H.) and Portsmouth (N.H.) High Schools before he returned to his alma mater in 1966 as freshman football coach and an instructor in physical education. A year later he was promoted to the varsity coaching staff.

Flood, a 1953 graduate of Springfield College served in the United States Marine Corps for two years being discharged as a 1st Lieutenant returning to his alma mater for his masters degree which he completed in 1956.

A native of Peekskill, N. Y., Flood lettered in both football and baseball during his undergraduate days at Springfield. In addition to his seven years at Union he coached football, wrestling and baseball for two years at Fox Lane High School (Mt. Kisco, N.Y.), and has seven successful years at Rome (N.Y.) Free Academy where he produced two undefeated football squads and three conference championship teams.

MOBE Sponsors March, Rally

Despite the bitter cold, about 150 people marched from the Student Union Ballroom winding their way through Southwest and finishing on the Amherst Common for an anti-war rally sponsored by the Student Mobilization Committee.

The rally was called by Mobe in order to protest the recent escalation of the war into Laos and the step-up in bombings. The group, which included a women's contingent, marched up Fearing Street to North Pleasant Street and huddled on the Amherst Common at about 4:15.

Speakers included Bob Zelman, Mike Best, a UMass Economics professor, who will be leaving at the end of the semester because of his failure to de "adequate research", Claire Moriarty and Kevin O'Toole, of the UMass - SMC.

The group plans to read a telegram to President Nixon expressing their opposition to his recent escalation of the war, and all those present were encouraged to sign.

Systems Treasurer May Get Shifted

By ANNE STADNICKI
News Editor

The Systems Treasurer's Office may be moved from its current location in Whitmore Administration Building to a prefabricated unit at a new site, it was announced yesterday by the staff assistant to the Director of Planning, Paul W. Meade.

He said that appropriations amounting to two million dollars were received from the state during the current fiscal year as capital outlay to build classrooms and other necessary units. These appropriations were to finance a total of 100,000 gross square feet of space, he explained, among which will be an area provided for the Systems office.

Most favored of the three sites for the proposed move is the area which the old conservation building occupied at the base of the hill where the Chancellor's house is located, he said. It is north of the road, that goes to the house and north of Durfee Conservatory, also, he added.

Other sites under consideration are the old lacrosse field, east of Boyden Gymnasium and west of Munson and Bartlett Halls, and a location to the east of the School of Education, Meade went on.

Where the space could be utilized most sufficiently and where the topography will allow the construction are the most important points to be contended with, he said.

Responding to a query why the Systems office was chosen to make the move, Meade said it was a question of spaces needed in Whitmore. The most logical group to move out of Whitmore was the Systems staff, which involves only about fifteen people, he explained. He went on to say that the accounting department would remain in the present office.

Meade said that the total cost per building was uncertain at this time. After a six week bidding period, with opening of the bids on March 1st, he said they would know the cost per square foot.

The buildings will be prefabricated in a broad sense, but actual size and assembly plan depends on the bidder's program, he concluded. He thought that the dimensions would come close to 12 feet by 58 feet and the building would be assembled on one of the three sites.

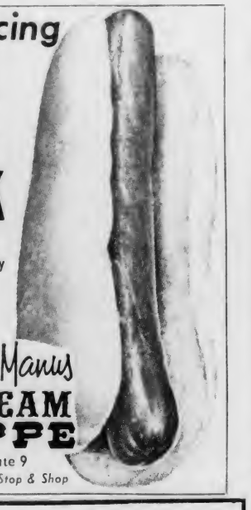
CC Garage Occupancy Increased

By PATTI SUPRENANT
Staff Reporter

Campus Center garage occupancy has almost tripled due to the decrease in parking garage prices.

On Monday, the first day to see the lowered prices, 1,233 transient cars and 77 monthly reserved cars used the facilities.

The average amount of cars that used the facilities in one day before the decrease was 300 and the stay was usually for two hours.



Originally the prices were set at 25¢ for the first hour and 15¢ for each additional hour. The lowered prices have been set at 10¢ per hour, with new monthly rates of $10 for students and $15 for faculty and staff.

"Half of the 240 available monthly reserved spaces have already been sold," said Donald Wilkowski head of Campus Center Accomodations. "Rental of these reserved spaces can be made at the Campus Center hotel lobby."

Contract negotiations are now underway to discuss the repainting of the graphics in the garage.

The change will make the signs pedestrian oriented. There will be a highlighting of the background and an enlargement of the letters on all signs. In addition stop signs in strategic places and an electric "filled to capacity" sign on the entrance to the garage will be installed.

Senate Officers To Receive Salaries

By BETH GOODELL
Senate Reporter

The Student Senate last evening voted to start paying its officers a monthly salary, retroactive to November 1, 1970.

Attempts to amend the bill to remove the retroactive clause, to pay salaries to committee chairmen and Senators, and to restrict paid officers from holding another paying job were made but all failed.

Most of the Senators opposed to compensating the officers expressed their opposition by proposing numerous amendments. They expected the Senate would approve the compensation, so they stated they wanted to make the motion less disagreeable. After two hours, the Senate decided by a 33-18-4 roll call vote to accept the original resolution which will pay the President $150 per month, and the Vice-President and Treasurer $125 per month.

In passing the measure, the Senate recognizes that "Student Senate officers should be expected to devote an exceptional amount of time to the duties of their elected offices; and that Student Senate officers should not be expected to be any more affluent than the average student", in the words of the resolution sponsored by President Glenn Elters.

Elters and other supporters of the measure stressed how time-consuming the offices are if they are to be well executed. They reported that payment of student government officers is a growing trend among colleges and universities. They see this measure as opening up the offices to people who are highly competent in running student affairs, a job becoming more and more complex as the University continues to grow. Qualified students would not be financially restricted from becoming officers because they no longer have to hold outside jobs.

An amendment was proposed but defeated to remove the retroactive clause of the bill. One Senator argued that if the Senate were going to pay this year's officers for past months in office, then it should also compensate last year's officers and those of years before.

Opponents to this idea pointed out that this year's Senate is responsible for budgeting for this fiscal year and not for past and future years.

Questioned by a Senator, the three officers reported that they "have run up debts during the period covered by the retroactive clause." Following this testimony and other arguments, the Senate defeated the amendment which would have removed the retroactive clause.

Another attempted amendment would have restricted a paid officer from holding another paying job, the argument being that if an office is so time-consuming that an officer must be compensated, then he should not have time to work elsewhere.

It was countered that the Senate should not try to legislate the personal lives of its officers. President Elters told the Senate that he does at this time hold a consultant job in the evenings. He said that if he wants to give up his personal time, then that's his business.

Agreeing with this, Senator Nick Apostola said that "If we have enough faith to elect a person to office, then we should have enough faith in him to decide whether to hold a job. And remember, we always have the ultimate recourse to impeachment." The amendment was then defeated, so that officers can still hold other jobs.

Another amendment made unsuccessfully would have led to the payment of $75 per month to the chairman of each of the Senate's standing committees and $5 to every Senator for each meeting attended. Arguments against this amendment again pointed out the time factor involved in being an officer of the Senate. Treasurer Richard Verrochi told the Senators that when they considered paying the chairmen and themselves, "You should compare the amount of time you're putting in with that of the officers. As to whether or not you deserve renumeration, it's up to you."

Further attempts were made to change the bill by Senators who thought the proposed appropriation of $2100 to cover the salaries should be spent on other uses or that the rates should be either lowered or raised. Verrochi argued against any changes, saying the original amounts were adequate. He called the debate and series of proposed amendments a filibuster. The Senate then passed the salaries measure.

Immediately following the vote, Senator Albert Olmstead called for a popular referendum to be organized by the Senate. The Senate defeated a motion to go into special business to consider the proposal.

Senator Robert Waters then went to work organizing a referendum of his own. He plans to have signature sheets circulated calling for a referendum. He says 25% of the undergraduates must sign for there to be a referendum organized.

Late Senate Action

The Senate voted overwhelmingly last evening to abolish the class government system at the University. The resolution sets up a number of committees which will fill the void thus created and which will operate through the Student Senate. Details will be included in tomorrow's Collegian.

Former Senator Bill Perkins, (below) head of the Student Senate transit service, addresses the Student Senate, explaining the need for the Senate to purchase a highway type bus. $13,000 was appropriated for the purpose at last evening's meeting. The new bus will be used for off-campus trips made by student organizations.

Senator Larry Ladd, (left) urges the Senate to "deal with realities" in considering paying salaries to committee chairmen and each Senator. He fears the Senators would be "Wringing their own necks" if they approve any more salaries at this time.

MDC Elects New Officers

The staff of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian unanimously elected Richard C. Hanson as Editor-in-Chief and David D. Williams as Managing Editor.

Also newly elected were John Mullen, Business Manager; Anne Stadnicki, News Editor; Barry Rubenstein, Executive Editor; and Earle Barroll, Sports Editor. The elections were approved by the publishing board, all positions becoming effective immediately.

Mark Silverman, out-going managing editor, nominated Peter Pascarelli, out-going Editor in chief, to the position of Editor Emeritus.

Accepting his position, Hanson expressed gratitude for "the help that I have received from Mark and Peter for preparing me for the responsibilities ahead."

Mr. Alvin Oickle, Technical Advisor to the Collegian, commended the services of Silverman and Pascarelli, and called this past year "the smoothest I have seen in the six years I've been associated with the paper."

1500 U.S. Marines Landed Off Coast Of S. Vietnam

SAIGON (AP) The United States has placed a landing force of 1,500 Marines armed with artillery and tanks off South Vietnam's northern coast to counter a possible North Vietnamese thrust in retaliation for the Laos incursion, it was learned Thursday.

South Vietnamese forces penetrated 25 miles into southern Laos on Wednesday and seized the major enemy supply center of Sepone, apparently against little resistance.

Battle tested Leathernecks of the 3rd Division, which operated along the DMZ until it was withdrawn from South Vietnam in 1969, are reported standing off the northern coast on ships of the 7th Fleet.

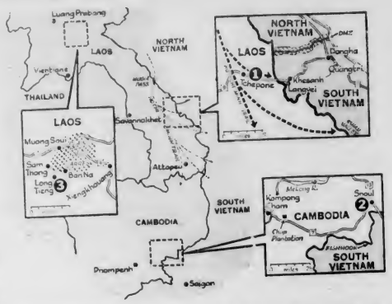
The U.S. Command said it would have no comment.

The Laos operation raised fears of a massive North Vietnamese attack against U.S. troops across the DMZ and Vice President Nguyen Cao Ky said South Vietnamese forces might invade the North to cut off the enemy's rear supply bases.

Hanoi is believed to have elements of three divisions inside North Vietnam within marching distance of the DMZ.

Sepone, a main transshipment point and operations base on the Ho Chi Minh trail, was the first major objective of the drive into Laos. It had been bombed heavily and was reported almost deserted earlier.

The South Vietnamese [illegible] also blew up two large ammunition dumps on the drive to Sepone.



In other developments:

A South Vietnamese helicopter carrying four civilian news photographers was shot down Wednesday over the Ho Chi Minh trail in Laos, apparently killing them and seven other persons aboard. Among them were three of the best known combat photographers Indochina war - Henri Huet, 43, of The Magazine, and Kent Potter, 24, of United Press International.

The Cambodian government said Premier Lon Nol is ill and doctors have ordered him to suspend all official duties temporarily. A source close to the premier's brother said the Cambodian leader was expected to be absent from his duties for about a month.

In Washington, Secretary of State William P. Rogers said U.S. troops remaining in Vietnam after May 1 will be assigned outside the combat area. "I don't want to say they will be totally out of a combat role," he told newsmen, "but for all major combat assignments they will be out."

The South Vietnamese reported that after reaching Sepone, the deepest penetration in the three day old offensive, South Vietnamese engineers began rebuilding the town's abandoned dirt airstrip.

Advance Saigon units were reported 15 miles inside Laos (1). South Vietnamese on a similar sweep in Cambodia came under heavy attack near Snoul (2). Communist forces in northern Laos were increasing pressure on the Government's base at Long Tieng (3).

GIs Seen Undisturbed By Widening Of War

KHE SANH, Vietnam (AP)-The GI sat on an armored personnel carrier, watching South Vietnamese troops moving past, heading toward the Laotian border.

"I just hope we don't have to go in and bail them out," he said. Other Americans there echoed his view.

They appeared unperturbed about the latest widening of the Indochina war. Their role was to be mostly in support of the South Vietnamese invasion force.

In addition, there seemed among many GIs to be a quickening of morale, perhaps because they were out and moving around, rather than sitting around at Quang Tri or in their fire bases along the demilitarized zone dividing the two Vietnams.

Most Americans questioned said they felt the move to invade Laos was sound militarily and that U.S. participation was justified.

A few Americans in the 1st Brigade, 5th Mechanized Division said they hoped the South Vietnamese "make out okay," but the main theme that ran through their conversation was, "I'm glad it's them, not us."

The same attitude had prevailed from the moment that the American part of the operation began Jan. 30, with a massive move toward this formerly abandoned combat base on a mountain plateau in western Quang Tri Province.

There was apprehension, for Khe Sanh was known as "bad Charlie country" and the vanguard U.S. elements feared they would be greeted by North Vietnamese mortars.

On the eve of this operation, a platoon leader took his men to a special Roman Catholic Mass at the Quang Tri base chapel.

There was a long waiting line for telephone calls to the United States on the special military radio system. The men were not allowed to tell their families about the operation, but one explained, "I just wanted to tell my wife not to worry regardless of the news in the next few days."

The division, which is providing more than half of the 9,000 Americks involved, has a primary mission of watching the demilitarized zone and takes most of its casualties by mine blasts rather than pitched battles with the enemy.

The men had been confined to the Quang Tri Army base, a bleak complex of buildings with few of the conveniences found at larger installations, and at outposts along the DMZ and the western piedmont.

In the dry season, they choke on dust; in the monsoons they bog down in mud.

FIRE SUPPORT BASE INSIDE LAOS--South Vietnamese Army guns are lined up for firing at a fire support base Monday about 10 miles inside Laos.

After May 1

U.S. Troops To Be Assigned Outside Of Combat Area

WASHINGTON (AP)—Secretary of State William P. Rogers said Wednesday U.S. troops remaining in Vietnam after May 1 will be assigned outside the combat area.

"I don't want to say they will be totally out of a combat role," he told newsmen, "but for all major combat assignments they will be out."

Rogers gave this response under questioning prompted by word from the White House Tuesday that 40,000 to 50,000 American combat troops would be remaining in Vietnam as of May 1, the date when total U.S. military strength there is to be reduced to 284,000.

Other U.S. informants indicated that the number of fighting men still on hand in the Southeast Asian nation would number 100,000 or more. Just what the count is depends on how one defines functions.

Rogers said the main job of the remaining troops would be to protect American forces, so at times they might be involved in fighting if these forces are attacked. But the policy is to have the South Vietnamese carry the major combat role, he said.

The secretary of state spoke at an unscheduled news conference when he officially opened a new press room at the State Department. He named it the McCloskey Room after the Department's longtime spokesman, Robert J. McCloskey.

Abba Eban Calls On Egypt To Lift Ceasefire Deadline

Israeli Foreign Minister Abba Eban called on Egypt Wednesday to lift its 30 day deadline on the latest Middle East cease fire and urged it to take a second look at Premier Golda Meir's Suez Canal proposals before turning them down.

Eban told a news conference that the March 7 limit imposed by Egyptian President Anwar Sadat does not create the proper atmosphere for free and fruitful talks on the complex issues at stake.

The foreign minister said Cairo spokesman Mahmoud Hafez acted "precipitatedly" on Tuesday in asserting that Mrs. Meir had turned down Sadat's proposals for reopening the Suez Canal.

Hafez also rejected Mrs. Meir's counterproposal that Israel and Egypt agree to a mutual cutback of their forces along the canal. The de-escalation suggestion of Israel's premier had been viewed by many as a bid to meet Egypt halfway on its demands for a partial Israeli pullback before opening the canal again.

"The Egyptian government is now in a position as a result of recent Israeli initiatives to move the situation positively forward," Eban said.

He said that Egypt could help current Middle East negotiations along by naming Israel specifically in any peace proposals and beginning talks on reopening the Suez Canal with less stress on the military aspect and more on its service to international shipping.

Tate Witness Tells Jury Of Threats

LOS ANGELES (AP)-Susan Atkins, who confessed Tuesday to killing actress Sharon Tate, told a jury Wednesday she was threatened with the gas chamber if she didn't testify before the county grand jury.

Speaking calmly, the slender, 22 year old brunette said her grand jury testimony "wasn't freely and voluntarily given because I had so much pressure coming from so many different places".

Sen. Aikens Proposes New Asian Peace Plan

WASHINGTON (AP)—Sen. George D. Aiken proposed Wednesday that the Southeast Asian nations undertake a new effort to bring peace to Indochina by convening their own international conference, in Asia.

The Vermonter who is dean of Senate Republicans said the prolonged war and accompanying political conflict have made impossible any solution by the American President and Congress, even assuming they could agree on something.

He told the Senate "Congress will rightfully rebel" at repeated administration requests at six month intervals "for large subsidies for Indochina without any new justification."

In calling for a conference, he said "the day has passed when the major problems of Asia can be settled in some European city, where the Soviet Union and the Western powers enjoy a protocol status far in excess of their real influence.

"The time has come for nations to recognize that formal peace among the parties in Indochina will only come as a result of agreement among themselves," he added. "It cannot be imposed by others." Secretary of State William P. Rogers gave tacit endorsement to Aiken's proposal when he told newsmen that the United States would welcome almost any sort of international conference set up to bring peace in Indochina. But he said Communist parties to the dispute have rejected suggestions for such conferences in the past.

Aiken suggested that New Delhi, India, could "replace Geneva as the place where Asian problems are discussed and, hopefully, resolved," and that participants could include Indian, Japan, Communist China and the Soviet Union.

"I cannot believe that Russia has of late had a vested interest in keeping up the conflict in Indochina," he said.

L.A. Feels Aftershocks Of Quakes

LOS ANGELES (AP)-The toll of dead continue to rise and property damage mounted into the hundreds of millions Wednesday as Southern California continued to quiver from aftershocks of Tuesday's devastating earthquake.

Workers searched the ruins of a veterans hospital where the bodies of 27 patients and employes had been found. They said 13 persons still are missing. In all, authorities tallied 46 deaths, nine by heart attack. More than 1,000 persons were injured.

Fears of a rupture in the cracked dam of the city's largest reservoir eased as the water level fell, due to draining. The 80,000 persons evacuated from the area were not allowed to return but officials said only a powerful new shock could cause trouble.

Vice President Spiro T. Agnew, sent here for consultations and an inspection tour after President Nixon declared California a disaster area, arrived for a helicopter look at hard hit areas with Gov. Ronald Reagan and Mayor Sam Yorty.

Attention centered on the VA hospital at Sylmar in the west end of the San Fernando Valley just 10 miles from the quake's center. Some 250 workmen probed the steel and concrete rubble of two collapsed three story ward buildings.

Well over 100 patients and employes were inside when the 6:01 a.m. temblor shook the 45 year old structure apart. Scores were injured and additional scores trapped. For nearly 24 hours moans and cries came from victims trapped alive. Many injured were extricated and flown by helicopter to other hospitals.

Authorities said there was little chance of additional survivors.

Aftershocks by the hundreds emanated from the region of the quake's center in the San Gabriel Mountains 26 miles north west. A dozen or more fairly strong ones kept the area jiggling Wednesday but caused no new damage. Magnitudes of the stronger shocks were around 5 on the Richter scale, compared with 6.6 for the first.

Authorities began the massive job of assessing damage, most of it within a 40 mile radius of the quake's center.

Los Angeles County estimated damage to public facilities at $125 million. It had no estimate of damage to private structures but said the toll would be high. The city made a preliminary estimate of $186 million for homes and businesses plus additional "tens of millions" for public facilities. The California Division of Highways reckoned $15 million damage to state roads, much of it attributed to collapsed bridges and freeway overpasses.

Utilities suffered damages estimated in the tens of millions. A city spokesman said there have been nearly 2,500 requests for building inspections and more than 100 structures have been found unfit for occupancy.

SIDEWALK CLOSED AFTER LOS ANGELES QUAKE—Policemen close off a sidewalk after earthquake damage to a downtown Los Angeles department store early today. The jolting temblur was felt over miles of southern California, but damage was worst in and around Los Angeles. Several deaths were reported.

Boston Protest Draws 4,000

BOSTON (AP)-Sporadic incidents of violence broke out Wednesday afternoon as a crowd of about 4,000 persons left an anti-war rally on the Boston Common and marched nearly two miles to Northeastern University.

The generally peaceful march, which bottled up rush hour traffic along several of the city's main arteries, was marked by isolated instances of window breaking and rock throwing, but police reported no arrests or injuries.

The ranks of the demonstrators, swept by icy winds, thinned rapidly after the procession paused at Copley Square, then moved on. Less than 500 remained by the time the procession broke up at Northeastern.

Windows in at least two banks were smashed during the march, and police said more glass was smashed at the Hemenway Hotel in a disturbance shortly after the march ended. Police said one officer was struck by a rock.

The rally, called to protest the incursion of South Vietnamese troops into Laos and the continuing U.S. involvement in the Indochina War, drew about 4,000 people to a site on the Common in front of the State House.

Groups of several hundreds of demonstrators marched to the rally from locations in Cambridge and Boston without incident.

Speakers called for withdrawal of U.S. troops and presented what they called a "declaration of peace" between the people of Massachusetts and Southeast Asia.

There were few police at the rally site, all of them in routine duty uniforms, but riot equipped officers and units of the Tactical Police Force were stationed at various points along the march route afterwards.

In Amherst, some 50 students from local colleges in the area held a brief rally on the town common to protest the war.

In Hanover, N.H., Dartmouth College president John Kemeny and his daughter, Jennie, a high school senior, attended a rally on the college green with about 200 Dartmouth students and faculty members.

Following the rally, petitions were distributed calling for an immediate halt to American involvement in Southeast Asia.

Kemeny did not address the crowd.

In Concord, N.H., about 200 persons, mostly students from area colleges, rallied for about an hour at the State House Plaza. A peace banner was hoisted on an empty flagpole.

After the rally, the demonstrators marched to the Federal Building, where about 130 held a sit-in for about an hour at the Army recruiting office. State and local police looked on. No arrests were made.

In Montpelier, Vt., about 150 persons, mostly young, rallied in front of the State House, distributed leaflets and staged an anti-war play. The leaflets called for an immediate U.S. and South Vietnamese ceasefire.

There were no incidents or arrests.

Astros Returning Home, Health Reported Good

ABOARD USS NEW ORLEANS (AP)-The Apollo 24 astronauts, described as "perfectly okay," cruised across a remote stretch of the South Pacific Wednesday toward Samoa and an airlift home.

Astronauts Alan B. Shepard Jr., Edgar D. Mitchell and Stuart A. Roosa underwent extensive medical examinations inside the trailer like isolation van where they are quarantined. The van is secured on a deck of this prime recovery ship.

A space agency physician, Dr. William R. Garner, said the astronauts were "medically perfectly okay and no major medical problems have showed up."

The astronauts are isolated with another physician, Dr. William Carpentier, and an engineer, R. H. Culbertson.

Carpentier started a long series of medical examinations and tests shortly after the astronauts guided their command ship Kitty Hawk to an on target landing 897 miles south of Samoa on Tuesday.

The astronauts will remain quarantined to prevent the spread of any moon germ they may have brought back from the lunar surface. They will remain aboard the isolation van, called a Mobile Quarantine Facility-MQF-until early Thursday morning.

The spacemen then will put on isolation garments and face masks, walk across a ship deck cleared of other people, and board a helicopter. They will be flown to Pago Pago, American Samoa,and there get into an MQF aboard an Air Force C141 jet transport.

The transport will fly the spacemen to Ellington Air Force Base, near the Manned Spacecraft Center. Arrival is expected about 1 a.m. EST Friday.

From the airport, the astronauts will be transported by truck aboard the MQF to the Lunar Receiving Laboratory, where they will remain in quarantine until Feb. 26.

Kitty Hawk, the command ship of Apollo 14, was plucked from the Pacific shortly after the astronauts arrived aboard. The spacecraft, blackened from its scorching return to earth, was secured just in front of a door of the MQF. Culbertson entered the spacecraft through a plastic tunnel from the MQF and labeled boxes and bags holding the 95 pounds of moon rocks gathered by Shepard and Mitchell.

Half of the moon material will arrive at the Lunar Receiving Laboratory Thursday, ahead of the astronauts, and the rest is expected on Friday.

Scientists believe the Apollo 14 material may be the most important yet collected on the moon.

During their long stay in the Lunar Receiving Laboratory at the space center, Shepard, Roosa and Mitchell will spend hours talking with other astronauts, engineers and scientists about their nine day 1.16 million mile voyage.

Mystery Girl Identified

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP)-"Mystery Girl," whose nude body was found propped against a tree in coastal Wells last month, has been identified as Miss Constance Corcione, 20, of Lynn, Mass., the attorney general's office reported Wednesday.

Asst. Atty. Gen. Richard S. Cohen, chief of the criminal division, told a news conference the girl was identified through an artist's sketch and description distributed throughout New England by the news media.

He declined comment on who made the identification and if there were any suspects.

A medical examiner had ruled the young woman died of asphyxiation induced by a severe beating about the lower abdomen.

Draft Counselor's Corner

Draft Experts Dehumanizing Force

By GILBERT J. SALK

A couple of quick flashes.....

If any of you are interested in learning enough about the Selective Service System to help counsel your brothers, Draft Counseling Services is offering a counselor training course starting at 7:00 tonight and running for four consecutive Thursday evenings. There is a five dollar charge to cover the cost of materials, but there are subsidies for those who are short on cash. Just think–if you pass, you won't have to read this column any more. How's that for a bonus. Come to 804 Campus Center.

Looking for some relevance from church? You might want to try out an experimental service being offered at 12:15 this afternoon in the old Student Union Bookstore near the Hatch. It's called Jesus Christ Revolutionary. You might dig it.

I want to say a few things about my philosophy as a draft counselor. If you've been reading this column with any regularity, you must know that I am extremely partial to the Conscientious Objector position. This is in part because I am a pacifist, but there are other reasons as well.

My personal opposition to the draft as an institution is based on the simple fact that it exerts a dehumanizing influence on nearly every registrant. Even those who never get drafted have their choices limited to some degree by the fact that they carry a draft card around. Many of you are probably in school because it represents a temporary respite from the draft. If you've ever considered leaving school for a semester or two, you've had to confront the problem of losing your student deferment.

Most of you were, or will be in July, glued in front of a radio or TV on Lottery Night to see what your number would be. (Ever read a short story called The Lottery? Look it up.) Before job deferments were ended, people chose carreers on the basis of deferable occupations. Folks get dangerously overweight to beat the draft, or otherwise threaten their health. Mental Health will tell you that the draft is a major contributing factor in student anxiety (real, not just faked for an upcoming physical.)

The worst effect of the draft, of course, is on those who go in and come back missing limbs, or paralyzed, or psychologically destroyed.

So my primary purpose in draft counseling is to get people free of that destructive system. I put a stipulation on it, however. I consider self-destruction and/or dehumanization to be nearly as bad as the draft itself, so I insist on using outs that are honest to the integrity of the individual involved. If he has a legitimate medical problem, fine. I will gladly help him document it and use it to get a I-Y or IV-F. If he has a legitimate hardship situation, I will help him present that to his board so he can get a III-A. The same is true for any other deferment. If a counselee has more than one course of action, I'll help him understand his choices so he can make the best decision.

The important point is that I want to make it possible to make a decision free of the influence of the draft to as great a degree as I can manage. To try to restore a small degree of choice, if you will. My CO bias, then, is primarily due to the fact that every CO statement is an individual testament of belief. It is honest, thought out, and personal, and it forces the entire Selective Service System to stop and pay attention to the individual as an individual. It takes you out of your role as a computer card and lets you be a human being for a while. Try it. It's fun. Peace.

Questions to this column should be addressed to Gilbert J. Salk, c/o Draft Counseling Services RSO #395, Campus Center, Univ. of Mass., Amherst, Mass. 01002.

Nixon Seeks Aid In Pollution Fight

WASHINGTON (AP)–President Nixon sent Congress Wednesday a whopping package of legislation needed to attain his environmental goals.

The bulky proposals more than a dozen bills on three pounds of paper, with a few others still awaiting delivery included a $6 billion request to fight water pollution and new programs to combat ocean dumping and noise. They would implement the wide ranging environment program proposed by Nixon in a special message two days ago.

Most of Nixon's proposals center on two main concerns: preventing and reducing water pollution, and environmentally beneficial use of the nation's land.

As promised in his fiscal 1972 budget, Nixon asked Congress to increase federal aid for construction of municipal waste treatment facilities from $1 billion this year to $2 billion a year for the next three years, with greater federal discretion to send the money where it is most needed, in general the big cities.

A companion bill would establish an Environmental Financing Authority to underwrite municipal bond issues with federal bonds, to raise municipal matching funds.

Another bill would expand existing federal state water quality standards from coverage of interstate waters to virtually all U.S. waters and bring them under federal guidelines. Citizens could sue for compliance.

Matching that effort is a bill to triple federal aid to state and regional water pollution control programs.

To protect the oceans, coastal waters and Great Lakes, Nixon proposed to ban waste dumping in such areas without a federal permit. The Environmental Protection Agency could ban dumping of specific substances considered dangerous to the environment or human welfare.

Land use legislation included one antipollution bill, calling for state or federal regulation of mining operations. Other proposals concerned actual uses of land: a major new bill would call for state or federal certification of power plants and transmission lines.

UMass Fraternity Awards Scholarship To Teacher

UMass Chapter of Phi Delta Kappa, an international fraternity has awarded its annual scholarship of $150 to Mr. Pierre P. Barrette, a chemistry teacher at South Hadley High School. This amount is matched by the recipient's school system to make the total amount $300.

The checks were presented to Mr. Barrette by Mr. Gerald Hoar, Superintendent of Schools of South Hadley, and Dr. Thomas Bernard of Mount Holyoke College who is president of UMass Chapter of Phi Delta Kappa. This scholarship cash award is for the immediate implementation of an innovative educational idea.

Mr. Barrette's project, a Mediated Interaction Visual Response System (MIVRS) was selected in competition from applicants in Western Mass. The project involves using student operated overhead projectors to monitor learning. By proper switching, the teacher can observe and assess individual performances and consequentially apply a variety of curricular strategies.

February 10, 1965

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1965

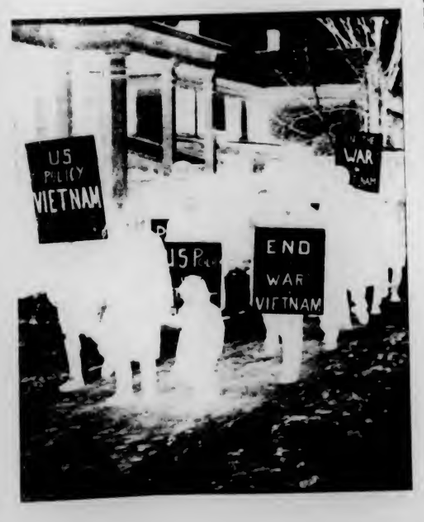
The Collegian headline read "YOUNG INDEPENDENTS MARCH FOR VIETNAM PROTEST". The story told of a group called the "Young Independents" who marched "to Amherst center in protest against U.S. policy in Vietnam."

"UMass students, faculty members, representatives of the Society of Friends and Amherst students carried placards calling for an end to the Vietnamese war...Despite a sleet storm there were 23 participants," said the Collegian story.

The goals of the Young Independents were straight forward and teeming with the idealism of a struggle just underway: "Is there any morally valid reason for the deaths of hundreds of Americans and thousands of Vietnamese... (we) advocate a neutral settlement of the Vietnam problem as the only morally and politically valid solution."

The Collegian ran no editorial about the protest march. The great 'moral question' of the day was, according to a Collegian editorial written that day, the "grade changing debacle." There were two "letters to the editor" printed concerning the march.

One, by a Grad Student named Robert W. Topp told the campus that the distribution of leaflets in the Student Union should not be allowed; such actions were detrimental to "freedoms" he pointed out. The other letter was by Sheldon Kelley '67, who countered Mr. Topp's letter by quoting Voltaire's "I defend your right to say it" bit.



There was no campus outburst to support the students and faculty who were expressing their moral indignation at an immoral military involvement in an obscure corner of the world. Think back people. What were you thinking that stormy February day?

* * * * *

Yesterday, about 150 people marched to the Amherst Common to protest the recent invasion of Laos by American-supported South Vietnamese troops. It was cold. The commons was choked with recent snows. Six years to the day from the first anti-war protest on campus.

The politics and foreign policy of a nation have never been based on morality. Perhaps the greatest lesson of the last six years is that U.S. politics and policies are profoundly amoral. And still, after the tumultuous years between the first march and yesterday's there are some people who have not "stopped marching."

We call on this University community to search its soul about the recent events in Southeast Asia. It is your monies and power which drops tons of explosives from B-52 Stratofortresses. We are all inescapably tied to the actions of the nation we live in.

Publish Or Perish

It seems unfortunate, to me at least, that publish or perish is the cry heard all over a university campus when deans and department heads go head-hunting. This is not to say that any deans or department heads are after Mike Best's scalp, because I really don't know who is doing it, but what I do know is that he is in fact losing his job. And I think that UMass students and Prof. Best himself deserve, if not an explanation, which Best rightly merits, but also an apology.

I never took an economics course, nor do I ever intend to. But I would be remiss in my responsibilities as a student if I didn't register my outrage over Best's terminal contract. All I can ask is why? I've spoken to several former students of his; they had nothing but praise for him. Also, I've seen the letters and the circulars that people have shoved under my nose for me to comment upon.

When Best was interviewed in the MDC offices last week, he said the University had told him his contract wasn't being renewed because of a lack of "sufficient creative research." Best has been here for three semesters and feels that his teaching comes first. He is more interested in contemporary economics than in, say, the Stock Market crash of 1929. He feels he has succeeded in reaching a vast majority of his students and his students evidently feel he has too. So again, I ask-, no, demand-Why?

But to turn to other matters.

The groundhog that peeps out of his hole on February 2, named Punxatawney Phil by his devotees, predicted six more weeks of winter. Normally, this wouldn't bother me as I don't really care what the weather is like. I'm agreeable to just about anything that falls out of the sky, but I could feel over the weekend the first hints of jacket weather.

Everybody has his own ideas about spring-time. Mine were carefully nurtured and developed during my early days because my parents were anxious for me to be aware of things around me. As soon as the snow cover was gone, we would go off for long walks in the woods, just looking at things and watching. The one thing that remained the strongest in my memory about those walks was the smell of the earth slowly drying out from the snow. Sort of a fresh, stuffy, sweet smell; the smell of the earth.

Last week on Orchard Hill, leaning out of a window early in the morning, I could smell that smell again. Too bad it snowed, I was beginning to feel like Tom Rush who got the urge for goin'.

Tuition: The Real Issue

(Reprinted-Allston-Brighton Citizen Item, 1/21/71)

Massachusetts residents who have children in state-supported colleges and universities, and those who expect to within the next decade, would do well to keep an eye on the State Legislature in the coming months.

There is a good deal of sentiment on Beacon Hill to raise the tuition at community colleges, state colleges and the University of Massachusetts. It is our opinion that although some increases are obviously required, rash action by the Legislature in a penny-pinching year could do serious harm to our state's public educational system.

Considering the straits of private universities, the increasing costs of higher education and the new premuse that nearly everyone must have a college degree in order to "get ahead" in this world, all of us must pin our hopes to a growing and vibrant state educational system. Is more money needed in order to equip the state colleges for this challenge? Obviously. But should tuition income serve as a major contributor to the needed growth? Absolutely not.

The State Board of Higher Education last Friday released a report on the level of tuitions at Massachusetts Institutions of higher learning, comparing them with national figures. According to the study, the median outlay for tuition and fees for students in colleges belonging to the American Association of State Colleges and Universities has increased from $200 in 1962 to $350 in 1970. In Massachusetts, the median charge for tuition and fees has risen from $200 in 1961 to $250 in 1970. So Massachusetts can still be considered a sort of "bargain" in state edueation circles.

However, some proposals before the Legislature may make this "bargain" something else again. Senator David Locke of Wellesley thinks that tuition at state institutions should be raised from the present $200 per year to $700. But, the State Board of Higher Education study, casting ahead to the 1975-76 school year, found that just a $100 tuition increase would divert 3,910 young people from the state system "for economic reasons." What effect would a $500 increase have on the number of young people planning to enter the state system next year, or the year after that?

The plan supported by the Senate President, Kevin Harrington of Salem, is keyed to an increase by way of "a sliding scale"--Harrington wants to apply a "means test" to students and charge them, according to their ability to pay, up to a level equaling the cost to the state per pupil. Reports we have read in the daily press show community colleges with a per pupil cost of $1,123; state colleges with $1,413 and all campuses of the University of Massachusetts at $2,543. We would like Senator Harrington to show how practical such a "means test" would be with tuitions reaching these levels, considering the fact that the state study claims 44 per cent of state college freshmen came from families in the lowest income quartile (quarter?) and only 19 per cent came from the highest quartile.

Obviously, tuition increases of some kind are needed in our state system. The state study says, "if tuition is thought of as representing some 'fair share' of the per student cost of public education,...the percentage of such costs covered by tuition has declined from 13.6 per cent in 1960 to a 1970 level of 14 per cent. Projecting costs to 1975, the percentage would be 9 per cent of such costs covered by tuition and 7 per cent in 1980. In order to maintain even the present 14 per cent, share of such costs, tuitions must be raised to at least $320 by 1975 and $390 by 1980.

However, the study also said that student tuition and fees in state colleges have not been set as equal to any fixed percentage operating costs. Instead, tuition charges have historically been set at low levels to encourage college attendance by students who could not afford it otherwise.

That's the nub of it, to us. Before our state Legislature fixes any new tuition rates for its system of higher education, it should decide what the mission of this system is. Is the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in the business of education merely to accomodate people who cant afford private colleges, or is it sincerely interested in raising the potential of its citizens? Does Massachusetts operate a public college system simply because that is expected of any state these days, or does it seek to provide the very best at the very lowest cost?

Massachusetts has always been quite impressed by itself and its educational institutions. Unfortunately, the educational institutions that have inspired this pride have all been privately founded and underwritten. Such backward provinces as Michigan, Illinois, Washington and California didn't have a Harvard giving them reflected glory--so they had to go to work and build their own excellent state educational systems. Now, Massachusetts is playing a catch-up game, while the private colleges slide further and further out of reach of the average citizen.

The men on Beacon Hill who seek to adjust state college tuition levels this year have a financial problem of no mean proportions on their hands. But, as they seek the solution, we strongly suggest they remember this state's tragic error over the past three hundred years of leaning too heavily on private educational systems. This state's first responsibility is to its young people, and they need higher education desperately. They should not be turned away by public education, because it has already been shown that the private school will not, and can not, take them in.

Next time you meet your local representative or senator, ask him what HIS feelings are on public higher education. Listen to him carefully, because the way he and his colleagues on Beacon Hill vote on the state college tuition issue may go well beyond dollars and cents, right into the philosophy of education in Massachusetts.

Is Anybody Out There?

As you know if you read the other pages of this publication, the Collegian has just undergone a change in leadership. Since the new editors are obviously lacking the experience of their predecessors, certain problems necessarily arise. Among the more important of these for this group is determining what to print.

This is especially a dilemma for the editorial page since it is that body of the newspaper which should reflect student thoughts and opinions. Therefore, we are urging you, the readers, to let us know what you think about the things you read in the paper: are they good, bad, indifferent-whatever. To do this just drop by the office, leave a note, or call. It's your paper and we'd like to make it what you want it to be.

Letters to the Editor must be typed, double spaced, at sixty spaces and must carry the writer's signature, address, and telephone number (all of which will be withheld upon request). The limit is one page and the deadline is 5 p.m. the day prior to intended publication. The editors reserve the right to edit all letters.

Feather-Bedding Anyone?

To The Editor:

Ours is a nation (or better, a system) predicated on the principle of feather-bedding. If business were really gotten down to, if industrial efficiency techniques were applied to the machinery of government, to the organization of business itself, easily some 80% of us could be out of work. It is easily reckoned that 80% of jobs that exist aren't needed anyway. Look at the educational system - a student in 7th grade English bored doing the same things he was "taught" in the 6th and most likely 5th grade, so that he will "learn" them well enough to do them again next year.

Walk down any dime-store (if you can find one, these days of the 5¢ bubblegum) aisle, and note the many brands, duplications all of each other's mass produced shoddy goods, most of which will never find their ways into the homes of even the most unwitting consumer. This is our luxury!

Without the overproduction and inefficient uses of time, manpower and resources that exist, easily half the garbage men and janitors, not to mention the sanitation engineers, could retire to more interesting employment (except in Chicago, where it is rumored that garbage collecting has more than its share of political influence).

If cars were made, 1. to order, 2. well enough to last, 3. in proportion to the need in any given year, and 4. with minimal thought to competition and idiotic advertising, one company, maybe two working comfortably would certainly suffice to meet the nation's desires, not to mention its needs. Solutions and/or substitutions are not difficult, even for this meager mind. Take the secretary, holder of a position (like the office of vice-president) based on the theory of "back-up" and *c&%-work. All those letters could certainly be scribbled longhand by the writer him(her) self, undoubtedly reeking havoc upon established grammar conventions, but certain to cut the typical correspondence gobbledygook; and putting time and convenience in proper perspective. Computerize the filing, let the husbands buy their own gifts.

Ahh, feather-bedding! The unions know; they protect some of the top feather bedding award candidates (recall the railroads). Even air transportation. Flights less than one-third full flapping over the countryside, which inordinantly mean sooner or later, a rise in consumer prices, or otherwise those same air companies would no longer be able to make those 1/3 filled flights, any more than the car companies or the appliance companies, or the grocers would be able to do all the things they do too much of in the first place.

And then the Common Man, poor guy, is led to believe of the "goodness," the "righteousness" of his working a "civilized" 9 to 5, because that's the American Way! FOR WHAT??????? It's already been done, around the corner, down the street, across the nation. Would it not be better to romp out, discover, enjoy the separateness, the uniqueness defined by one's own sensitivities, that life offers, and to work at things which meld more readily with the need to accomplish - to be real in an otherwise plastic/cracked world?

Patricia M. Emerson (Mrs.)

In Defense of Mike Best

To The Editor:

As a former student of Professor Michael Best I feel it both important and necessary to speak in his behalf in this open letter. It would be an injustice to this entire University as well as to Professor Best if the issues leading up to and encompassing his terminal reappointment were allowed to remain solely in the hands of the administrators.

It is my opinion that the principal function and obligation of this University is to provide for the education and specialization of its students. We have come to a point at which we must decide whether we want to pretend that we are taught by faculty who have no frame of reference and therefore teach purely from an objective standpoint, or we must admit and realize that every faculty member has a viewpoint which he must incorporate within any honest and useful presentation concerning his field. Professor Best does not hide his frame of reference in economic terminology, nor does he overlook that which he disagrees with and feels relevent to his field. For this he should be commended, not condemned.

I was fortunate to have Michael Best as an instructor in Economics 125 and I'm certain that many others join myself in relating that it was informative and awakening. I accept him as an excellent teacher as a result of this.

Supposedly his weakness lies in the area of scholarly research. This opinion, however, was derived from what I feel to be incomplete materials and possibly with unfavorable bias. It was stated that an "opportunity cost" was involved, meaning that the University could obtain both a superior teacher and superior researcher within one man in Best's stead. I an not overly familiar with his research, but I do not feel that we may define his potential as "insufficient" simply on the basis of a controvercial opinions concerning his dissertation. The "Publish or Perish" concept seems to be all too true here, and I cannot accept token publication as proof of scholarly ability.

I can, however, accept Professor Best as an excellent teacher. He and his kind are necessary for our time. We cannot become hung up on conservativism in a time that calls for facts. To allow Professor Best to leave the University of Massachusetts without devoted opposition is unacceptable. It is because of this that I ask the head of the Economics Department to give the University further explanation and consideration in the inferior proposal of dismissal. I also ask interested students to sign the petition to keep Professor Best and/or contact me.

ULC Searches For Experiences

To The Editor:

Throughout the history of Western Religion the various churches, representing the various religions, have assumed a responsibility for interpreting for the individual the universe around. The individual was generally believed incapable of directly relating to God, or nature, or death. To not accept the church dogma was to not accept the church which was to not accept the religion, nor God.

The Universal Life Church is not interested in assuming such a weighty responsibility. Thousands of years of existence has not helped man understand what happens to him after death. The secrets of the universe have remained secrets, the ULC believes that each individual can best relate to his surroundings in his or her own private way. We believe in a dogma-free church, open to any and all people, from Hindus to existentialists. Faith is private, action is what directly affects your fellow man, so if a Hindu believes it wrong to strangle babies and an existentialist believes it wrong to strangle babies, where do they disagree?

The ULC is a social religion. We preach the community, ritual, mysticism, altruism, the tribe, and action, reaction and interaction among all brothers and sisters. We preach a community with all the potential differences of individuals accepted and allowed and respected.

God is not necessary to the church. You may relate to a feeling of God and you may relate only to your own physical existence.

And we wish to synthesize East and West, the experience of all mankind. Neither Jesus, nor Budda, nor Muhammed, nor Calvin or Luther, nor Billy Graham can be singled out, pointed to and have said of them, "He! He had the answers!" Accept them all, think of them all and come to your own private understanding.

The ULC, finally, preaches a search for experience, life action: this is why we believe the Hindu and the existentialist can live side by side. The existentialist can join the Hindu's mystical experience and come out of it with a unique feeling about it, a feeling just as meaningful and beautiful as before. The Hindu can feel the despair and anguish of the existentialist and come out with a new, unique blend of East and West.

As long as we all love, think good thoughts, experience, be sensitive to others, we can be individuals.

To The Editor:

I am writing in support of Dr. Michael Best. Economics 125 was one of the best courses that I had last semester, not what I would have expected from a basic course in Economics. I've talked to nearly two hundred students already who have signed the petition now in the Student Mobe office in the Union, and student support for Mike Best is very strong. If the administration fires Dr. Best, they will do so in clear opposition to the students. Every student and faculty member on campus should personally demand an explanation from Dean Alfange in South College to justify Dr. Best's dismissal.

Nick Saakvitne

To The Editor:

I find it difficult to comprehend the recent actions taken by the Economics Dept. against Prof. Best. He has shown in his classes that education for the student is his primary goal. If his interests in the publishing game are subordinate to his desire for a working relationship with his students, then he should have that privilege.

Departments must decide whether or not ".....creative research" is to be prized above conscientious teaching. It is unfortunate that the University's desire for a national reputation must sacrifice its supposed reason for being - education.

Walk For Hunger, Walk For Peace

To The Editor:

Have you ever wondered about the fact that more than two billion people in this world will never be able to develop to their full potential? Have you ever been concerned enough and then frustrated because when you think of the hungry, the malnourished, the illiterate, the people who because of the accident of birth have been destined to remain hopelessly locked into a life of misery with little if any chance of breaking their chains (and then asked why, what can I do, and then come up with nothing?

Well, the road back to righting these wrongs is obviously going to be hard and long, but I want to bring to the attention of the students, faculty and administration of UMass what is going to be happening on the weekend of May 8 & 9 which just may start somethingwhich will be able to start things on the right course. On that weekend, millions of people in more than 50 nations will participate in what just may be the largest outpouring of human support in what is called the International Walk For Development Weekend.

Here in America, there will be something like 400-500 Walks including Walks in every major city in the country. Here in Massachusetts there are already 32 definite Walks with an anticipated total of 40-45. A national publicity campaign is scheduled and many of the networks and wire services will be giving extensive coverage to this worldwide effort.

If you were in this area or maybe in the Greater Boston area last spring maybe you have already heard about the Walk For Development program under the auspices of the American Freedom From Hunger Foundation. Just to refresh some memories, if you think back to just prior to the National Student Strike, about a rather small band of 282 people Walking 26 miles through the rain maybe you have heard about it. Well that Walk netted over $7,200 and although that it is not a huge amount that it'll save the world or anything like that, but it did provide for the extension of the Amherst ABC (A Better Chance) program and it did help build a Peace Corps school in Brazil and Peru, but it did something. This coming Monday night February 15 at 7:30 in Room 811-815 of the Campus Center, we will have the organizational meeting for this year's Amherst Walk for Development. We will further explain the Walk, show a film which deals with the Walk and get things going. Anybody is invited to attend, regardless of age for this is to be a community event. For more information, you can call Moe at 6-9826, Sue at 6-5275 or Mark at 6-5138.

The Hip Bone's Connected To The...

To The Editor:

In the course of our daily hatching, it came to the attention of two aspiring anthropologists that the grim reaper pictured on page 9 of the Feb. 10th edition of the Collegian suffered from some gross anatomical defects. Certainly the grim reaper cannot be a modern man as evinced by his robust super orbital torus. He is by far unique with an extra lengthy sternum to which are attached an unbalanced number of ribs. It is also evident that the left radius is not articulated properly. We would be most curious as to this individual's bipedal locomotion, considering that the right fibula is lateral, as is proper, while the left fibula is medial.

It is also from the cultural evidence associated with him that we are questioning his great antiquity. Anthropologically speaking we question this fellow's evolutionary significance. In the true tradition of Piltdown man, we find the grim reaper to be a hoax.

Program Council Considers Playground, Entertainment

On Wednesday, February 3, the Campus Center Program Council held its first meeting of the spring semester, Howie Bresner, co-chairman of Special Events, reported that contracts for two plays, to be presented this semester, have been mailed.

An Astrology course, taught by Fred Boyajin, will be offered.

Ingrid Belitsky, co-chairwoman of Special Events, reported that the SUG Board was interested in building a playground on the land between the Campus Center, the Student Union, and Hasbrouck. The consensus was that the amount requested would probably be used for a more important program.

John Perkins and Marc Elfman reported that the registration dances were only a partial success. Marc is looking into the possibilities of all-night shows with inexpensive entertainment to be held in March.

The possibility of a more efficient system of distributing Program Council Calendars was discussed. John Cardile, Public Relations chairman, will advertise each month to find out which organizations wish to have their events published on the calendar.

The Crafts Center is requesting $10,000 to expand and increase volume. It will be difficult to allocate funds for the center, but an attempt to do so will be made.

Most of the campus wishes the Program Council to sponsor more activities. It is difficult to do so however, with such a small membership.

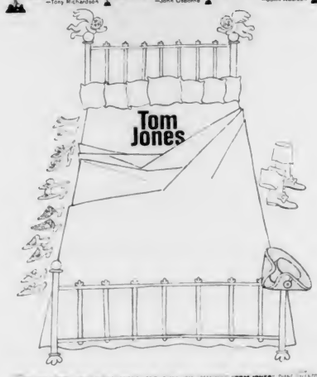
'Glimmering Object' May Be Missing Plane

GLENS FALLS, N.Y. (AP)-A Civil Air Patrol sighting Wednesday of a "glimmering object" in a densely wooded area north of Whiteface Mountain has prompted a ground search on speculation the object could be wreckage of a missing plane.

The plane, a private jet owned by an Atlanta corporation, carried five persons when it disappeared from radar screens Jan. 27.

Wednesday's sighting was passed off by CAP observers as "any of 100 possible different things." But one spokesman said ski patrols would be flown in to the area Thursday morning to conduct a search on the chance the object could be the missing plane.

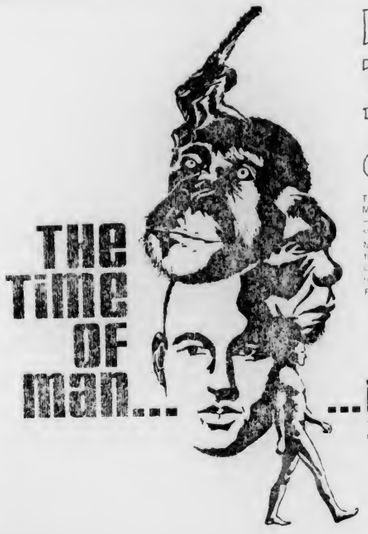
Shepard Goofs In Golf



LONDON (AP)-Moon golfer Alan B. Shepard Jr. got a gentle rap Wednesday from the Royal and Ancient, the ruling body of golf in Britain.

The R and A sent him congratulations for his golf exercise on the moon and also on Apollo 14's success.

Then the R and A suggested: "Please refer to rules of golf on etiquette.



"Before leaving a bunker, a player should carefully fill up holes made by him therein."

THE Time OF man... ...is it endless?

Free
Tonight
7PM
Campus Center Aud.

This CBS color documentary, produced in co-operation with the American Museum of Natural History, examines man's relationship with his environment — where he is headed — and why. Attention is focused on the history of man's struggle for survival by presenting studies of animals and primitive cultures. Man can still learn to control his future by studying his past. By examining the relationships of various animal species to their environments, and the cultures of primitive tribes, leading authorities reconstruct millions of years of evolution.

For example:
- Dr. Margaret Mead revisits her Manus friends
- Dr. Jane Goodall discusses chimpanzee behavior
- Dr. C. Lavett Smith talks about fish communities
- Dr. Ray Charniar Andrews is shown discovering dinosaur eggs
- Dr. Malcolm McKenna relates the stories of whales and dinosaurs
- Dr. Harry Shapiro studies the evolution of populations
- Dr. Colin Turnbull visits the pygmies and more

The Time of Man's message is simple and powerful — if man's time on earth is to be endless, he must maintain the environment that sustains him.

High Fuel Prices May Cause Increase In Electricity Bill

WASHINGTON (AP)-Final figures on swollen 1970 fuel prices paid by electric utilities indicate a growing trend toward higher electricity bills for the nation's consumers.

A nationwide survey, compiled by the American Public Power Association, shows that electric utilities in all regions of the country paid soaring prices for fuel oil, coal and natural gas to operate their generators. In many cases, an Associated Press spot check shows, the higher costs have been passed on to customers as rate increases, or will be passed on soon.

Most of the utilities involved the survey are municipally operated electric power departments. They have been hit harder than many privately owned power companies because they frequently are prohibited by law from negotiating long term fuel contracts and therefore are more susceptible to fluctuations in fuel prices.

Industry and government officials say it is impossible to gauge at this time just how much rising fuel bills have cost in increased electric bills, but many of the increases have been great enough that customers are complaining.

"The average rate increase here has been $2.10 a month and our customers aren't taking it very well at all," said Ludovic Long, superintendent of electric utilities in Freeport, N.Y. Freeport's fuel oil costs rose 162 per cent in the last seven months of 1970 from $2.02 to $5.62 a barrel.

"It's ridiculous," Long said in an interview. "You might as well buy gold." Long said he was told earlier by several oil companies that prices were going up because of a severe shortage of fuel oil. "Now they're telling us-now that the price is way up there-that there isn't too much of a shortage any more," he said. "But they say we'll be paying these prices for at least five years."

The Glendale, Calif., Public Service Department was hit with fuel oil price increases that hiked prices to 252 per cent of what they were a year ago. So far, according to Assistant General Manager Howard Gulick, consumers' electricity rate increases have been held to 6 to 7 per cent, but more are in the offing.

In Vero Beach, Fla., the municipal utility has no fuel adjustment clause, but is considering invoking one. City Manager James Pride says 1970 fuel oil costs were up 30 per cent and natural gas prices up 20 per cent.

"We haven't got the legal means to pass it on in utility rate increases, so we've just had to eat it" Pride said. "But if these increases continue much longer, past July, we'll have to ask for a fuel adjustment clause. We can't eat these costs forever."

Entrepreneur Jailed In New Jersey

NEW YORK (AP)-A New Jersey financier was sentenced to two years in prison and fined $50,000 in federal court Wednesday for conspiring in an elaborate scheme that won him control of a $50 million conglomerate.

Lewis L. Colasurdo, 55, of Hammonton, N.J., was sentenced by Judge Dudley B. Bonsal.

Another defendant, Everett A. Wharl, 40, an accountant of Lenox, Mass., was sentenced to a year in prison and fined $30,000. He formerly lived in Short Hills, N.J.

Two other defendants-Michael J. McLaney, 50, of Miami, Fla., and Anthony Cipo, 57, of Hammonton-were given $10,000 fines, suspended sentences and two years probation.

Bonsal permitted all the defendants to remain free and delayed payment of the fines pending appeals.

They were convicted Dec. 14 on charges of conspiring to use the assets of Crescent Corp. to get control of the conglomerate for Colasurdo and others. Colasurdo allegedly got 32 per cent of Crescent's stock for $6.5 million, giving him control by permitting him to appoint four of the seven directors.

The indictment alleged that the defendants made deals including sale of a 25,000 acre blueberry patch in New Jersey to Crescent through two sham corporations, thus diverting $2 million to Colasurdo, who used it to buy Crescent stock.

Muskie Lauds Nixon, Almost

WASHINGTON (AP)-Sen. Edmund Muskie, D Maine, Wednesday applauded what he called President Nixon's laudable goals to protect the environment but said the President's budget doesn't contain the cash to meet his otherwise praiseworthy objectives.

Commenting on the President's recent environmental message, Muskie said he welcome's Nixon's "warning that the program he is proposing will require some adjustment at all levels, by the industrial and business community and by Americans as individual citizens."

But, he said, "I am disappointed, however, that the President's budget requests for environmental programs will not be adequate to implement these otherwise laudable goals or to meet levels authorized by the Congreee last year.

BOSTON (AP) - U.S. District Court Judge Charles E. Wyzanski Wednesday set a trial for Feb. 16 for Paul B. Cumming, 22, (left) of Boston, charged with several Selective Service law violations.

Wyzanski set bail at $10,000.

Cumming, a conscientious objector, was arrested by U.S. marshals Wednesday morning at the Paulist Fathers chapel (above). The arrest was without incident. Cumming had taken sanctuary in the chapel Monday instead of appearing before Wyzanski on charges of refusing to report for work at Boston City Hospital in lieu of military service and failure to carry his draft card or draft classification notice.

Amherst Clarifies Position On Student Voter Registration

To clear up a few misconceptions on student voter registration in Amherst the Town Clerk's office announces the following.

1. The Town Clerk's office has never made a statement that Amherst does not register students. Hundreds of graduate students and a few undergraduate students have been registered in the past;

2. The general statement on student registration from this office has been that most undergraduate students should register in their home towns;

3. The statement that approximately forty students a day have tried to register to vote in this Town Hall is grossly exaggerated; this office has probably not had forty students under twenty-one in all try to register since the age was lowered to eighteen and nineteen, not including, of course, those students whose parents live in Amherst;

4. There has been no change whatsoever in the interpretation of voter qualifications, which are:

(1) A citizen nineteen years of age or older (or eighteen for federal elections)

(2) Six months residence in Amherst, and this obviously means continuous residence.

(3) Intent to remain in Amherst the year round as a relatively permanent residence.

In interpreting residence the policy followed pretty generally throughout the Commonwealth - and by actual check with the college cities and towns of Springfield, Greenfield, Northampton, Worcester and Cambridge, is that the official residence of most undergraduate students is with their parents who claim them as dependents. In court cases "domicile" has been determined to mean (1) Presence and (2) Intent, and the court has said that declaration of intent may be examined. Mere removal from a place is not enough to establish residence elsewhere.

Bronx Welfare Families Given Winter Vacations

NEW YORK (AP) - A number of Bronx families on welfare have been taken on all expenses paid weekends to winter resorts at federal government expense, WCBS Radio reported Wednesday.

Thus far, four trips involving about 150 welfare recipients have been made to such winter resorts as Pine Hill, N.Y., Killington, Vt., and South Lee, Mass., the report said.

The program, carried out by the Bronx Model Cities Agency, originally was scheduled to provide 600 persons with winter weekends for a total cost of $30,000 according to CBS, it has been temporarily halted for budget review. The project is funded by the Federal Housing and Urban Development Corp.

WCBS quoted Hugh Lewis, program director, as saying the project was designed to bring families together and that reports on the results of the trips have been "tremendous."

Sleigh riding, tobogganing, ice skating, hiking and skiing, said Lewis, are experiences "that black and Puerto Rican families don't ordinarily have. To them, it's kind of an inaccessible luxury."

A spokesman for HUD noted that one purpose of the Model Cities program is to enhance opportunities in slum and blighted areas.

He said it appears that funds for the summer camp program were used, adding, "We don't know the details, and we're trying to find out exactly what happened."

WASHINGTON (AP) - Negotiations between Mohawk and its striking pilots remained suspended today while the two sides tried to agree on what issues might be arbitrated.

Mercury Contamination Getting Worse

NEW BEDFORD, Mass. (AP) - The level of mercury contamination in marine life is going to get worse unless "something drastic" is done, a prominent oceanographer warned Wednesday.

"Until we ban or minimize agricultural and industrial uses of mercury, levels are almost certain to go up in marine organisms," said Dr. John M. Hunt, a senior scientist and chairman of the chemistry department at the Woods Hole Oceanograph Institute.

In a speech prepared for the annual meeting of the New Bedford Seafood Corp. Dr. Hunt called for the diminished use of mercury in agriculture and urged that substitutes for it be found in industry.

The main causes for increased mercury pollution of the oceans, he said, are the use of mercury in the industrial electrolytic preparation of chlorine and caustic soda, the use of mercury as a fungicide in agriculture and the use of mercury in marine paints.

Eighty per cent of commercial seeds such as wheat, oats, and barley are treated with mercury as a fungicide, Dr. Hunt said. "The same compounds are also used to spray lawns, contributing to mercury contamination both in the seas and in livestock and wildlife," he added.

The use of a mercury based fungicide to protect the greens at the Woods Hole Golf Club probably caused the contamination that forced authorities to ban shell fishing in Quisset Harbor in Falmouth, Dr. Hunt noted.

"At least half" of the mercury pollution in the oceans, however, comes from industrial chlorine and caustic soda plants, he said.

"The government should make mercury effluent restrictions so tight," Dr. Hunt suggested, "that such industries are forced to discontinue the use of mercury in the process." Substitutes for mercury are available, he said, at slightly higher cost.

Chess Team Captures New England Championship

By JANICE TROUT

The University Chess Team easily walked away with the New England Intercollegiate Chess Championship this past weekend at Worcester Poly Tech. In a field of nine select teams, including a school from Maryland, UMass secured the title, and the 4 1/2 foot trophy, by the end of the five rounds of competition on Sunday.

UMass and Clark University were considered the pre-tourney favorites, with the latter having the edge. Right from the start, however, UMass seemed determined to defeat all as they swept to a 5-0 lead after the first round, leading Clark by a full 2 points. UMass stalled a little in the second round by scoring only 2 1/2 points, however the team came back strong, and completely discouraged the rest of the field in the third round of the day by scoring 4 1/2-1/2. In so doing, Bill Kelleher of UMass crushed Clark's expert Jim Lane and so disheartened the Clark boys that they withdrew from the tournament. The final two rounds on Sunday were walkaways for UMass.

Barry Cohen of UMass became the 1971 Individual New England Intercollegiate Champion. Fine performances were also given by Robert Corwin, Alan Searleman, and James Shepard. This quintet is one of the strongest teams UMass has ever fielded.

GSS Explains Pledging

"A Gamma Sig Pledge is someone who wonders if she's forgotton her Pledge pin or a meeting somewhere says Gamma Signa Sigma. "She's someone who kidnaps a sister for a party later; she's also someone who cares enough about her campus and community to serve whenever called upon, according to GSS.

She holds hands at the Bloodmobile, ushers at University Theater productions, opererates a Loan Closet for foreign students, visits the aged; Unity in Service is her motto; friendship, service, equality are her ideals, they say.

Pledging is a time of learning, serving, planning raids and being awoken at 6:00 for breakfast in the Hatch, said the release. It's a chance to make lasting friendships and learn the satisfaction of helping someone. This semester open rush parties will be held Thursday, Feb. 11, 7:30-9:00 in Knowlton Main Lounge and Tuesday, Feb. 16, 7:30-9:00 in Field Main Lounge. GSS invites University women to attend.

CEQ To Show Film 'The Time Of Man'

The Coalition for Environmental Quality (CEQ) has scheduled a free public showing of the popular film "The Time of Man," in the Campus Center Auditorium, tonight at 7:30 p.m.

The CBS color documentary, produced in co-operation with the American Museum of Natural History, examines man's relationship with his environment-- where he is headed--and why.

By examining the relationships of various animal species to their environments and the cultures of primitive tribes, leading authorities reconstruct millions of years of evolution.

The "Time of Man" message is simple and powerful--if man's time on earth is to be endless, he must maintain the environment that sustains him.

Gymnasts Featured At Varsity M

By EARLE BARROLL
Sports Editor

Head UMass gymnastics coach Erik Kjeldsen was the featured speaker at the UMass Varsity M Club luncheon yesterday at the Newman Center.

Kjeldsen presented to the large gathering a very comprehensive and informative insight into the sport of gymnastics. Through his opening comments, a film of his gymnasts in competition, and a question and answer period he conveyed the sport as it has probably never been done to those who were at the luncheon.

Kjeldsen has been at the helm of UMass gymnastics for seven years. He pointed out that in his first few years here the Redmen were struggling at the bottom of the tough Eastern Intercollegiate League that they are a member.

In recent years his squad has been gaining in the standings and if things go as they should in the remaining meets his gymnasts could place second in the final league standings behind Penn State which defeated the Redmen this past weekend.

On the meet with Penn State Kjeldsen said that Penn State's point total of 164 was the highest total that he had heard of in the country this year. A total of 162 points is what most teams shoot at as that means in each event a team has three men who have scored nine points in their performance out of a possible ten. With Penn State scoring the total that they did they have to be considered as a threat for the National title.

For the remainder of the season Kjeldsen points to this Friday night's encounter with defending league champion Springfield as very important for his team. This is the biggest gymnastics rivalry in New England and will make for an excellent meet. Due to the crowd that is expected the meet will be held in the Cage.

Before the film was shown Kjeldsen presented one former team captain and two of his present seniors on the team. Mike Casavana who captained the Redmen last season and who is presently working on his doctoral degree in business at UMass was cited by the coach for his assistance this year in helping the team during practice.

Scott Stover was given praise by Kjeldsen for his outstanding work on the high bar and the coach felt he would be a threat for the individual championship in his specialty. Stover had his knee operated on the first week in November. In his first meet this year on the 29th of January he scored 9.2 on the high bar.

Norm Vexler was lauded by his coach as one of the top all around men in the E.I.G.L. league Vexler competes in all six events and he pointed out that in the coarse of a season he will do 60 or 70 routines in dual meets and put in four or five times more work in practice to ready himself for this demanding event.

During the film, questions were taken from the floor and in the process Kjeldsen gave just about the entire story of the sport in its modern form.

Next week basketball is the topic for the Varsity M with head hoop coach Jack Leaman as the special guest along with a few of his stars. The luncheon begins at 12:15 sharp and gets out by 1:15. The public is welcome to attend these interesting luncheons.

CLEVELAND (AP)--The federal grand jury investigating National Football League operations recessed for the duration of the month after hearing testimony Wednesday from Jerry Wolman, former owner of the Philadelphia Eagles.

The probe, called by the Antitrust Division of the U.S. Justice Department, began in November, and had just reconvened Monday after a 24 day recess.

Wolman, 43, owner of the Eagles from 1964 until May, 1969, declined to comment to newsmen on his appearance before the jurors. He said he did not know why he was called or what the jury is investigating.

Pucksters Drub UConn, 11-1

By STEVE MOSHER
Staff Reporter

Only a standout performance by UConn's goalie John Santucci prevented the UMass hockey team from pulling off another Lowell Tech fiasco last night at Orr rink. But even a Jerry Cheevers could not have stopped the Redmen from an 11-1 rout.

Santucci was the only adequate player on a simply horrendous Huskie team as he came up with an incredible 61 saves off 72 UMass shots. The Redmen seemed content for two periods just to play a bit better than their non-existent opposition. Their passing was off and their rushes often resulted in bad shots. When they did make the good play, Mr. Santucci made the save. After two periods it was still a hockey game with UMass ahead 4-0. But in the final frame, the floodgates opened and the Redmen got seven goals to one for UConn.

UMass opened up the first period with goals at 4:22 and 5:55. The first of these was scored by Dan Reidy as he put in his own rebound after Al Nickerson had set him up in front of the net. This goal was scored with goalie P.J. Flaherty on the bench for a delayed penalty, and the extra UMass attackman was just too much for Santucci. The second goal, and the eventual game winner, was notched by Brian Sullivan as he got a great pass in front of the net from Dennis Grabowski.

Later in the first period Eric Scraffield scored from Fran Mulcahy and Bob Shilalie to up the score to 3-0. This goal came at 9:09 and was the result of a good second effort by Scraffield.

The rest of the period was spent in killing off penalties. For six consecutive minutes UMass played shorthanded, but UConn's miserable offense managed just two shots on net, and those were from outside the blue line.

In the period UMass outshot UConn 22 to 5.

The Redmen continued to apply the pressure in the second period as they got 21 shots off to just five for the Huskies. But Santucci committed grand larceny against several UMass scoring bids and the Redmen could only score one goal.

Santucci robbed Paul Riley, Lonnie Avery, Dan Raidy, and Brian Sullivan from sure goals before Sullivan made a beautiful rink-long rush to score an unassisted goal at 15:13.

Later in the period Santucci made the play of the game when he made two quick saves against Pat Keenan on his doorstep.

Entering the third period, the game was still up for grabs, but Keenan got UMass ahead 5-0 after just 39 seconds with a goal from Reidy.

Then came the flood. At 7:49 Keenan scored again from Don Lowe as he made a beautiful fake on Santucci and slipped the puck into the empty net. At 9:33 Charlie Donovan made a good unassisted rush and rammed the puck through Santucci's pads for goal number seven. Twenty-seven seconds later Paul Riley scored from Bob Bartholomew and Fran Mulcahy, but only after Santucci had stopped Mulcahy's screeming slap shot from ten feet. And just sixteen seconds after that, Mulcahy set up Scraffield for the Redmen's ninth goal of the game and third in the space of just 43 seconds.

At the midway point of the period John Kiah replaced P.J. Flaherty in the goal and soon he was to receive the only scoring bid UConn made all night. At 12:00 Ashley Atherton and James Begina somehow managed a two on zero breakaway. After a couple of passes, Begina took the shot and Kiah stopped it, but Atherton had an open net in which to put the rebound.

For the next five minutes, both teams seemed content to just run out the clock, but there was another Redman uprising as UMass scored two quick goals at 17:20 and 17:46. Charlie Donovan got the tenth goal from Lowe and Don Riley. And Keenan finished off his hat trick for the night on a nice backhand shot. Reidy and Edwards got assists on the 11th tally.

UMass took eight penalties in the game to five for UConn, but several of those were rather cheap calls by the officials. It didn't make much difference against a team like UConn which truly lived up to its now 2-9 record.

The win moves the Redmen to an 8-2-1 record and snaps a three game winless streak. Now UMass must get ready for two more tough games. On Saturday, they travel to Northeastern to play another pack of Huskies. But these Boston Huskies are of a differentbreed and pose a definite threat to UMass. It would really be something if UMass could beat Northeastern, a division I team, and then take Vermont on Monday.

The Vermont game, at Burlington, shapes up to be a key game in UMass' quest for a playoff spot in the Division II playoffs.

The three stars of the night went to Sullivan, Santucci, and Mulcahy. The 72 shots UMass took on net could well be a Redman record, but in any case that's a lot of pucks Santucci had to stop to earn his number two star.

Track Team Rocks Dartmouth

By EARLE BARROLL
Sports Editor

HANOVER, N.H. - Doing everything it needed to win a close meet plus a little extra due to good performances by the entire team, the UMass track team won its first dual meet of the season, rocking Dartmouth College, 70-38, here yesterday.

The Redman team that performed at Dartmouth yesterday was certainly not the same team that ran and was defeated earlier in the season at Yale, UConn and Brown. This team that performed yesterday was an improved, new look team, with noticeable improvement in the calibre of performance in all events in the rout.

From the very first event the outcome was evident as Eddie Arcaro silenced the participant Dartmouth fans with second places in the shot and weight throw, both coming on his last tosses in each. This set the tempo for the meet as Arcaro broke up what looked to be a sure Dartmouth sweep.

Next came the mile and Ron Wayne and Larry Paulson took out their vengeance on the Indians' distance runners who defeated UMass in the New Englands by placing first and second.

The long jump was more of the same as the Redmen took first and second on leaps of 21'11 1/4" by Dick Dyer and 21'2 3/4" by Ed Shaughnessey. Last year the meet between these two teams was decided in part on the results in the hurdles when Dartmouth took the first three places. This did not happen yesterday as Jim Graves and Jerry Spellman remembered last year and placed first and second.

The next two events, the 1000 and 600 yard runs, have been problems for the Redmen in the earlier meets. Yesterday this was also wiped from the past as Al Mangan and Steve Levine took second and third in the 600 and Arnie Morse placed a close second in the 1000.

The only event which resembled last year's meet was the 50 yard dash when again the Redmen swept the race. Ron Harris, Tony Pendleton and Walter Mayo all finished in 5.5 seconds in first, second, and third respectively.

By this time in the meet UMass led by 10 points and with Wayne still to run the two-mile, Shaughnessey still to high jump and with the relays still to be run the meet was all over.

Wayne won the two mile with Tom Jasmin second. Shaughnessey won the high jump and the mile relay team of Harris, Spellman, Graves and Levine was also victorious.

Add to this a victory by John Kamb in the pole vault and the final score of 70-38 is completed.

Coach Ken O'Brien was pleased to say the least. His Redmen showed in this meet the improvement that they have worked for since mid-semester break. With the Yankee Conference Championships in a couple of weeks, the Redmen are rounding into the shape needed to win it all. UConn which earlier in the season defeated UMass, is the host and this time the Huskies will find the visitors more formidable than they were earlier in the season.

Matmen Pin UConn

By MARTY KELLEY
Staff Reporter

After waiting patiently since late December for victory number six, the UMass wrestling squad simply unleashed an awesome display of power and finesse en route to a humbling 42-0 whitewash over a hapless University of Connecticut team at the Boyden Auxiliary Gym last night.

Not since December 19th verdict over NYU in a quadrangular meet, had UMass been successful. Since that time, Coach Homer Barr's lads have dropped in the New England ratings via losses to Coast Guard, Springfield and a deadlock with Yale. But last night the grapplers, aided by a forfeit in the early going, completely obliterated the Huskies for a 6-3-1 over all mark.

The visitors, after forfeiting the first three of four matches, found themselves hopelessly pinned to a 20-0 deficit. Dave Amato (118), Dave Reynolds (134) and Clay Dester (142) all won their battles uncontested. Don Innes pinned Rick Arnold to the mat at the 3:00 mark of his bout as the Redmen romped to their early 20 point bulge.

The Huskies remained off the boards as Brian Urquhart bested Dan Reynolds 6-3 on points in the evening's only close issue in the 150 lb. bracket. With Chambers sitting on a slight 3-2 edge going into the final heat, Urquhart busted loose with a decisive reversal at the six minute mark for a 4-3 advantage. The scrappy Redman hung on in the final two minutes for a pair of riding points for a 23-0 UMass bulge.

In a close middle weight bout in the 158 lb. class, Jim Godkin made a first period takedown stand up for a 4-1 decision over Carl Rider. Soph Kent Mignocchi tired his foe early in the second session for a strong pin at 3:52 of the match. The second pin of the night gave UMass a hefty 31-0 margin with the heavyweight to come.

Ed Carlsson (177), George Zguris (190) and heavyweight Bill Sroka all preserved the blanking with easy triumphs. Carlsson toyed with Mark Mevin for only 1:52 seconds as he made the Huskie quick pin prey. The shutout now looked brighter as Zguris took the mat against Pete Champayne.

Champayne looked tough in the early going but Zguris, after a scoreless first canto, exploded for seven points and a near pin in the second period for a 7-2 lead. The junior from Shirley, N.Y. went on to win 12-2 as did Bill Sroka over Jim Umowitz in the final match of the meet. Sroka could have been the goat, but he protected a 39-0 stomping with a three team point 8-4 victory.

The former defensive end garnered two take downs for a 4-1 advantage going into the final three minutes. Sroka hung on easily as UMass completely subdued UConn, with a few tones of embarrassment to the tune of 42-0. The Redmen completely outmuscled Connecticut in probably one of the easiest meets in Homer Barr's career.

The grapplers will return to the mat this Saturday as UMass hosts a quadrangular meet. Competing for top honors will be Western Maryland, Monmouth, Wesleyan and Trenton St.

Fr. Trackmen Lose

HANOVER, N.H.-The UMass freshman track team did not fair as well as the varsity as they were defeated by a strong Dartmouth freshman squad, 73-32, here yesterday.

Dartmouth got off to a fast start as it swept the first three positions in the shot put and followed this up with a first and second place in the weight throw. This performance in the weights put the Indians in a commanding lead which they built up through the remainder of the competition.

In all the Dartmouth frosh were able to take first place in ten events while the UMass frosh could only muster three firsts.

Standouts for the Redmen were Roger Nasatka, Steve Crimmins, Dave Osborne, John Maloney and Doug O'Connell. Nasatka won the two-mile in his personal best time of 9:38.0. Crimmins and Osborne took one-two in the high jump with leaps of 5'10.

Maloney ran 2:18.5 for a second place in the 1000 and Doug O'Connell followed Nasatka to the line in the two-mile in second place. The Redmen also won the two-mile relay.

Frosh Puckmen Bow To B.U.

By BRONA SIMON
Staff Reporter

There were two freshmen games played last night at Orr Rink - the Little Redmen lost the first, and won the second. Unfortunately, the first and second "games" were really three periods of the scheduled match against the Boston University freshmen, and the overall scoring gave B.U. the laurels, 5-2.

For two periods, the Little Redmen played rather floppily, losing many passes to B.U. skaters, and taking shots into defenders. These mistakes, as well as a good B.U. defense and a slacking UMass defense opportuned B.U. to a 4-0 lead.

The game was christened after one minute and 33 seconds had passed, by visitor Dave Wisener, with a quick, unassisted goal on frosh goaltender, Charles Rheault, the only point-action of a period make up of mostly volleying and change in possession of the puck.

The second period saw three scores by B.U., two of which were short-handed, a humiliating situation for the UMass frosh.

B.U.'s Rich Brugman took an assist from teammate Allan Judge, and tipped one to Rheault's left at 10:27.

After judge went off for delay of the game, B.U. scored again, at 13:57, with the help of some luck and a deflection off a UMass frosh leg. Brugman got credit for the point, and Wisener the assist, with only five Bostonians on the ice.

Two minutes later, Judge was sent to the box again, this time for high-sticking. Wisener bounced a puck off Rheault's chest that caromed into the nets at 16:57.

But when the Little Redmen took the ice at the beginning of the third period, the change for the better was amazing. Pinpoint passing and tremendous drives on net sparked goals by frosh Leonard Lyons from James Coleman at 4:43 and by Geoffrey Gill unassisted at 18:44.

Senate Abolishes Class Government

By BETH GOODELL
Senate Reporter

The Student Senate Wednesday evening abolished the current system of class government at the University by voting overwhelmingly to rescind the Class Government Act of 1970. An entirely new system of committees was established to replace the class officers and executive councils of the four classes, effective February 22, 1971.

Sponsors of the bill were Senate Vice-President Patricia Beharry and Sophomore Class President David Poisson.

The basic premise behind the motion is that, in the words of the resolution, "the concept, as well as the practice and functions of class government are outdated; the officers of the class serve no real function as 'recognized representatives of their respective classes'; and the class executive councils have not existed or operated in the manner prescribed in the class government act of 1970."

The Beharry/Poisson measure established the following committees in lieu of the abolished system? 1) University Concert Series, whose function will be to organize and coordinate all popular concerts, i.e. Homecoming, Winter Carnival, Sendoff, etc.; 2) Seniors' Committee, whose function will be to coordinate, and be funded for, the Seniors' Day program, Commencement, Alumni Tax, Class Gift, Scholarship Fund, etc.

An amendment introduced by Senator Larry Woods was added to the bill to define the composition and operation of the two committees which will operate as sub-accounts of the Student Senate.

With Woods' amendment added, interim Concert Series and Seniors' Committees were established for the remainder of the academic year 1970-71, or until permanent committees are established by legislation.

The Interim Concert Series Committee will consist of the 16 class officers of 1971, 72, 73, and 74. The Chairman will be elected from among the treasurers. The quorum for a meeting will be 7 members. Members of the class executive councils may serve in non-voting capacities.

The Interim Seniors' Committee will consist of the officers of the class of 1971. Interested Seniors may serve in non-voting capacities.

The Interim Concert Series Committee will be custodian of the funds of the classes of '72, '73, and '74. The Seniors' Committee will be custodian of the class of '71 funds. Those sections of the Financial Policies Act applicable to class governments will be applicable to the interim committees, except for the following change: all debts incurred by the class governments before February 22, 1971, will be covered by the Concert Series Committee.

The funds managed by the Concert Series Committee will be used solely for concerts and expenses related to concerts.

Funds managed by the Seniors' Committee will be allocated for the following purposes in the following amounts: scholarship funds--$10,000; Senior Day--$10,000; Martin Luther King Lecture Series--$2,500; Class of '71 Coalition for Environmental Quality Lecture Series--$1,000; and Alumni Tax-- $17,650. Any money not transferred to the Alumni Association will be transferred to the Concert Series Committee account.

Should no permanent legislation supercede this bill by May 12, 1971, any funds remaining in the accounts managed by the two committees will be frozen until such time as a permanent Concert Committee is established which will receive the funds.

Senator Karen MacNutt failed in an attempt to amend the measure so that it would not go into effect until accepted by a vote of the student body. As it stands now, the resolution is an emergency act which becomes effective February 22, 1971.

Faculty Senate Calls For Innovation, Diversity

By LINDA BALICKI
Feature Editor

The Faculty Senate last night moved for a commitment to increased diversity in both academic and living programs and supported a motion which would place responsibility for innovative and experimental programs under one administrative head.

The Senate also moved to conduct a study to determine the effect of the transfer student program on the under graduate mix.

The motions came during the course of a special meeting called to consider the recommendations of the Rules Committee concerning the Faculty Senate Long Range Planning reports.

In discussion concerning increased diversity in academic and living programs it was noted that a need existed to insure students a broad variety of opportunities so that students might satisfy their own individual needs. It was pointed out that there are at present 40 students currently enrolled in the Bachelor of Individual Concentration Program.

In conjunction with this, the Senate also felt the need to combine the handling of such existent innovative programs as Honors, CCEBS, Residential Colleges and the Bachelor of Individual Concentration and the initiative for new ones should be constituted in one position which would serve the needs of the entire community in this area and serve as coordinator for these programs. It was noted that there now exists plans for the establishment of such a position within the organizational structure of the University that has been recently proposed in the Long Range Planning Committee Report.

In other action it was also requested that there be a thorough review of graduate and undergraduate admissions policies be conducted with due regard to the University's mission as a public university in pursuit of high quality education. It was noted that in hearings before the Academic matters Committee, the proposal that the University become a Lower Division-Upper Division course of study was not favorably greeted. It was felt that the University could better serve the needs of its students by remaining a four year institution.

"A Fair Hearing"

Ombudsman's Premiere

"I'm willing to talk to anyone about anything," declared the new University ombudsman, Ellsworth Barnard at a coffee hour held yesterday in the Colonial Lounge to discuss his new position and meet with the students.

Barnard is carrying only one class, which is one third of the usual load, in order to be available to students, he said. His office is in room 921 of the Campus Center, telephone 50821, he added.

Helping students to learn where to go, whom to see and how to go about alleviating their difficulties is part of the job, as Barnard saw it.

A few students have come to him, but many don't know why there is an ombudsman, he said. He explained that he would help cut through the confusing red tape in many cases, and could refer students to experts if he would be unable to help them.

Prepared to go to the Chancellor if he feels it is necessary, Barnard said he will make recommendations giving his reasons for supporting or opposing an action and otherwise "operate on his own."

"I mustn't allow people to think I'm always on the side of the students, or always against them," he went on. "Everybody has got to be convinced they will get a fair hearing from me."

He said that students should try to get organized to solve their own problems and bring pressure on the administration themselves. His services are offered to help people start committees.

Typical grievances that might be brought to him concern meal tickets, grades, or residence halls, Barnard stated.

"I took the job because I thought there was a real need for someone to do this," Barnard said. He expressed hope that his office would be a success in aiding the students.

He felt that students have a great deal of power if they get together, and he can help them direct their efforts toward their goals.

Dead U.S. Soldier Wears Viet Uniform In Laos

NEW YORK (AP)—ABC Radio reported Thursday that a dead American soldier wearing a South Vietnamese uniform had been evacuated from inside Laos.

Both ABC and CBS radio networks carried reports that American ground troops were taking part in the invasion, some in South Vietnamese uniforms.

In Washington, Pentagon spokesmen continued to deny that any American ground combat troops are involved. White House press secretary Roland L. Ziegler said that "our policy is and will continue to be that there will be no U.S. combat troops or advisers in Laos."

Officials in Saigon, were asked about news reports that American soldiers had been seen in Laos despite U.S. claims that no Americans would participate in the South Vietnamese ground assault.

The sources said the reconnaissance teams had been operating in Laos for years and they were continuing their work.

The U.S. Command declined to "discuss any operations on intelligence gathering, but a spokesman said again: "There are no U.S. ground combat troops in Laos. There will be no U.S. ground combat troops inside Laos."

The U.S. Command said American crews also are flown into Laos to recover downed helicopters but they are protected by South Vietnamese troops and are on the ground only long enough to attach a sling to the downed aircraft to lift it out. The spokesman added that all efforts would be made to rescue American crewmen shot down over Laos.

The United States has promised the South Vietnamese full U.S. air support in the Laotian drive, including fighter bombers and helicopters for gunships, medical evacuation and troop lifts.

ABC newsman Howard Tuckner reported he had seen what appeared to be an American bathing with two South Vietnamese soldiers 25 miles inside Laos. South Vietnamese riding with Tuckner said the man was a "GI adviser."

"When we tried to jump off the vehicle to speak to him, he ran off into the bush," Tuckner reported.

He said that soon an American helicopter came in to pick up some American bodies. He said the pilot, who was on the ground for 30 minutes, told him he was waiting to pick up the bodies of four helicopter crewmen who were shot down.

The South Vietnamese unexpectedly brought a fifth American body, wearing the uniform of the South Vietnamese airborne troops, Tuckner reported.

CBS Radio news reported that U.S. helicopters flying South Vietnamese troops into Laos sometimes carry American Special Forces officers, some in South Vietnamese uniforms.

U.S. headquarters in Saigon, reported also Friday the loss of eight more American helicopters to deadly antiaircraft fire in the Laotian campaign, bringing to 12 the number of allied choppers downed since South Vietnamese troops drove into Laos five days ago.

Ten of the helicopters were American, with 10 U.S. soldiers killed, two missing and six wounded. Two South Vietnamese helicopters were shot down and the 15 persons aboard, including four newsmen, were reported missing and presumed dead.

Busted Students Face Additional Charges

By ANNE STADNICKI
News Editor

Additional charges have been brought against four persons arrested in last week's drug raids on campus, it was announced yesterday by Sargent Phillip Cavanaugh of the campus police.

All arraignments concerned "hard" or harmful narcotic drugs with the exception of hashish, he said.

The arrests were not made until today because charges could not be filed until the confiscated contraband was analyzed by Western Massachusetts Public Health authorities, according to Cavanaugh.

Police officers can not be sure of the content of evidence in most cases, he said. He explained that this is accounted for the wait for certified copies from the Food and Drug Administration.

Arraigned in Northampton District court yesterday were: David Gragowski, a UMass student, on two counts of possession of a narcotic drug (hashish and LSD); Charles E. Yates, a former student, on two counts of possession of a narcotic drug (morphine and LSD) and one count of possession of a harmful drug (methamphetamine-amn barbital); Robert M. Nemeth, Jr., a UMass student, on one count of possession with intent to sell (phencyclidine, referred to as PCP) and on possession of a harmful drug (3,4- Methglendioxyphenethyahmine, refered to as MDA) and intent to sell (MDA); and William S. Comstock, for possession of a narcotic drug (LSD) and possession with the intent to sell (LSD), and possession of a harmful drug (MDA).

Sargent Cavanaugh expressed a concern that students feel the bust was for grass and hash. He said that it was specified to the Dean of Students that arrests for "hard" drugs could not be made until the evidence was certified.

All ten cases have been continued to Thursday, February 25th, unless the defense attorneys request a continuation, according to Cavanaugh.

He said Judge Ryan would preside over the district court proceedings.

He also reported that with the exception of two of the accused, all the defendents were represented by counsel in court yesterday. The two who were not represented have requested a public defender, which has been granted to them by the court, he said.

CEG Chooses New Officers

By JAMES GOLDMAN
Staff Reporter

The election of new officers and the screening of the documentary, "The Time Of Man", highlighted last night's CEQ meeting. Three incumbents were reelected to the post of president, treasurer, and outreach coordinator. The vice-president, resource coordinator, and project coordinator are serving as officers for the first time.

Quint Dawson, a senior, was reelected president. He commented that a campaign to halt work on the Vermont Yankee Atomic Power Plant at Vernon, Vermont and the expansion of CEQ's education resources will be the main focus of his new administration.

Dawson also retained an executive post in the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution. This organization is presently fighting the issuance of an Atomic Energy Commission permit for the operation of the Vernon Power Plant.

Frank Olbris, a former CEQ coordinator, was elected vice-president. A newcomer, Mick Hinman was elected to the post of treasurer.

Ric Swardon, a graduate student in environmental design, was reelected resource coordinator. As resource coordinator his responsibilities will include establishing and maintaining contacts in the community and advising the steering on available research materials.

Reelected to the post of outreach coordinator is Stan Mikelk. Public relations, community education, and retention of speakers, films, and conferences for future CEQ meetings will be his major priorities.

Marty Blustein, a graduate student in the physics department, will assume the post of project coordinator. Blustein has been an active foe of the Vernon Power Plant. His new position will include organizing projects and advising the steering committee.

The possible appearance of Senator Edmund Muskie, D-Maine, was revealed after the regular meeting adjourned. An optimistic member stated that early May is the target date. Though plans still remain "indefinite", negotiations are presently underway between the Senator's staff and CEQ. It was also noted that the Senator's honorarium was beyond CEQ's financial capacity.

Nixon-Kosygin Sign Ban On Ocean Atomics

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon and Soviet Premier Alexei N. Kosygin joined Thursday in voicing hope that a new treaty to ban atomic weapons from the ocean floors will be followed by progress toward curbing the nuclear arms race between the two superpowers.

Nixon spoke at a State Department ceremony at which 62 nations signed the new seabeds treaty. He referred to the U.S. Soviet strategic arms limitation talks-SALT-resuming in Vienna March 15 and said:

"We certainly hope that they will make progress."

"I can assure all of those gathered here," he added, "that we seek, as does the Soviet Union and other nations, an agreement there which will reduce the danger of nuclear war which hangs over the world and reduce it by controlling the nuclear arms both as far as the Soviet Union is concerned and the United States."

In Moscow, Kosygin told a seabed treaty signing ceremony:

"We would welcome an agreement in the field of limiting strategic armaments."

The U.S. Soviet strategic arms talks have made little progress so far since getting under way in Helsinki in 1969. A major obstacle is a dispute over whether U.S. nuclear weapons based in West Europe for the allies' defense should be included in a U.S. Soviet limitation.

Diplomats so far have found it easier to negotiate arms bans covering areas where weapons races are not already off and running. This was true of the first major international disarmament pact after World War II, the ten year old treaty outlawing military activity in Antarctica, and of subsequent accords banning nuclear weapons from outer space and from Latin America.

The seabed treaty is the product of two years of U.S.-Soviet negotiations at the Geneva disarmament parley. It does not prohibit nuclear missile firing submarines, but it does bar the emplacement of stationary mass destruction weapons on the ocean floor and its subsoil, as well as facilities for such weapons.

The treaty is to take effect when ratified by 22 nations, and well over that number signed in parallel ceremonies Thursday in Washington, Moscow and London.

Laos:

Heavy Fighting Yet To Come

SAIGON (AP)-South Vietnamese officers said Thursday the heavy fighting in southern Laos is yet to come. It may come soon.

Field commanders reported they expect major engagements in the valleys around Sepone, where sizable contingents of North Vietnamese regulars are believed deployed.

South Vietnamese troops reached Sepone Wednesday in the deepest penetration so far of the westward drive into Laos, now in its fourth day.

Sepone was a major supply depot and transshipment point for the North Vietnamese on the Ho Chi Minh trail.

It has an abandoned dirt airstrip and South Vietnamese army engineers are trying to repair it for helicopters and planes.

So far in the U.S. backed offensive, advancing South Vietnamese troops have met only scattered resistance on the ground. But North Vietnamese antiaircraft fire has taken a serious toll in allied helicopters.

The allied commands have confirmed four helicopters shot down since the offensive started Monday. They withheld reports on a number of others on ground such news might jeopardize rescue operations or combat action still in progress.

Newsmen at the operation front reported at least six more helicopters have been downed in Laos or close to the frontier in the past two days.

South Vietnamese field officers report the North Vietnamese troops encountered so far appear to be mostly green, young soldiers. They expect to collide soon with seasoned regulars in or near the valleys that fan out from Sepone.

Associated Press correspondent William C. Barton, reporting from the forward base at Khe Sanh, said he observed two trucks carrying South Vietnamese dead and wounded returning from Laos on Highway 9.

Barton said American and South Vietnamese positions along Highway 9 and near the Laotian border are being shelled continuously by enemy gunners.

As the offensive in Laos went ahead, there was a fresh deployment of allied troops at the eastern anchor of the Demilitarized zone to guard against a North Vietnamese thrist to counter the Laotian operation.

A U.S. Marine landing team of 1,500 men was off the eastcoast in ships, ready to help 3,000-5,000 South Vietnamese meet a possible North Vietnamese drive across the zone.

Ky had raised the possibility of just such an enemy drive in a speech earlier this week. He said: "We must foresee that the North Vietnamese might cross the Ben Hai River to attack South Vietnam."

Bianco To Examine Cuban Communism

The United States is "asleep" to the threat of communism, according to Dr. Ernesto E. Blanco. The Distinguished Visitors Program will bring Dr. Blanco to campus next Tuesday February 16th. He will speak on "Cuban Communism" in the Student Union Ballroom at 8:00 P.M.

Born in Havana, Cuba in 1922, Dr. Blanco was at one time Director of Research for the Cuban Revolutionary Government. He has a strong background in education, having taught at the Havana branch of Villanova University, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and Rennselaer Polytechnic Institute. Moreover, Dr. Blanco has presented over a dozen professional papers and conferences dealing with engineering and educational subjects.

Dr. Blanco has testified on communism before the United States Senate Committee on Internal Security and on campus disorders before a committee of the Massachusetts General Court.

A first hand observer of Communism in Cuba, Dr. Blanco claims that his background in education and the fact that he has lived in both communist and capitalist societies are responsible for his strong anti-communist beliefs.

Dr. Ernesto Blanco, a strong anti-communist, will speak on Cuban Communism Tuesday, at 8:00 P.M. in the S.U. Ballroom.

Campus Security

Student Guards Effective

It has been apparent to administrators of the university for a long time, and increasingly since September, that the Security procedures effective in the past simply would no longer work. The problems encountered at UMass are the same as those encountered in a large city, according to Assoc. Dean of Students, Mike West.

"Formerly, security consisted of adults stationed in each dorm, acting as security guards, who were paid out of the trust fund. Since this was essentially supplied from room rent fees these security positions here eliminated to help keep down the cost of room rent for this past semester. The result was $22,000 worth of damage in the first six weeks of school in the form of personal losses, property damage, etc. Obviously, things couldn't be allowed to continue in this way for the rest of the year."

Part of the solution arrived at was to transfer the Security dept from the Treasurer's office to the Office of Student Affairs. This was accomplished mainly through the initiative of Vice Chancellor Bromery, who was recently appointed Vice Chancellor in charge of Student Affairs.

Under this new leadership, a new security program has been evolved. Measures taken include the use of the campus police, who patrol residential areas in car and, on occasion, on foot; Security Guards, patroling in and around dorms on foot; a residence hall assistant, an adult who sits in the lobby of a residence hall from approximately 10 p.m. to 7 a.m., and student security guards, who patrol certain dorms during the same hours as do the residence hall assistants.

The student security project was funded by approximately $35,000, $20,000 of which was given to area coordinators; $8,000 to South West and $12,000 to the other residential areas on campus.

In operation for about one month, the program has proved to be a successful deterrent to security problems. For instance, as cited by Dean West, damages in the Northeast Area in the month of January amounted to $37, a fourth of what they were in December. In the Central Area, where the program is just now being adopted, January damages amounted to $800 as opposed to Northeast's $37.

The solution to the security problem is running into funding problems, however. In order to continue the Student Security program, the Legislature will have to appropriate $40,000 to the university. The worth of the program has been proved in actual use; it is now up to the university, the Legislature, and the powers that be to decide which is more desirable - stopping the destruction in the only way found effective or living with it.

Students Organize For McGovern

On Wednesday evening, 22 students met in the Campus Center to discuss groundwork plans for organizing "UMass Students for McGovern," in cooperation with "McGovern For President" headquarters, at 201 Maryland Ave., N.E., Washington, D.C.

The meeting was organized by Douglass Teschner, a senior majoring in forestry, and Kenneth Mosakowski, a graduate student in education. Teschner worked last year in the campaign of Gerry Studds, who lost to Congressman Hastings Keith (R-12th District, Mass.). Mosakowski worked in the campaign of UMass student F. James Gensheimer, who ran unsuccessfully for the office of State Representative, 1st Franklin District.

During the two-hour informal meeting, discussion centered on the problems of procuring office space, disseminating information about Senator McGovern's candidacy, and fund-raising. Following the meeting, an attempt to obtain office space for "UMass Students for McGovern" in one of the dorms proved fruitless.

The group is tentatively scheduled to meet again next Wednesday at 9 P.M. in the Campus Center. Further information may be obtained by calling 665-3901.

Hollow 'Honor'

The Nixon administration lied to the American people again!

The report from ABC news correspondent Howard Tucker, which apparently confirms the presence of United States ground combat forces in Laos has brought the present administration's credibility to a maked precipice. And still, Nixon's liars continue to insist that there are "no U.S. combat troops or advisers in Laos."

Last night's network news broadcasts disclosed that a dead American G.I. in a South Vietnamese uniform was seen being evacuated from Laos. According to the reports, Americans in South Vietnamese uniforms have been terried into Laos ever since the Laotion incursion began.

This latest deceit on the part of the Nixon administration raises dead serious questions on all levels, including the constitutional effectiveness of laws which the Congress of the United States duly passes. The presence of ground combat troops in Laos is a clear violation of the Cooper-Church bill, passed last year after the United States decided to invade Cambodia.

Perhaps the most important consequence of the disclosure is that it shows how uncontrollable the U.S. military and their political counterparts are. Nixon feels confident in violating the sovereignity of another nation and is absolutely arrogant about flaunting the intelligence of the American people. He must think the American people stupid to direct his spokesmen to deny what is now public knowledge.

The American people will prove themselves stupid if Nixon is allowed to continue his blatantly illegal and patently dishonest conduct of American troops in Southeast Asia.

We call upon the American public to demand an end to the practices of the Nixon administration. We urge people to take steps which will once and for all time show to those in government that the will of a people, as expressed through massive opposition to the U.S. involvement in Southeast, cannot be flaunted and ignored continually.

As public distrust of the government escalates and the short fuses to the powder keg of massive opposition of a people to its leadership smolders closer to the flash point, we publicly plea for the forces of government to relinquish their arrogance and dishonesty; to withdraw American troops from Laos and all of Southeast Asia; and to ultimately change the direction of United States foreign policy which allows good men to go to their death for the hollow "honor" of a President.

Up The GNP

WASHINGTON—In order for President Nixon's new economic game plan to work, the United States must increase its gross national product by 9% to $1,065 billion (the italics are mine). That is to say, this country must produce that amount of goods and services in 1971 whether it needs to or not.

Now it isn't enough to just produce that amount of goods and services. Someone has to buy them.

Unless Mr. John Q. Consumer becomes a big spender, all Mr. Nixon's economic hopes for the country will go down the drain.

It is for this reason that the President has set up a Commission on Wild Spending to see that every American does his share to meet the $1,165 billion GNP goal. (The italics are yours if you wish).

The plan is to swear in several hundred thousand federal marshals to go around the country and persuade people to spend more money than they've ever spent before.

This is how it would work:

"Mr. and Mrs. Moore, my name is Coleman and I'm from the UGNP."

"UGNP?"

"Yes, it stands for 'up the gross national product.' Our U.S. Army civilian files on you indicate that you haven't bought a new car this year."

"Oh, that's easy to explain. We have a car already and it's in good condition."

"Mr. Moore, we don't care what condition your car is in. When you don't buy a car, you're stabbing the President's economic blueprint in the back."

"We are?"

"Yes, you are. Do you consider yourselves loyal patriotic Americans?"

"Of course."

"Then why haven't you bought any furniture lately? Or jewelry or luggage or color television sets or snowmobiles or dishwashers or hot pants?"

"Well, you see, Mr. Coleman, we're getting on in years and we try to put away a little money in the savings bank each week..."

"Suppose everyone squirreled his money away in savings accounts. What kind of a free-spending country would we have then?"

"You're shouting, Mr. Coleman."

"Of course, I'm shouting. For every dollar you don't throw away in 1971, there's a Russian laughing in the Kremlin."

"But we have everything we need."

"Don't ever say that, Mrs. Moore. Don't ever, ever say that. How many times have seen 'Love Story'?"

"Once."

"Well, if we're going to make our goal, everyone will have to see it three times. How many vacations have you taken this year?"

"One. You see, we don't have much..."

"No excuses. Do you realize because you've only taken one vacation the Boeing Aircraft Co. is going broke?"

"Please, Mr. Coleman, you're making us feel so bad. What can we do?"

"Go down to the savings bank tomorrow morning, withdraw everything and spend, spend, spend. Eat, drink and consume or tomorrow the GNP will die."

"All right, if you say so."

"Thank you, Mr. and Mrs. Moore. President Nixon will be very relieved."

Barnard's Burden

On February 1, Professor Ellsworth Barnard of the English Department was appointed as the University's first Ombudsman. The action was taken, it seems, to improve student-administration relations by making another mode of redression available to members of the campus community who feel that they have been maligned in some manner.

On the surface, the concept is laudable. If the Ombudsman can relieve some of the bureaucratic inanity that now exists, or even if he serves as a clearinghouse for information concerning the procedurals methods available for the relievance of problems, then in some way he will become a useful member of the University community.

However, if the Ombudsman is to be truly effective certain questions will have to be answered, questions concerning his power, his efficiency and indeed his allegiance. The answers to these questions will go a long way in determining the untimate success of the Ombudsman.

Professor Barnard, as the first Ombudsman, drives his power from the President of the University by whom he is appointed. It is true that recommendations for the appointment are made by a joint selection committee composed of faculty, grads and undergraduate students. Yet final say still resides in the office of President Wood. Professor Barnard must, in the initial days of his term, establish himself as an independent agent if he is to deserve any credence at all.

If the Ombudsman fails in this area, there are options available to the student body. According to the proposal which created this office, "a student co-ombudsman may be appointed" if circumstances warrant. This, however, is not necessary unless Professor Barnard is unable to establish his own individuality. Also, the Ombudsman may be removed "upon a two-thirds vote by the Faculty Senate, Student Senate, and the Graduate Student Senate, each meeting and voting separately". This is suggested merely as a last resort.

The success of this agency will also be dependent upon the services put at his disposal. In the proposal these are described as those "necessary...to enable him to fulfill his function". It is hoped that this is the case yet with an eye on the situation in other University departments and agencies, a bit of skepticism is duly warranted.

The idea here is not to chastise or deride the Ombudsman before he even begins but instead to offer some food for thought about the office and its immediate responsibilities. As was previously mentioned, the concept has a great deal to offer and can serve as an extremely useful part of this University. The responsibility for the program's success lies solely on the shoulders of Professor Barnard who must establish his own power and usefulness just as the American Presidency was in large manner shaped by the term of George Washington or as any office is by its first occupant. The challenge is his.

I Confess In The Name Of The...

To the editor:

The following observations have been prepared through the collective thought and painstaking reserach by several attorneys that have represented University students in the past. Due to the compulsive desire on the part of certain defendants to confess, which has had serious effects in Pioneer Valley Courts recently, these attorneys felt that some of the artistic and esoteric techniques had been neglected in fashioning the Complete Confession.

Immediately upon arrest:

1. Demand your rights-particularly the part about remaining silent. You may shout this demand in the event the officer fails to hear you (it heightens tension).

2. While the officer reads your rights to you, beat him to the punch. You are, after all, an educated man or woman.

3. Some afficiondos hold that confessing at this point so rattles the arresting officer that he fails to get it all down properly and they prefer alternative methods. If you choose this particular moment to confess, purists demand that you fall to your knees and beat your breast while declaiming your sundry sins. (For instance: "Officer, its not just the grass you have found in my pockets; you can't imagine the amount of hash and pills under my pillow in the third room on the left through the door at my apartment which is at...).

Upon being booked:

1. It helps to refresh the officer's awareness of the Constitution, so repeat your demand for "your rights". It is helpful at this time to waive your phone call and refuse the aid of a lawyer.

2. There are two schools of thought on how to succeed at this juncture:

(a) Blurt and Bawl: This requires some breast beating, knee bending and, very definitely, tears. The purpose is, obviously, to demonstrate contrite heart, your faith in the police and justice as received in jails. You can enhance your fine or jail term or both by blurting out as much information as you have about your sinful ways in the event the police fail to charge you with a criminal act recently committed. Throw in anything you think might be helpful.

(b) Rod and Reel: This is a more intellectually satisfying procedure which helps to pass the time as well as restore faith in your human frailty. Usually the sportsman admits to a fraction of the charges and then undertakes to rigorously defend his actions with particular attention to those reasons why his conduct was reasonable and should not have subjected him to arrest. This is "reeling". As one "reels" he tends to add charges that he is willing to admit to in order to demonstrate the stupidity of the law he is charged with breaking. A good "reeler" keeps this going for a very long time, even right up until he is arraigned, before he gets the "rod" or "shaft".

Since neither breast beating or kneeling is required, older and more mature people prefer "Rod and Reel" to "Blurt and Bawl".

After release; and for friends of defendants:

Somehow the thrill of the chase and the great desire for self-flagellation provokes friends of the accused and even the accused himself (after the police or court unwittingly lets him go before confessing) to telling all in the safety of the public eye. There are many preferential mediums for this such as radio, television, stage, newspapers, et cetera. The important thing to remember is to state clearly all defenses planned for later use so that they may be recorded in shorthand or by taping devices. Tell someone you love, too-your parents, your friends, your landlord, your informer, you will be gratified to see them all in court under subpoena when you are finally brought to trial.

A popular new wrinkle includes detailed claims of police inefficiency together with hurling sundry invectives at police officers. Some hold that they drop the charges. In other cases they get angry and uncooperative. In a few cases, not limited to the South, they shoot and the need for a trial is eliminated. In any case, the accused awaiting trial has greatly enhanced his chances of getting convicted and "doing time".

For those who are arrested in the future the preceeding thoughts are shared with sympathetic heart. Those who choose the anachonistic technique of doing what their lawyers tell them to do will listen quietly to their "rights", call their lawyer, tell the police officer their name and thereafter keep respectfully but firmly SHUT UP. (If the police don't know something, like your adress, you won't be paid for helping.)

In the last day or so, the Collegian office has been somewhat deluged with calls inquiring about the policy of the new editorial page concerning Campus Comment. For this reason, some explanation seems necessary.

In the next week, the new editors will be attempting to formulate some policies to go by for the year. What these policies will be will in a large part be determined by the responses that they receive to what is in the Collegian now. The same holds true for Campus Comment.

There is a wide range of things that can be included on the Campus Comment page. Poetry and creative writing are among the items that at one time or another have appeared in this section. Whether or not they are included again depends in no small way upon your reactions and responses.

Also, the pages are not necessarily limited to including just the items that have appeared in the past. If you have an idea for something different which you think would find a home on the Campus Comment page, please let us know.

We have our preferences and prejudices but the Campus Comment page is yours. We're still listening.

Why March?

To the Editor:

Nice day for a parade, isn't it? What, you haven't heard? No, it's not a national holiday, you Dildo! It's a protest march. Yah, protest. What for?! Man, don't you keep up with the news? We're going to protest the South Vietnamese invasion of Laos.....Laos.....L—A—O—S. There's a very important supply route in Laos, they call it the Ho Chi Minh Trail. The North Vietnamese use that supply route to bring ammo into Cambodia, Laos, and South Vietnam. Why?! Hey, what are you, a reactionary or something? Well, as I was saying, that lackey, Lon No 1, he's that running dog who calls the shots in Cambodia, it seems that he won't permit the Communists to use the port of Sihanoukville to ship supplies into South Vietnam. That was a real bummer thing to do. And then last spring, you remember last spring, don't you? Last spring Nixon invaded the North Vietnamese sanctuaries in the Cambodian fishook, and he broke into the North Vietnamese caches and stole all the supplies they had stored up. Now that the port in Cambodia is sealed up, and all the supplies taken out of the fishook, there's only one way left to bring supplies from North Vietnam into foreign soil for their troops to use. And that's through Laos via the Ho Chi Minh Trail. What's it all about?! Dammit, that's why we're marching today, harebrain? We're protesting the fact that those motherfucking South Vietnamese are trying to block off that supply route. If they do that, do you know what will happen? The North Vietnamese and VietCong won't have any ammunition with which to launch a major offensive in South VietNam and Cambodia, and the American Imperialists will be able to withdraw their troops without getting shot at! What?! We're demonstrating to keep the Ho Chi Minh Trail open, that's why. Boy, you are far out. If that trail is closed, the North Vietnamese and VietCong won't be able to wage their war of National Liberation. Why wage a war? Hey man, what are you, some sort of peace creep?! What? Oh...this demonstration won't change anybody's mind in South Vietnam, but it's great publicity? Our two committee chairmen, Mr. Sherman Shlep and Miss Yenta Shmenta, might even get their pictures on the front page of the Collegian.

What The Senate Did

He Likes The Idea

To the Editor:

By the time most readers see this letter, they will not only be aware of the passage of a senate bill calling for the payment of senate officers, which was passed by a vast majority of senators, but they will also be aware of a referendum to repeal this bill which was started, among others, by senators Waters, Hall, and Olmstead. It is most interesting to see this crusading trio looking out so deerly for their constituents, when you consider that when they were on the senate floor they each offered amendments calling in one way or other for the payment of all senators'? Fortunately wiser heads prevailed and only officers, who put in an unusual amount of time, (amounting to 3 individuals) were given any form of compensation at all? One must question the motives of these three senators.

But now let's look at ourselves; the students who cheer for the basketball team that stopped B.C. and All-American player who will no doubt lead our team to its second straight NIT tournament. We sure do love being big time in sports? But we are a big time University? Yet although we have a well-payed administration, we rebel at the idea of compensating our student administration on the grounds that it should be voluntary, even though we pay the president of our university who is also here because he, too, volunteered. In fact, we are one of the last major universities in the country to pay for our student leaders. Why didn't all of the suddenly irated students complain when the editor of the Collegian, the Manager of WMUA, or the Room to Move workers (all of whom volunteered) started receiving pay for no more work than the senate officers do.

It's time to wake up out of our dream worlds and to realize that certain difficult tasks must be done at a mamouth institution like ours, and those doing this work must be compensated. We must stop the tantrum-like effort of those individuals circulating the referendum to prevent compensation of the senate officers, and we must vote not to repeal what is classified as S137 and we must not allow the three senators in question to sulk because we refused compensation for all senators, because no senator works nearly as hard, or has nearly all the responsibilities as the three officers in question. By the way, I am not an officer, I do not feel that I deserve any form of compensation, but obviously, I am in an impartial position to realize that the three officers in question do.

Bruce Bernstein, Senator

Snow-Shoveling Comes First

To the Editor:

While we were studying Wednesday night the Student Senate passed a bill to renumerate the President, Vice-Pres., and Treas. of that body for their "...exceptional amount of time (devoted) to the duties of their elected offices."

Now, maybe that doesn't sound too catastrophic to some of you, but to some it will mean that the money WE WORKED FOR last summer, last Christmas and intercession will be used to pay $400 collectively to the Student Senate officers each month. By making payment retroactive to Nov. 1, 1970 the Senate will have sapped $2100 from OUR money.

To put this in perspective, imagine the ice-slides at the ends of the Campus Center. Covering approximately 1500 square feet, they could be cleared in about 12 man-hours. Assuming payment of $3 per man-hour, the appropriation is sufficient to pay to have this ice cleared 58 TIMES this year and 88 TIMES in each subsequent year.

Proponents of the bill will suggest that payment to these officers will 'give them more time to devote to their duties' apparently implying that this will help them to do their jobs better. To them, we heartily contend that they cannot, in good conscience, subscribe to the belief that Richard Nixon is doing any better job under the impetus of his salary increase.

They will suggest that OTHER schools pay their officers. A quick review of their "supporting" (?) statistics shows that, of 18 schools replying, only 3 pay more than the UMass appropriation, and only 7 pay more than $500 per year. (The UMass appropriation is $1200 for the Pres., and $1000 for the other two officers.) And, too, if everybody else jumps off the Golden Gate Bridge does that make it right for US to do so?

We think not; and we think that the aforementioned Senate appropriation is a gross misuse of STUDENT funds. We urge the members of the STUDENT BODY to petition for a referendum on this question, and to overturn Wednesday night's Student Senate vote.

In Sickness- Or In Health?

To the Editor:

Homosexuality has become a new topic of discussion on campus and several letters about it have appeared in the MDC. Certainly, it is a good thing that the subject is now in the open and no longer hushed up in a closet.

We are living in an enlightened time where understanding and compassion are taking the place of bigotry and hate. Most educated persons are willing to accept the homosexual; especially in these days when love (regardless of its form) is at such a premium.

Many people are now aware that homosexuality is not a sickness - it is merely a preference. If there is any sickness, it evolves from the homosexual's attempt to cope with society (a society which restricts his basic human rights - both legally and de facto).

I am writing in regard to those who have not been able to adjust to society: the Sick Homosexuals.

Fortunately, the sick homosexual is a very small minority in the homosexual community. Unfortunately, he is the most noticed in the general society. The result: society judges and identifies the entire homophile movement on the basis of a small sick minority.

The sick queens and silly fairies who are at fault think they are "liberating" society; how sad that it's doing just the opposite. They go around flaunting their homosexuality and demand equality with heterosexuals. If they want equality, there should be no need for them to flaunt their sexuality. I don't have to scream "I'm a heterosexual!"; or make out with my chick in public to prove my sexual identity.

Recently, however, things hit a peak. Some of the "girls" put on dresses and ostrich feathers, and went out to "liberate" some of the local student hangouts.

I don't think that is necessary. It would be just as ridiculous for all the heterosexuals to prove their virility by wearing sweat pants and grunting like Jocks.

I am willing to accept just about anything as long as it isn't crammed down my throat. I am aware that the homosexual has suffered a lot in our present and past society. I am not personally guilty of any of this oppresion, however; and I refuse to apologize for being a heterosexual. That would be absurd, and yet it would seem that this is what the sick homosexuals want me to do. It's creating a backlash.

I do not dondemn the sick homosexual; I just feel sorry for him. Unfortunately, many of my fellow heterosexuals are not as understanding. Where there had once been mild acceptance, there is now blatant rejection - probably worse than what had existed before.

Some of this letter may have sounded bigoted, but it's not. I have a lot of empathy for the sane homosexual. I am sure his form of love must be just as beautiful as mine is. I don't think that I could cope with persecution and not getting certain jobs because I go for chicks. And yet, this is something the homosexual has to deal with every day. I know I would be pissed off if I had to hide in a dark alley just to hold hands.

Society is beginning to realize what's wrong and change is coming. Certainly it takes time, but if it were rushed, a rift would accur. Alienation is the last thing we want now. There will always be a few red necks who will jeer, but the majority is willing to be understanding if we are allowed to.

Happy Valentine's Day and Peace,

NAME WITHHELD BY REQUEST

With Tongue In Cheek, No

To the Editor:

I am most happy to see that the Student Senate has finally gotten around to what I feel could soon become their most important function--paying themselves. If, in fact, the paying of Student Senate officers is the growing trend that the Student Senate tells us it is, we should consider ourselves lucky that we have a Senate with the vibrant concern to safeguard the University from falling behind the times and becoming antiquated. I am, however, much disturbed by this talk of not making the salaries retroactive from last November as most of the senators took their offices in good faith and must not be cheated out of what is so obviously their just desserts. Nor do I like the thought of restricting senators from other paying jobs since this is almost forcing them to spend a disproportionate amount of time on Senate matters. Finally, I feel that while the decision is a step in the right direction, it is perhaps a bit conservative. I would suggest a bill to divide up, at the end of the year, all unappropriated Senate funds among the supporters of the bill (non-supporters will obviously be disinterested). Only in this way can we attract to the Senate the high-minded, clear-thinking individuals that the Senate so desperately needs.

Co-op Bookstore

To the Editor:

There is a way you can do something about the bookstore? You can join the Bookstore Subcommittee of the Student Senate to investigate what is wrong with the bookstore, why and how it can be remedied. We are investigating the feasibility of making the bookstore a student owned cooperative with some new priorities or setting up a student advisory board from the bookstore. We need interested people willing to help formulate these priorities through price comparisons with Amherst stores, surveys, letters to other schools to find alternatives, etc. Here is your chance to help not just complain. If you want to volunteer notify me.

A Magical, Mystery Tour

A lot of people were tripping in Bowker Auditorium Thursday night. No, not on acid - on music. The Boston Philharmonia, conducted by Leon Kirchner, was the extremely capable guide of this magical mystery tour, luring the audience's minds down, around, up, and over, touching on an infinity of concepts, ideas, and images.

The program included four selections, The Oxford Symphony by Hayden, Suite from the ballet "The Minotaur" by Elliot Carter, Concerto for String Orchestra in G D Major by Stravinsky, and Mozart's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra No. 25 in C Major. Each of the selections was capable, by merits of its own personality, of establishing a mood or planting an idea, and then providing nourishment for its growth. One of the most effective examples of this was the atmosphere during the section of "The Minataur" depicting a battle between the Greek Theseus and the monster Minotaur. The entire audience breathed a collective sigh of relief at the end.

Perhaps the most beautiful piece was the Mozart concerto. This included piano music, superbly conveyed by young pianist Murray Perahia. One single melody ran throughout the entire concerto, tossed around like a ball in a game of catch between the orchestra and the piano. The piano in its simplicity and the power of the strings and wind instruments created an amazing contrast.

This review is being written from the point of view of a musical peon, ignorant of the principles of music theory or and the styles of the various composers. But a listener does not have to be any more educated to appreciate Haydn than he does to appreciate Crosby, Stills, and Nash or Miles Davis. The Boston Philharmonia, with a little help from Mr. Kirchner, proved that well.

This sketch by Elbert Weinberg is one of 145 works to be exhibited at the University of Massachusetts Art Gallery in Herter Hall from Feb. 11 to March 5.

China Night Scheduled

In the middle of Winter Carnival Weekend, Feb. 20, 1971 at 8:00 p.m. the UMass Chinese Association will sponsor China Night in the S.U. Ballroom. Featured in the festivities will be the Lion Dance, the Chinese New Year's Dance, Chinese folk dancing and singing, a musical rendition on the violin with a piano accompaniment and a short movie will be shown. In addition, there will be a display of martial art, including Kung Fu and Chan Shou. Refreshments consisting of Chinese pastries will be served during the evening. Since Winter Carnival concerts are banned, China Night should prove to be an economical and enjoyable replacement.

The Chinese Association, consisting of about 200 members, is the largest club of its nature on the UMass campus. The Association's purpose in introducing this bit of Chinese culture to UMass is to break the cultural barrier that exists between Americans and Chinese in the hope that by doing so, new and close friendships can arise between Chinese and American students at UMass and between peoples as a whole.

Reservations may be made at the S.U. Ticket Office. There will be a nominal fee of $1.00 per person to cover the costs of refreshments.

Profile: Howard Hawks

An American Director

By RUSSELL C. MUNDY
Fine Arts Staff

It is alleged that there are but three admirers of Howard Hawks in Western Massachusetts, and the first two successfully remain anonymous. Long the least understood and least appreciated director of Sarris' pantheon, Hawks and his recently completed western, "Rio Lobo," at Springfield's Cinema Three signal a squaring of accounts is in order--a reckoning anew.

Time magazine pointed out last week that Hawks has enjoyed enormous success in a variety of genres. Though ordinarily remembered for his westerns, he has been equally adept with the musical, "Gentlemen Prefer Blonds" (1953), the meldrama, "The Big Sleep" (1946) and "To Have and Have Not" (1944), and the gangster film, "Scarface" (1932). While the long line of his memorable films is striking, so too is the absence of innovation. In the course of forty-five years of feature film direction, Hawks has contributed not one single original idea to film making. Moreover, his great successes have followed similar works by others. "Scarface" for instance followed "Public Enemy" (1931) and "Little Caesar" (1930), and "To Have and Have Not" followed "Casablanca" (1942). "The Big Sleep" owes a good deal to "The Maltese Falcon" (1941).

For many a discussion of Hawks is over at this point. He is dismissed as a journeyman only, unoriginal and imitative. There is more to be said however. Hawks is interested exclusively in telling a story. Form and technique beyond the straightforward run the risk of causing distraction. Is it film heresy to suggest by comparison that the opulence of von Sternberg and Welles will be dismissed in the future as wondrous examples of mannered gropping for an easy and unobtrusive film language? Is Hawks' unobtrusiveness any less than a triumph of Joyce's dictum for the artist to refine himself out of existence? And is not the transparence that Susan Sontag calls the "most liberating value in art today"?

His work is out of touch with the times in more than one way. There are no over-riding symbols in his work like Peter Fonda's motorcycle. Even Jean-Luc Godard, the man who believes now that all film is essentially political, would be hard pressed to find anything but the broadcast political quality in Hawks' films. In a period beset with thematic significance Hawks goes on merely telling his stories.

All of this is not to say that there is no continuing fiber that holds his work together. On the contrary, few directors in Hollywood have been as free to do the work of their choice as Hawks. And Sarris does not include him among a pantheon of auteurs for nothing. Separate or collected his films express persistently values of an America slipping past. His characters rise or fall because of what they presume to do. There is none of Antonioni's impotence in Hawks. In a decidedly masculine world his heroes are judged by their actions in the face of bitter opposition.

There is no decadent self-consciousness about Hawks' explicit conviction in the values of his work. None of the decadence of "There was a Crooked Man" in which the western genre, America's unique contribution to film via an indigineous soul that includes Fenimore Coop and Bret

The original, untrampled American soul--its puritanism, its resourcefulness, its bawdyness, despite criticism for the right and from the left, gleams variously in several recent westerns. ("Two Mules for Sister Sara", "The Wild Bunch", "Butch Cassidy," "The Ballad of Cable Hogue"), but nowhere more consistently or more lucidly than in the westerns of Howard Hawks ("Red River", "El Dorado", "Rio Bravo", "Rio Lobo").

Films

A MAN CALLED HORSE (Sunday, Student Union, 7 and 9)
Richard Harris as a British aristocrat captured by the Sioux Indians and made to prove his manhood within their culture. An accurate and exciting adventure story.

BEAUTY AND THE BEAST (Friday, Amherst College.)
The classic film version of the fairy tale by the French artist Jean Cocteau.

THE BLUE ANGEL and DISHONORED (Thompson 104, Wednesday, 8)
Two films both starring Marlene Dietrich and directed by the Eirck von Sternberg. THE BLUE ANGEL is a classic film which brought Marlene Dietrich into the limelight.

CARRY IT ON (Talkie, Northampton)
A warm and sensitive study of David and Joan Baez Harris. It follows in an unassuming, simple documentary style their last few months together before David entered a federal prison on a draft evasion conviction. Joan sings thirteen songs, which is reason enough for seeing the film.

DOCTOR'S WIVES (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
Dyan Cannon (Alice of "BOB AND CAROL AND...fame) and Richard Crenna (remember Luke in "The Real McCoy's) team in this adaptation of Frank J. Slaughter's novel. This film is directed by George Schaeffer, the man responsible, some year's back, for some excellent Hallmark Hall of Fame television specials.

I AM A GROUPIE (Academy of Music, Northampton)
Yes, faster than a speeding bullet, more powerful than a locomotive, able to take on small buildings at a single bound, yes I am a Groupie. A Groupie, strange visitor to beds of famous rock and roll stars who go there with powers and abilities far beyond those of mortal women. Yes, A Groupie, disguised as maybe the girl-next-door, who is committed to a never ending battle for dope, good times, and an American (or perhaps British) lay.

THE LEOPARD (Tuesday, February 16, Thompson 104, 6 and 9)
Visconti's stunning account of the revolution in Italy during the last century. Burt Lancaster, Alain Delon, and Claudia Cardinale head a large, excellent cast in this colorful, opulent pageant.

LOVE STORY (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
Erich Segal's cinematic and literary answer to Roth's.

PORTNOY'S COMPLAINT. If given a choice, I would take little Alexander's high aims over this little tale of love - and death (complete with moral) any day. What do you want, anyway, a good movie or good taste? It is the perfect film for the "nouveau riche" (and others) for the Ali McGraw dies gracefully and Ryan O'Neal wears nice sweaters.

THE MOUSE THAT ROARED (Friday, Thompson 194, 6:45 and 9:30)
A delightfully funny film. What happens when a tiny country in Europe declares war on the USA—then wins (or at least captures its most important weapon). Peter Sellers, in a bit of comic skill only he could master, plays three roles; that of the prime minister, the grand duchess, and the heriditary field marshall. A clever hilarious spoof.

THE OWL AND THE PUSSYCAT (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
What happens when a prostitute sets out to get an education. She uses her vocation as her tuition, so to speak, and hooks an aspiring novelist. Barbra Streisand and George Segal are the couple who put the Famous Writer's Correspondence School to shame. A funny, vulgar film.

MY LITTLE CHICKADEE (Saturday, Merrill Science Center, Amherst)
Miss Flower Belle Lee has been run out of town by a group of lady vigilantes where, on a train midst an Indian raid, she meets Cutberth J. Twillies, a surveyor of novelties and notions. They are married. This is how this improbable western--comedy, teaming Mae West (as Flowerbelle) and W.C. Fields (as Twillies). It is their only film together and isn't what it could have been but is nevertheless an enjoyable film.

THE SILENCERS (Friday, Mahar, 7 and 9:30)
Dean Martin as Matt Helm, a comic James Bond-type spy who works to foil the plans of the sinister "Big O" organization. Enough girls and gimmicks for even a glutton for this sort of film.

THERE'sS A GIRL IN MY SOUP (campus Cinemas, Hadley)
Peter Sellers on the make, Goldie Hawn on the taken, in this rather tacky and not-all-that-funny film version of the mildly successful Broadway play of some seasons past.

THERE WAS A CROOKED MAN (Amherst Cinema, Amherst)
A lively, well-directed, purely entertaining romp through the Old West. Kirk Douglas and Henry Fonda, well-supported by a colorful bunch of old pros plot an elaborate break from a escape-proof prison. Satire becomes confused, occassionally, but it is still an enjoyable film experience.

TRASH (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
Andy Warhol produced his first totally-commercial effort in this film about life in the East Village. Warhol protegee Paul Morrisey directed star Joe Dalisenderro as a young man leading a rather frustrating sex-life. Holly Woodlawn as his wife (in a very loose sense) gives a fine comic portrayal and is able to keep you guessing throughout. Truly, not for the weak or the naive for it is quite explicit. Warhol's answer to "The Sensuous Women".

RIO LOBO (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
Howard Hawkes again teams with John Wayne (as they did with HATARI and RIO BRAVO) for another fine western. The problem with Wayne, though, is that the man and the myth somehow get confused and the legend becomes ludicrous.

WILD IN THE STREETS (Academy of Music, Northampton)
What would happen if the children of America took over. Christopher Jones and Shelley Winters are featured in this film brought to you by the makers of BEACH BLANKET BINGO and SATAN'S SADISTS.

Theater

THE HOMECOMING
Harold Pinter's play, originally produced in 1965 by the Royal Shakespeare Company in London. The play concerns a family of men in a relative seedy home in London. Into their lives returns the eldest son and his wife, back from America where he had been teaching philosophy. Here the family relationship is explored, developed, and defined. It has been hailed, by some, as Pinter's finest play. At Theatre 14, Smith College, Friday through Sunday evenings at 8. ($)

THE OPEN THEATER
One of off-off Broadway's best acting ensembles takes up residence here on campus next week. On Tuesday and throughout the rest of the week daily workshops, master classes and lecture demonstrations are planned with the company and its co-directors Joseph Chaiken and Roberta Sklar. Next Thursday the company will perform "Terminal". "Terminal" according to NY Times critic Mel Gussow, is a "stunning horror" which "deals with appearance and reality, exteriors and interiors of life and death, all those generalities that most so-called serious theatre claims to concern itself with an seldom does, except superficially." At Bowker Auditorium, Thursday at 8:30. ($)

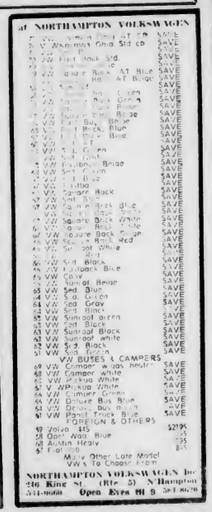
New Art Works Acquired

Works of art acquired by the University during 1969 and 2970 will be on display for three weeks beginning Thursday, February 11, from 5 to 7 P.M. at the University Art Gallery in Herter Hall.

The 145 works by 118 artists will include contemporary drawings, prints, paintings, sculptures, and pottery--with an emphasis on drawings.



On exhibit from 10 am to 5 pm Monday through Friday until March 5 will be pencil sketches, pen and ink drawings, oils, acrylics, lithographs, and serigraphs; and sculptures in bronze and aluminum.

After the exhibit, the works will be intergrated with others in the art acquisitions collection.

Gymnasts Host Chiefs Tonight

By MICHAEL CUSACK
Staff Reporter

The UMass varsity gymnasts will try and move their 4-1 record up a notch when they host Springfield College, tonight at 8:15 in Curry Hicks Cage.

Springfield is currently in second place in the Eastern League with a record of 5-1, while UMass is third with a record of 3-1 in league competition, 4-1 overall. What was supposed to have been a rebuilding year for the Chiefs is turning out to be a highly successful one. Their only loss came at the hands of Penn State, a team that soundly defeated the Redmen recently.

Last year, the Chiefs, under coach Frank Wolcott, had an undefeated season with a 7-0 slate. They won the New Englands, became Eastern Team Champs, and finished third in the NCAA College Division Nationals. The loss of all-Americans Mike Provencher, Dave Ellis, and Chuck Sheibler, who was National rings champ last year, has naturally hurt the Chiefs, but they still present a formidable challenge.

Springfield is led by all-around Jeff Wiles, who is outstanding on floor exercise, sidehorse, parallel bars, and high bar. Its two other all-around men, Rich Martin and Sal Scuderi, are both former State High School All-Around Champs, all of which indicates that the UMass all-arounds, Norm Vexler, Tony Vacca, and Rich Seikunas are going to face some stiff competition.

Springfield captain, Ed Datti, who is an excellent performer on floor exercise, long horse and parallel bars, will be the top specialist for the Chiefs in these events. Other outstanding specialists for Springfield include Ron Brown and Andy Wahtera on sidehorse, Jim Harvey on still rings, and Tony Manzella on high bar.

For the Redmen, Coach Erik Kjeldsen will present the strongest lineup possible in an effort to topple the Chiefs. The underdog Redmen hope to be be fully prepared in time for the Chiefs, their arch-rivals. UMass has the potential to win, but whether or not they will put it all together will be seen tonight, beginning at 8:15.

Due to heavy spectator interest, the meet will be held in the Cage instead of the Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

Coach Jerry Calkin's undefeated junior varsity squad will resume competition tonight at 5 p.m. in the Cage, when they host their counterparts from Springfield College.

Co-captained by Phil Aubrey and Bill Henry, the squad has been working hard in hopes of extending a winning streak of fourteen meets, which spans three seasons.

At the present time, Len Aubrey, Jim Battista, and Chuck Schwartz are slated to represent UMass in the all-around event.

Outstanding gymnasts for the Little Redmen include Henry on floor exercise, Hassig on sidehorse, and Aubrey on rings and parallel bars.

Following Friday nights action, the Little Redmen will host Army in a meet on Mon., Feb. 15 at 2:00 p.m. This meet, to be held in the Boyden Auxiliary Gym, will feature freshmen only, providing spectators with an insight as to what future stars UMass will produce.

Coeds Perform Well Over Past Weekend

By SHARON MILES
Staff Reporter

The UMass Women's varsity basketball team lost a see-saw contest to Northeastern Saturday Feb. 6, 44-42.

Northeastern led 15-14 at the end of the first period, but UMass battled back to take a one point lead into halftime, 23-22.

In the third period Northeastern opened up an eight point lead, a deficit UMass couldn't quite overcome. The fourth period was largely a defensive battle -- UMass held NU to two points, but it was all for naught, as the team scored only six points in that stretch. The last minute, shades of Providence College, found UMass taking 9 shots from the floor and 2 foul shots -- and missing all of them.

High scorer for UMass was Dolly Lambdin with 13, followed by Nancy Lindberg with 12. Pat Bash and Leslie Barselaar were tops in rebounds, with nine and eight respectively.

UMass shot an unimpressive 21% from the floor (16 for 75); NU's stats were a bit better -- 30% (17 for 55).

The UMass JV's fared the same, dropping their tilt 49-38. NU JV's essentially put the game out of reach in the second period scoring 5 field goals while UMass netted just four free throws.

Leading scorers for the UMass JV's were Beth Fay with 12 points and Joanne McGowan with 11. Fay and Alice Cool each grabbed seven rebounds.

The varsity's next game is at the President's Tournament at Southern Conn. U on Monday Feb. 15.

Quintangular Mat Meet At UMass

By BOB GANLEY
Staff Reporter

Coming of an impressive and very much needed victory over UConn, the UMass wrestlers hope to continue their winning ways when they host an invasion from the south tomorrow at Boyden at 11:00. The Redmen will be in the quintangular meet along with Monmouth, Trenton St., Western Maryland and Wesleyan.

This meet, which will pit team against team in a round robin type-affair, could go a long way in improving UMass' New England ratings. The win over UConn came as a surprise to none and in view of the fact that Harvard knocked off Springfield on Wednesday, the Redmen could rise in the rankings with a sweep over the weekend.

Early in December, when it looked as though the Redmen would be a serious contender for number one honors, they defeated Harvard, but a tie and two straight losses last week hurt UMass' chances.

The Redmen now stand at 6-3-1 with wins over Tufts, Rhode Island, Harvard, NYU, Gettysburg and UConn. The losses have come at the hands of West Chester State, Springfield and Coast Guard, while the standoff was a 17-17 affair with Yale.

Each team will wrestle four dual meets during the course of the day, and it will give UMass fans an opportunity to see the entire team in action. In addition to the starting lineup, all of the Redmen wrestlers will be on hand in case any of the opposing wrestlers get injured. Due to the fact that there will be about 100 matches during the meet, it is necessary that the home team supply alternates in case of illness or injury, and substitutions also can be made between meets, so this will give coach Homer Barr an opportunity to see all of his grapplers in action.

The 11:00 a.m. starting time is also a necessity. Using two mats at the same time, each team will wrestle two matches and this will probably end around 2:30. Then the teams will break for a rest and some food, and will return at 6:00 p.m. for the final two matches. The Redmen will have a bye in the opening round and will probably take the mats at about noon.

The meet will be scored as four dual matches for the Redmen, as well as four for the other teams. Total points will also be kept and an overall champion will be determined.

Little is known about some of the teams the Redmen will be opposing, and the Redmen have met only one of them in the past, that being Monmouth in a meet last year which the Redmen won, 31-8. Wesleyan is an average New England team, but the other two could be tough. Western Maryland won the Mason-Dixon conference last year and Trenton State is undefeated this season.

Coach Barr feels the Redmen are up for tomorrow's encounters after suffering through a slump for the past two weeks. He will start Duncan Innes at 118, Dave Reynolds at 126, Sheldon Goldberg at 134, Clay Jester at 142, Peter Rock at 150, Jim Godkin at 158, Kent Mignocci at 167, Ed Carlsson at 177, George Zguris at 190 and Carl Dambman at heavyweight.

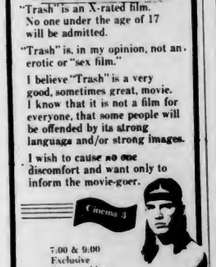
Also expected to see action are Dave Amato, Barry Godowsky, Phil Davis, Mike Brauner, Steve DelMaestro, Chris Hodson, and Tom Young. Regulars Brian Urquhart and Nick DiDomenico are still nursing injuries and will be unable to see any action.

On Monday night the UMass hockey team travels to Vermont for a game with the Division II leading Catamounts. For all the action tune in to WMUA 91.1 FM. Air time is 7:15.

UMass, UConn Frosh In Return Match

By STEVE FERBER
Staff Reporter

At home for the fourth time in nine days, the Little Redmen go up against the UConn freshmen in the return match of a home and home series. The 6 p.m. tip-off tomorrow night will prelude a UMass-UConn varsity game, as the home club looks to extend its latest winning streak to six.



Cal Chapman, a 6'5 forward, was UConn's spark in the first meeting of these two teams, and his jumpers from the corner will most likely bother the Little Redmen again. Although Chapman's game high 24 points made him the dominating Huskie in that game, the backcourt team of Ed Harrison and Pat Mullin, both 6'2, will also be of primary concern for the home frosh.

The first encounter of these two squads brings back memories of the slow slow start of the Little Redmen. They were down 8-0 before they recovered to chalk up their fourth victory of the season by a margin of 78-65.

With a perfect 9-0 slate at home (12-1 overall), the UMass frosh will go at it again with Rich Pitino, Al Skinner, Peter Trow, John Olson, and Art Levine. Coming off of their finest performance of the season, against the B.C. freshmen, the Little Redmen will be in for another firm test tomorrow. If the past few games are an indication, the Little Redmen will meet this challenge most handily.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

A dog born under Cancer may literally be a "chow hound." This dog lives to eat. He is easily trained, is loyal and affectionate, usually very good with children. But the canine born under Cancer must be given plenty of exercise, and never as much food as seems to be desired. The dog is sensitive, hates to be left alone, suffers when parted from master or mistress. His appetite is his weak point: if you spoil this animal by overfeeding you will be ruining an excellent dog. Check with your veterinarian.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Include family member in making future plans. Accent is on travel, vacation, basic preparations. Moderation is key. Don't make promises you can't keep.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Improvements now are not halfway. Be prepared to handle surging emotions. Control impulses. You will have to face yourself in morning. Response to affection is high on agenda.

Hoopmen Host Hot Huskies

By EARLE BARROLL
Sports Editor

Riding the crest of three convincing wins in a row, the Huskies of UConn will be gunning for the upset when they come to do battle with the UMass hoopmen tomorrow night at Curry Hicks Cage with tap-off set for 7:30.

After a rather slow start including a humiliating defeat at the hands of Maine at Orono, UConn has come back to avenge that loss at Storrs, defeat Florida Southern and trounce Colgate a couple of nights ago.

This will be the second meeting of the year between the two clubs, the first being the hard earned Redman triumph at UConn, 74-68, in the middle of December. Regardless of the records the Huskies and the Redmen have always had tough games over the years.

UConn comes into this encounter with a league record of 4-3 and an overall record of 8-9. The Huskies rely mostly on the offensive punch they get from three sharp shooters by the names of Bob Staak, Bob Boyd and Al Vaughn.

UMass fans will remember Staak and Boyd from the first game this year as the two of them scored 55 of UConn's 68 points and time and time again hit on long bombers to keep the Huskies in the tray when it appeared the Redmen were in command of the game.

Staak stands 6'4 and has been averaging in the neighborhood of 22 points this season. Boyd, at 5'11 had been in a mid-season slump but has come out of it over the past few games.

Vaughn is the sleeper of the trio. He's a sophomore and saw only limited action in the first game without scoring. Since that time he has developed into a strong outside threat from his guard position. He stands 6'2 and has scored 34 points against Maine, and 19 against both Fairfield and Boston College.

These three will pose a problem on offense due to the fact that they shoot consistantly from the outside. Thirty foot attempts are right down their ally and if they're hitting as was the case at Storrs UMass could have its hands full.

The other two starters for UConn are 6'5 Ron Hrubala and 6'7 Bob Parsons. Hrubala is the squads tough man under the boards and leads the team in rebounds as he did last season. In the first contest he scored only five points and was kept in check by the UMass front court.

Parsons, like Vaughn did not see much action at Storrs. But he too, developed rapidly and has been a welcomed addition to the Huskie front court.

On the bench UConn has three solid reserves in Dick Gillespie, Phil Hoagland and Doug Melody. Gillespie is a 6'8 sophomore transfer from William and Mary and was recently activated by the Huskies.

Hoagland and Melody were starters against the Redmen at Storrs but have since been replaced by Vaughn and Parsons.

On defense one can expect UConn to press, play man-to-man and zone if they have to. The Huskies will probably try to get fouls on the Redmen as so many teams have tried this year.

They believe they can beat the Redmen. Winning is in their blood and after their loss to UMass at Storrs they'll be ready to give their all when the battle begins.

For the Redmen coach Jack Leaman has not decided on his complete starting line-up for the game. One position is yet to be decided on and by the end of tonight's practice this will be resolved.

Commenting on the game and the UMass-BC game..Latest stats show Julius Erving still way out in front in scoring and rebounding in New England with 27.9 points and 20 rebounds per game....Syracuse, which comes to play the Redmen at the cage on Monday the 22nd defeated Army Wednesday night 57-46 to run its record to 13-5...Don't forget the George Washington game at Madison Square Garden on the 27th of this month. Another 500 tickets have been received at the Boyden ticket office.

the atmosphere surrounding it coach Jack Leaman said, "After the big win over Boston College everyone thought the season was over. The nets were cut down and the fans went wild. We're a little tired after the win but I'm sure the guys will be ready for this one when Saturday comes."

Resurgent Trackmen At Northeastern

By EARLE BARROLL
Sports Editor

With the first win of the season under its belt the UMass track team travels to Northeastern tomorrow for a dual meet with the always tough Huskies with the first event to get under way at 1 p.m.

During the past ten to 15 years the rivalry between these two teams has been as intense as any in New England and has provided for close meets and top flight individual performances.

Tomorrow's meet should be no different as both schools have been rounding out their shape since the beginning of the new year and both have their eyes on the number one spot in the region.

To predict the outcome would be impossible. All that can be said is that it will be close all the way. The meet will be a battle of weaknesses and strengths for both teams off setting one another with the team that can come up a key point here or there probably coming out on top.

For the past three years Northeastern has been either the New England indoor or outdoor team champion in track. The Huskies have always been known as a team with good depth and outstanding individual performers. This year's edition is the same.

In the weight events Northeastern has the finest group in New England. Its big man in this event is Tom Sirois who won the ECAC championship last year in the weight throw.

The Redmen will have to balance off the power of Northeastern in the weights with their mile and two mile runners lead by Ron Wayne, Larry Paulson, Tom Jasmin, and Don Dunsky.

Northeastern has fine middle distance strength in the 600 yard run and the mile relay. To offset this Huskie power UMass will have its spirit trio of Ron Harris, Tony Pendleton and Walt Mato and its two hurdlers Jim Graves and Jerry Spellman. All five ran very well at Dartmouth with the sprinters sweeping and the hurdlers taking one two.

The final confrontation of power offsetting power is in the pole vault and high jump. Northeastern has the top collegiate pole vaulter in New England in Jim Carrisella who has vaulted 15 feet plus.

The Redmen will have Cal Carpenter and Ed Shaughnessey in the high jump to offset the Huskie points scored in the vault.

With most of the preseeding happening there has to be a critical head on battle to break the meet open and this will probably happen in the 1000 yard run or the long jump.

In the 1000 yard run Redman Dave Evans, fresh off a 2:14 performance at Dartmouth will have it out with his close rival Ralph Bowman from Northeastern. Both runners are in the top three or four at this distance in New England and should have a tight battle.

The long jump will feature three jumpers from each school who have jumped between 21 and 22 feet.

This is how the meet lines up. It should be as close as in the past. As far as motivation is concerned, the Redmen will be just as motivated as they were for the Dartmouth meet. UMass trackmen never have trouble in getting themselves up for Northeastern.

Pucksters Face Tough Stretch

By DAN KAMAL
Asst. Sports Editor

The UMass hockey team hits the road to face three of its toughest opponents in the span of four days, starting tonight at 8:00 against Providence College, a Division 1 team.

The Friars, who sport a season record of 11-8, including an impressive 11-2 win over Vermont, are coming off a win against Merrimack College at Merrimack last Tuesday.

Eric Scrafield

A predominantly Canadian team, Providence is also a very physical club that depends on its size to intimidate the opposition. Symbolizing the size of the club is leading scorer, Rich Pumple, a 6'2, 205 center.

On Saturday night, the Redmen travel to Boston for an 8:30 game against another Division I club, Northeastern University. The Huskies pulled a major upset early in the year when they beat Division I powerhouse the University of New Hampshire. Also included in their overall record of 5-15 are a win over Pennsylvania and a 7-1 routing of Merrimack.

Probably the biggest game of the weekend, as far as Division II playoff hopes go, is a 7:30 p.m. encounter against the University of Vermont at Burlington. Vermont, after compiling a mediocre record of 6-4 in its first 10 games, has improved its slate to 12-5.

The high point of the season so far for the Catamounts was a major upset victory over hevily favored Harvard University at Watson Rink in Cambridge last January 6. In that game, All-American goalie Dave Reece came up with 41 saves for UVM. That performance earned Reece an award from Sports Illustrated Magazine.

However, Reece is not the only bright spot on this powerful Vermont squad. Senior center George Minarsky is currently leading the team in scoring with 28 points on 11 goals and 17 assists. Minarsky is the second leading scorer in Catamount history and needs only nine points to become Vermont's all-time high scorer.

Also pacing UVM's attack are sophomore forwards Pat Wright and Fred Hunt who are right up with Minarsky in the race for team scoring lead.

Vermont is 10-1 in Division II and has only one loss in the division in the past two years. That loss, of course, was the 3-2 over time loss to the Redmen at Orr Rink early in the season.

Despite the fact that his team is coming off an 11-1 victory over the University of Connecticut, Coach Jack Canniff feels that the icemen have not broken out of their recent scoring slump. He noted that the Redmen got off an incredible of 72 shots on UConn goalie John Santucci and felt that the Redmen should have lit the lamp more than 11 times.

Paul Riley

ICE CHIPS: Pat Keenan scored two more goals Wednesday as he took the lead among Division II scorers... Also figuring in the UMass bombardment were defenseman Brian Sullivan who has done a great job all year and added two goals against UConn, Eric Scrafield and Charlie Donovan who also had double tallies, and Dan Reidy, Jack Edwards and Paul Riley with singleton scores... UMass' high-scoring line of Keenan centering Reidy and Edwards has totalled 73 points so far this season....Keenan leads with 18-14-32, Edwards has 8-13-21, and Reidy has 7-13-20.

Girl Gymnasts Compete Today

The UMass girl's gymnastics teams are facing a busy weekend. The Varsity will compete against the Newton-Marblehead Elite team this afternoon and the JV girls will take on Braintree High School on Monday.

The Varsity, undefeated so far, will face a stiff challenge and the outcome is by no means certain. Most interesting battle for All-Around honors should develop between Lisa Cain from Newton and Margie Combs from UMass. Both girls have competed before, but under different circumstances. Miss Combs, Colorado state champion before coming to UMass, was narrowly defeated by Miss Cain, then Utah state champion, for the Regional representative to the Junior Olympic Championships last year.

Later on, Miss Cain was injured and Miss Combs did get her chance to represent the region after all. Now, a year later and both on the East Coast, the girls will meet once again.

The meet will be held at 3:00 p.m. in the Boyden Auxiliary Gymnasium.

The JV team, with a 1-1 record so far, will play host to the Braintree High School gymnastics team on Monday at 7:00 p.m. in the Boyden Ausiliary Gymnasium.

Next Saturday, the UMass Varsity will meet Salem State and West Chester in a three way meet at Salem State.

This is a very big weekend for UMass sports. Two of the most important events will be the dual gymnastics meet between UMass and Springfield tonight at the Cage and the Quintangular wrestling meet here on Saturday. For the details see pages 10 and 11.

'There is no diversity allowed in the Economics Dept.'

Rumored Shakeup Puts Profs On Guard

By ANN GURNETT
MDC Staff

Although it's an accepted aphorism that lightning never strikes in the same place twice, it seems that the Economics Dept. here at UMass is going to prove quite an exception to the rule.

Since it was made public that Economics Prof. Mike Best was being given a terminal contract, uncertainty within the dept. among the professors has been growing. With ten people up for reappointment this year, the uncertainty began to breed rumors of impending dismissals.

No official action has been taken yet to dismiss any of the remaining Economics faculty. However, as rumors fly and tension mounts, certain of the people up for reappointment have begun to assess their own objectives as economists at the University, the University's role as an institute of education, and the relevance of the Economics dept. and what it teaches in relation to the students.

According to Economics Prof. Robert Hinckley, "There is no diversity allowed in the Economics Dept. here at the University. All that is allowed is the traditional type of economics; however, the methodology of the old economic type is simply not adequate to solve the new problems faced by students and by the rest of the world. The people in power in the dept. believe their narrow scope of economic knowledge to be the absolute truth. They refuse to meet other people in the dept., such as myself, in open dialogue. Their absolute power is descended from the administration of the University, where the concern is less for a good undergrad program than it is for personal advancement and career success."

Hinckley, a professor here for four years, is facing a dilemma not unlike the one encountered by Mike Best. "I refuse to waste time in research irrelevant to the problems faced by students today. The past four years that I have spent teaching have been a continued search for knowledge outside of grad school, making it impossible for me to publish."

According to Hinckley, the fact that the administration is so career oriented has strong implications for undergrad education.

Particular issues, such as the problems in the Economics dept., are indicative of things basically wrong in the University. Our problem is just the top of the iceberg, the whole system is based upon an incomplete view of what knowledge is, which leads to the academic destruction of a great number of undergrads and general chaos within the University. Most students have no meaning for education. What is needed is a complete reform a new university, which recognizes as its biggest obligation the education of students. Presently," he continued, "the University only trains students to perform a specific task. However, their problems go beyond scientific rationale, we need to provide them with wisdom on which to form a basis for their personal lives after graduation."

Hinckley went on to explain that he feels that the need for changes lies not within the power structure but within the apathy of the students, which is ultimately due to the educational processes to which they have been submitted. "We must break out of this vicious circle," he added. "Students must find affirmation in life."

The head of the Economics Dept. has termed both Hinckley and Best as 'mediocre' teachers and scholars, a claim which can be proved untrue by looking at the two mens' academic records and by talking with their students.

"Such charges really don't concern either myself or Prof. Best," continued Hinckley. "I myself have many options open to me, as does Best. I am sure However, that's not what counts; what's important is that students get a real affirmation of their lives. That's what we're fighting for. I am confident that what people like myself and Best are arguing will be accepted in the long run.

Bernadette Devlin To Speak Here Wednesday

Bernadette Devlin, youngest member of the British Parliament from Northern Ireland, will speak at 4 p.m. Wednesday in Curry Hicks Cage on the Irish Resistance movement.

The heroine of the Catholic movement in Northern Ireland is being sponsored by the UMass Distinguished Visitor's Program.

Considered the "Joan of Arc of the Catholic emancipation", Miss Devlin claims to care nothing for catholicism, but for socialism. She believes socialism will rescue Northern Ireland from its quandaries.

BERNADETTE DEVLIN

Miss Devlin is in the United States on a speaking and fund-raising tour. Earlier this week in Boston she told newsmen violence in her country is the natural outgrowth of poverty and government oppression.

When she was only 21 Miss Devlin rocketed to fame overnight with her fighting "Maiden Speech" before a packed House of Commons.

She is the third child in a Catholic, working-class family of six children. Her father died when she was nine, and her mother when she was 19. She interrupted her university studies to go into Parliament.

Miss Devlin's career in Parliament has not been conventional. She is outspokenly contemptuous of parliamentary democracy, prefers action to legislation, and, for helping to organize resistance to police in the Londonderry riots last August, has been sentenced to six months in prison. She is at liberty, waiting for her appeal against conviction and sentence to be heard.

Given the key to New York City by Mayor John Lindsay, Miss Devlin left instruction to hand it over to the Black Panthers. It has been said that in Northern Ireland the Catholics are Blacks who happen to have white skin.

Miss Devlin's appearance is subject to last minute change pending any departure from her tour plans as a result of current disturbances in Northern Ireland, but a coffee hour is scheduled for 3 to 4 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge tomorrow prior to the Cage address.

Class Gov't?

There has been almost no negative reaction voiced on campus to the Student Senate's abolition of class government last week. Senators contacted by this reporter say that there has been no feedback from their constituents and interpret this as either approval or a complete lack of concern on the part of the student body.

The only disapproval voiced by a Senator was over the abruptness of the method used by the Senate. Senator Karen MacNutt, who said she was "rather shocked by the whole thing", would have liked to have had the action on the motion delayed to allow Senators more time to talk to their constituents about it.

Senator MacNutt pointed out that the motion printed on the agenda for last week's meeting called for only a revision of class government, not a repeal. That measure would simply have amended the Class Government Act to limit the amount of class tax to charge per class member. The repeal was acted on by the Senate as a substitute motion which was not publicized enough beforehand, according to MacNutt.

"It was too quick a death for something that's been part of this campus for so long," in Senator MacNutt's opinion. She said there didn't seem to be anybody in the Senate opposed to ending class government, but that she is sure there are people on campus against it. However, just as numerous other Senators reported, she has heard no response from her dorm constituency.

Finders-Keepers

HONOLULU (AP) - A clean up crew found an hours old baby boy, cold but alive, stuffed in a waste basket in the restroom of a Trans World Airlines plane shortly after it arrived Monday.

Queen's Medical Center reported the baby in good condition.

The baby apparently was born aboard TWA Flight 743 from San Francisco. He was in a plastic bag when the clean up crew found it.

Police said they believed the mother continued on from Honolulu to Guam, Hong Kong and Bangkok. Efforts were being made to locate her.

Petitions Circulated On Senate Pay Referendum

By ANNE STADNICKI
MDC Staff

Petitions to bring the pay rates for officers of the Student Senate to a referendum before the student body are being circulated by Senator Bob Waters of Gorman House.

Waters, who is opposed to pay for the officers, is working against a time limitation for presenting his motion.

A period of five academic days is allowed after the vote on a bill for students to petition for a referendum on a matter, Waters said. Twenty-five percent of the undergraduate student body must sign the petitions within that period if the issue is to be put to the examination of the constituents, he explained.

Assuming that Saturday is an academic day, he said that his petitions must be presented to President Glenn Elters by Wednesday evening.

Approximately one thousand signatures have been obtained at this date, Waters continued. He needs at least 3,800 to fulfill the requirements.

Although he expects to have enough names by Wednesday, Waters said he could present the petitions to Elters on Thursday, claiming Saturday is not an academic day. If Elters refused to accept this argument, he said the case would be taken for adjudicament to the General Court.

Tables will be set up Tuesday and Wednesday in the Student Union and Campus Center to make the petitions available to students, Waters went on. He added that it is extremely important that time sheets be turned in no later than 10 p.m. tonight, and absolutely no later than 5p.m. on Wednesday, to him in 435 Gorman or at RSO.

Waters explained that his motion to raise the salaries and also to pay the committee chairmen, made after the pay proposal was passed last Wednesday, was meant to be a ludicrous gesture.

An elected officer of the Senate knows what he is getting into before he is elected, Waters contended, thus he should not become involved if he is not willing to work without monetary compensation.

"Too many groups on campus have requested salaries," he said. "Perhaps administrative jobs should be paid, but not the elective posts."

The time element is what we are fighting in order to bring the issue to the students, Waters emphasized.

Law Courses To Be Centralized

By ANN GURNETT
MDC Staff

A group of professors in the field of legal studies has evolved the idea of coordinating all the law-oriented courses offered by the colleges in the Five-College area, compiling them in the course description booklet, and offering them to members of the Five-College community in an attempt to interest students and faculty alike in non-professional legal education.

The group, including professors Ethan Katsh, Sam Goldman, Peter d'Errico, John Borisgnore, and Dick Hartzlerk teach law courses in this university under the auspices of the School of Business Administration, However, they are all of the opinion that this strictly geographical classification is the source of much of the misunderstanding which exists concerning courses in legal studies.

As Borisgnore said, "The fact that we are housed in SBA misleads students into thinking that we teach mainly business law- the kind they took in high school of junior college. This isn't so- the law we teach is not as mechanistic as business law and does not require rote memorization as does the other type."

We have two objectives in mind, he continued. The first is to bring profssors of the Five-College area with a common interest in law or questions about the legal aspects of their field together to discuss these legal nuances. The second is to provide extensive legal education that any civilized man should have. We are making a drive towards educating the campus in the fundamentals of law."

The UMass law program is designed more on a liberal arts base than on a business-administration format. There are over twenty law-oriented courses offered by the university, scattered among the different areas of concentration. Law programs have been maintained at other schools strictly on a graduate level, without concrete roots in the university community. As a result, people to teach undergrad law courses have been difficult to get and have done, for the most part, a rather poor job.

Prof. d'Errico sees this problem as ending. "There are a lot of singular people operating in the law field. Someone should put legal studies people together in the Five-College area and we hope to do it."

The solution for the overall problem seems to be to assemble all related legal studies and make them available to interested students. A distant goal envisioned by all five professors is to have a kind of law Center, where interested scholars and students could convene and discuss the various aspects of law as an important social phenomena.

While plans of establishing a Center for legal studies remain in the future, the professors are hopeful that students and faculty alike will avail themselves of the services of the legal studies dept. as it exists and help it realize its potential.

Student Mobe To Meet On Antiwar Offensive

Don Gurewitz, national executive secretary of the Student Mobilization Committee will speak at tonight's SMC meeting at 8:00 PM in room 174 of the Campus Center. Gurewitz is on a nation-wide speaking tour to publicize the antiwar demonstrations in Washington and San Francisco this April 24.

The National Peace Action Coalition has called for massive demonstrations on that date to demand immediate withdrawal of all U.S. troops from Southeast Asia. These demonstrations have been endorsed by numerous antiwar groups, as well as labor, including the U.A.W. and the Teamsters; women's groups and leading feminists, Kate Millett, Cindy Jaquith; in addition Congresswoman Shirley Chisolm, columnist Pete Hamill, and Rev. Charles Koen of the Black United Front for Survival of Cairo, Illinois, have endorsed the April 24 antiwar demonstration.

The spring antiwar offensive, begun in this area by a five-college sponsored demonstration held last Wednesday against the "Allied" invasion of Laos, will continue with a national planning conference in Washington this weekend, February 19-21. The last national antiwar conference held in Cleveland last spring, attracted some 4,000 antiwar activists from across the U.S.

At the national conference in Washington this weekend, to be held at Catholic University, students from across the nation will devise a strategy for spring antiwar activity. "It is planned as the largest student antiwar conference ever held in U.S. history," said one SMC spokesman. Any student from the University and five-college community wishing to attend that conference should come to tonight's SMC meeting, room 174 of the Campus Center at 8:00 PM. The SMC is organizing transportation to and from Washington. Everyone is encouraged to attend this SMC meeting to plan antiwar actions at this university in the coming months. Among the proposals is a Connecticut Valley Antiwar Coalition (CONVAC) meeting on February 27 at the University. Antiwar groups and individual activists from all over the Pioneer Valley are being invited to that meeting. In addition a demonstration at the Springfield induction center is being planned to demand an immediate end to the draft.

Lon Noi's Condition Markedly Improved

HONOLULU (AP) - Cambodian Premier Lon Nol was reported to be showing "slight but significant improvement" Monday at Tripler Army Hospital.

A hospital spokesman said the premier was out of bed and walking with assistance. A stroke a week ago resulted in partial paralysis of his left side.

Lon Nol arrived from Phnom Penh on a stretcher Saturday. Extensive tests and examinations were taken Sunday.

The hospital spokesman said the 57 year old premier slept soundly Sunday night and would continue in a routine of physical therapy with an emphasis on walking. He has been fitted with a brace for his left leg to aid him in walking.

In The Nation And The World

And It Doesn't Just Say 'Mama'

PARIS (AP) - Children sated with silly dollies who only wet their pants or croak "mama" get a very grownup new toy Monday: a pregnant doll that turns anybody's 8 year old into an obstetrician.

The child just pulls down on a zipper running along the blue and white trousers of the "future mama doll," and out pops a baby. It is painless childbirth.

The doll, described by its manufacturers as the first of its kind in the world, was unveiled at the Paris Toy Show.

"It's an educational toy, designed to demystify childbirth," said Andree Gesset a spokesman for Pintel, the manufacturer. "We've found that about nine out of 10 people who've seen it think it's in good taste.

"The rest complain that it's not necessary for kids to know where they come from, but our attitude is that with men on the moon, you can't keep saying that Jacques' baby brother was left in the cabbage patch by a stork," he added.

The baby, whose father is not named in the sales brochure, is a unisex child which looks reassuringly like the smiling, blonde mother. She wears a bright pink doll's maternity dress over her trousers.

Once into the cruel world, the little baby doll cries if you squeeze it.

Mrs. Gesset said that most children who played with the dolls "considered the whole arrangement with such naturalness that it shames any adult who is troubled by the notion." The doll, which probably will be exported, sells for $9.

Kennedy Subcommittee Pushes Nat. Insurance

WASHINGTON (AP)-Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, (D Mass.,) plans to use his new post as chairman of the Senate health subcommittee to press the case for a national health insurance system.

The subcommittee does not have legislative jurisdiction over the bill to create such a system already introduced by Kennedy.

But Kennedy feels he can advance its prospects strongly by conducting hearings in Washington and at various points over the nation.

The senator said in an interview he believes prospects are reasonably good for passage of his bill in this Congress, but probably not until 1972.

Since the legislation involves new taxes, it falls under the committee jurisdiction of Ways and Means in the House and Finance in the Senate.

Neither panel is considered likely to approve any plan as comprehensive as Kennedy's.

However, Rep. Wilbur D. Mills, (D -Ark.) Ways and Means chairman, plans hearings on various health care proposals and says some legislation is likely to clear his committee in late 1971 or early 1972.

Such a bill could become the vehicle for a Senate floor amendment establishing national health insurance.

That is the way medicare, the health program for Americans 65 and over, first was acted on in Congress.

Vigorous lobbying by the elderly gave a final push to medicare. Sponsors of national health insurance see the same kind of drive for their plan coming now from the middle class.

The Kennedy bill already has the sponsorship of one fourth of the Senate, including several Republicans.

The Massachusetts senator notes that the United States is the only major industrial nation without a system of national health insurance or a national health service.

"Instead, we have placed our prime reliance on private enterprise and private health insurance," he said in a statement at the time he introduced his bill.

"I believe that the private health insurance industry has failed us. It fails to control costs. It fails to control quality. It provides partial benefits, not comprehensive benefits; acute care, not preventive care. It ignores the poor and the medically indigent."

Under the senator's bill, every person in the United States would be eligible for benefits.

Meany Deems Price Controls 'Unfair'

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) - George Meany, the nation's "Mr. Labor," said Monday that any plans by President Nixon to single out the construction industry for wage price freezes would be unworkable and unfair.

"I don't think this would solve the problem. I don't think this would be fair," said Meany, president of the 13.6 million member AFL CIO.

Meany spoke to newsmen a few hours after White House emissary John T. Dunlop said a plan to curb rising costs in the construction industry might be considered but "it would have to apply to wages, profits, bids, the whole thing."

However, Dunlop, chairman of a government labor industry committee, said it was not yet certain what action the White House might take.

Meany also labeled as "gimmicks" the administration's revenue sharing program and a proposal to consolidate the Labor Department with other agencies in a governmental reform plan.

Meany listed the AFL CIO's two top legislative goals in Congress this year as a national health insurance program to cover all Americans, and a boost in the $1.60 minimum wage to at least $2.

"Even $2 isn't enough," Meany said.

He said the AFL CIO would go along with federal controls on all forms of income if the President felt them necessary and applied them nationwide rather than to just one industry.

He said he was hopeful that the federal government's recent easing of the nation's money supply might begin to reduce the highest unemployment in a decade, but that Nixon had so far failed to curb rising living costs and joblessness.

"I give him a great big goose egg," Meany said.

"You gave him a double goose egg last year," a reporter reminded him.

"That's right, it's still a double goose egg," said the 76 year old Meany.

The climb in living costs eased to 5.5 per cent last year, but combined with the 6.1 per cent hike the previous year added up to the worst two years of inflation in 20 years.

Unemployment has climbed sharply from 3.3 per cent of the work force when Nixon took office two years ago to 6 per cent now for a total of 5.4 million Americans out of work.

A.F. Sergeant Kidnapped

ANKARA, Turkey (AP)-A small band of Turks seized an Air Force sergeant inside a U.S. military installation Monday and fled with him in an American truck after shooting their way past unarmed gate guards. The airman was released 17 hours later.

Sgt. Jimmy Ray Finley, 24, an air policeman from Fort Worth, Tex., walked into his headquarters unharmed at 9 p.m. and underwent questioning by U.S. Air Force investigators. They gave no details of his abduction.

Officials said the kidnappers were believed to be leftist extremists, responsible for a year long wave of terrorist attacks on the U.S. military in Turkey, a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Turkish police launched a massive hunt for the kidnappers.

The pickup truck used to make the getaway in the 3:30 a.m. abduction was found with a flat tire and its motor running on a road about 10 miles outside Ankara later in the day. There was no sign of Finley or the kidnappers.

Finley was forced into the truck while on guard duty at the American installation on the outskirts of Ankara.

Turkish police said at least three men took part in the kidnapping. They entered the base apparently undetected.

There was speculation here that the kidnapping may have been pulled off by a group of leftists wanted for two recent bank robberies in Ankara.

Led by former Istanbul University law student Deniz Gezmis, this five man gang has been at large since being identified as robbers of a bank Jan. 11. On Feb. 12 another bank was robbed and bank employes also identified the robbers as members of the Gezmis gang. Their total haul was $11,466.

In Fort Worth, Finley's sister, Carolyn Davis, said he joined the Air Force after graduation from high school and planned to reenlist. He was sent to Turkey in October.

"He was devoted to the military," the sister said.

The kidnapping jolted the American community in Turkey.

"It's been building up to this," said a U.S. diplomat of the kidnapping and a spreading wave of anti American violence in Turkey.

American officials and soldiers stationed here have become increasingly nervous as bombs exploded at U.S. installations and Americans have been threatened, insulted and in some cases roughed up by leftist extremists.

Crib Deaths Explored, Answer Not Apparent

CHICAGO (AP)-On a recent Saturday in Chicago, five apparently healthy babies died. One-the son of a surgeon-had just been examined by his pediatrician and pronounced in good health.

He was being taken home by his mother when he died. The other four were found dead in their cribs.

The babies all died of a disease about which little is known. It is called "crib death" or "sudden infant death syndrome," and only accidents take more lives of children from infancy to age 14 in the United States.

An estimated 10,000 to 12,000 or about 1 of 300 American infants die of it each year. But accurate statistics are not available, doctors say, because police often attribute death from the disease to suffocation or respiratory infection. The figures are projected from areas studied.

The disease has no boundaries, however. About the same death rate has been found wherever studies were made, from Belfast to Prague to Manila.

The death of an apparently healthy, happy baby often brings more tragedy. Some parents become wracked with guilt feelings, believing they in some way, perhaps through neglect, have been responsible for the baby's death.

But medical authorities have sought to reassure them, saying there is nothing a parent can do at the present time to recognize and prevent the disease of the infant.

Experts say police and coroners often attribute death to suffocation because the babies are found with blankets over their heads or face down on their pillows. But the experts say research has shown it impossible for a healthy infant to remain with its face stuffed in a pillow.

"Parents whose babies die of this disease shouldn't feel responsible for their deaths any more than they would if the babies died of cancer," says Dr. A.B. Bergman, a Seattle pediatrician and leading authority on crib deaths.

Bergman, affiliated with Children's Orthopedic Hospital and Medical Center and the University of Washington, has been a member of a research team, along with Drs. George Ray, a virologist, and J. B. Beckwith, a pathologist, that has studied crib deaths, so called because most of them occur while the baby is sleeping.

The pediatrician said in a telephone interview that "a minuscule amount of research" has been done in this disease, as well as in childhood accidents.

"The point we want to get across," he said, "is that it is a real, definable disease-no longer a mystery killer."

Currency Change Smooth, Gr. Br. Goes Decimal

LONDON (AP) — Cashiers fumbled, bus riders missed their stops and small shopkeepers balked but Britain shifted into its new decimal currency Monday with surprising ease.

"The changeover appears to be going more smoothly in general than the board had expected," said Lord Fiske, chairman of the Decimal Currency Board which had guided the move away from a 1,200 year old system based on the 12 penny cent shilling.

Fiske said the public showed some surprise at the smallness of the new halfpenny. The coin is about the size of the U.S. dime, and this seems tiny to Britons used to nondecimal pennies 1 1/4 inches across.

The board said a nationwide shoppers' survey showed 67 per cent found decimal shopping easy and 69 per cent felt prices had been converted fairly into the new money. Forty seven per cent were opposed to the smaller coins but the Board said this initial criticism would pass.

More than a billion new half pennies have been minted and the government is making more.

Shouting confusion in the subways, long lines at the banks, angry scenes in the supermarkets - all had been predicted for Decimal Day. Instead a cheerful we're all in it together feeling prevailed. Strangers chatted on railroad platforms, comparing handsfull of unfamiliar coins.

"A smile is going to cover up an awful lot of wrong change today," a waitress commented.

Business transactions were slowed but many banks and stores that had expected a busy day were empty. Managers said customers appeared to be staying home and putting off their first brush with the new money until later in the week.

Three decimal coins - a half penny 1.2 cent, penny 2.4 cents and twopence 4.8 cents piece - went into circulation, joining the fivepence 12 cents, 10 pence 24 cents and 50 pence 1.20 pieces that have been in use for some time. The old money will be turned in at banks and melted down.

Officials say both the decimal currency - 100 new pence to the pound - and the 10 based metric measurements being gradually adopted in Britain will speed calculations.

Laos: 15 Choppers Lost In A Week

SAIGON (AP)-South Vietnam's invasion force rounded out its first week inside southern Laos on Monday with its advance slowed down.

Enemy gunners brought down two more U.S. helicopters with a reported loss of three men killed and three wounded.

The losses brought to 15 the number of American helicopters lost in the Laotian operation. The U.S. Command says eight Americans have been killed, nine wounded and two are missing. The latest six reported casualties are not included in that toll.

No significant fighting was reported on the ground Monday against what was described as a slippery enemy. Field reports and official accounts conceded the going was difficult. The day's advance was about a half mile.

Spokesmen cited rough terrain, weather and the finding of more stockpiles of arms and supplies as the main factors.

"The discovery of so many caches yesterday and today proved we need to have time to search for more caches before advancing faster," a South Vietnamese spokesman said.

At last reports Monday, the vanguard of the 11,000 man South Vietnamese force pushing along Highway 9 was about 15 miles inside Laos. Small units of reconnaissance teams have been reported deeper inside Laos. While the drive continued along the highway, other South Vietnamese military forces were spread 14 miles to the north and six miles to the south of the highway.

The latest supply stocks and facilities turned up along the branches of the Ho Chi Minh trail included an enemy training center of 400 small houses, large quantities of ammunition and rice and 400 bicycles. The bicycle has long been used by North Vietnamese to move war supplies to the South.

Military sources said that despite the relatively light contact since the Laos campaign began, they believe the enemy is capable of defending the area if reinforcements are moved in from the North. These sources also said they believe there will continue to be movement of war material South by detouring along other trails and avoiding the areas held by South Vietnamese forces.

The United States is supporting the drive into Laos with the full range of air power, and with troops positioned along the Vietnamese side of the border in the northwest corner of the country. Officials have maintained, however, there are no American ground combat troops in Laos and that none will be sent in. To the east around the Rock Pile in South Vietnam, scattered fighting continued again Monday. Field reports said 11 North Vietnamese had been killed in these clashes, and that four Americans were wounded. In the South Vietnamese thrust into Cambodia farther south, heavier fighting was reported.

Government spokesmen claimed 75 enemy were killed in that operation late Sunday in two major clashes. South Vietnamese casualties were said to have been six men killed and 10 wounded.

A dispatch from Phnom Penh said Cambodian troops clashed briefly with North Vietnamese forces close to Highway 7 in northeastern Cambodia. The Cambodian high command said government troops fought a brief battle on the outskirts of Tonle Bet on the Mekong River, 47 miles from the capital and also south of Prey Totung, small town on Highway 7-scene of a major battle last September.

Inside South Vietnam itself, only light and scattered action was reported.

Army To Pull Slot Machines From Its Clubs In Vietnam

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Army plans to ban slot machines soon from its clubs in Vietnam. But senatorial investigators still intend to determine how the devices got there in the first place and whether the millions of dollars put into them have contributed to widespread corruption.

In making its announcement late last week, the Army said it is removing the more than 2,700 slot machines from its bases in Vietnam because it is not practical to maintain them in a war zone.

But some members of Congress see the machines as the fount of a climate of corruption they say has spread throughout the management of the military services' annual $6 billion non appropriated fund activities which are supported through sales to GIs and their families.

Slot machines generated more than $27.5 million in revenue to Army clubs alone in 1969. Hearings opening before the Senate permanent investigations sub-committee Wednesday are expected to produce more demands they be banished from all military bases.

Sen. Edward J. Gurney, (R. Fla) reporting to the sub-committee on a trip to Vietnam last November for the investigations panel, is the latest to make that demand.

"From Augsburg, Germany, in the early 1960s to Vietnam in the early 1970s, the presence of 'one armed bandits' has been an important contributing factor in the corruption that we found," Gurney reported.

He said the potential of that corruption is more profound than merely the stealing of slot machine receipts or the temptation to steal.

"All too often the firms and individuals who, install, service and profit from these machines are not the sort with which the U.S. government should deal," he said.

It is reported Senate investigators have examined also the relationship between slot machine salesmen in Vietnam and a small group of senior U.S. officers, some of them generals, who reportedly received free entertainment, gifts, aid in locating residence off base, trips outside the combat zone, and the favors of women.

Migrant Blacks Better Equipped, Show Quicker Income Gain Than Whites

WASHINGTON (AP) - Black families moving from the countryside to the cities are searching for jobs not welfare checks and are usually better equipped to find them than the blacks who remain behind, a new federally financed study says.

In fact, the study said, most black families show almost immediate gains in their income over families that stay behind while most white familiies take about five years to show economic gains.

"Migration is commonly viewed as massive, mostly rural in origin, and disproportionately black," said the study by economist Richard Wertheimer II of the Urban Institute.

"Migrants are commonly viewed as poorly educated, prone to unemployment, likely to be on welfare, likely to riot and rather unsystematic in their choice of destinations. Virtually all of these impressions are false."

Wertheimer said nonwhite migration from the rural South has dropped from 145,000 a year during the 1950s to 90,000 a year in the 1960s.

In some cities, notably Chicago, net in migration has ceased altogether, he said.

Over all, only about one third of the increase in Negro population in the nation's central cities is the result of in migration, he said. The rest reflects natural increase.

Most migrants are white, not black, the study pointed out, even though economic benefits come slower to whites who move than to blacks.

For example, a college educated black male who migrates from the rural South to a Northern city is likely to be earning $3,875 more within five years than he would have earned had he remained in the rural South.

A college educated white male would show a five year gain of $3,075.

A white male with only an elementary school education would show a five year gain ranging up to $600 while a similarly educated black male would show a five year gain ranging from $800 to $1,400.

The study, based on interviews with 30,000 migrant households, showed also that the cities now attracting migrants are generally the rapidly growing cities of the West and the Southwest.

China To Extend Aid To North Vietnam

TOKYO (AP) - Communist China said Tuesday it has agreed to extend additional economic and military assistance to North Vietnam this year to help defeat the United States and its allies in Indochina.

Peking's official Hsinhua news agency, in a broadcast monitored in Tokyo, said "an agreement on supplementary economic and military aid to be given by China to Vietnam in 1971" was signed between the two countries in Peking on Monday.

It gave no details of the agreement, which, it said, was signed by deputy Premier Li Shien mien of China and deputy Premier Le Thank Nghi of North Vietnam. The latter arrived in Peking last Thursday from Moscow as head of a nine member North Vietnamese economic mission.

Communist China and North Vietnam had signed an agreement on Chinese economic and technical aid and a protocol on Chinese military assistance for 1971 in Peking last Oct. 7.

The announcement of the new aid agreement followed a Chinese government statement on Saturday reaffirming Peking's promise to give the North Vietnamese "all out support and assistance." It also declared that the South Vietnamese drive into southern Laos was a "grave menace" to Communist China and "the Chinese people absolutely will not remain indifferent to it."

Secret Documents Reveal WW II Feuds

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secret wartime documents declassified and made public by the State Department on Monday throw new light on the allied relationships in World War II, including President Franklin D. Roosevelt's sharp criticism of French Gen. Charles de Gaulle.

The letter and other documents also show:

- Henry L. Stimson, Roosevelt's secretary of war, accused the British of being only lukewarm on the planned D Day invasion of Europe across the English Channel.

- Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower and Secretary of State Cordell Hull both suggested that the Italians be offered some hope of peace with honor after the war.

The Roosevelt DeGaulle disagreements came to light in letters between the U.S. president and British Prime Minister Winston Churchill.

In a letter written May 8, 1943, Roosevelt said, "I do not know what to do with De Gaulle. Possibly you would like to make him governor of Madagascar."

Roosevelt's letter said De Gaulle's "course and attitude is well nigh intolerable." The letter also accused de Gaulle, later to become president of France, of stirring up trouble in Algiers.

Stimson, in a secret memorandum to Roosevelt dated Aug. 10, 1943, said, "I believe that the time has come for you to decide that your government must assume the responsibility of leadership in this great final movement of the European war."

He said of the British: "Though they have rendered lip service to the operation, their hearts are not with it."

On the subject of Italy, Eisenhower, then allied commander in chief, proposed before the allied landing that Italy be promised a "peace with honor" should she surrender.

"During the period before invasion takes place we should constantly emphasize to the Italians.....that a cessation of hostilities on their part will be accepted by the allies as evidence of good judgement, entitling them eventually to a "peace with honor"," Eisenhower wrote to the combined chiefs of staff May 17, 1943.

Hull, in a May 22 letter to Roosevelt's chief of staff, agreed. "It is my opinion that the moment is opportune to hold out to the Italian people some hope or assurance that their country will survive as a nation after the defeat of the Fascist government." Hull wrote.

Roosevelt and Churchill, however, disagreed and this telegram was sent to Eisenhower: "Most certainly we cannot tell the Italians that if they cease hostilities they will have a peace with honor. We cannot get away from unconditional surrender."

Agreement Reached In Can Strike

WASHINGTON (AP) - A representative of the United Steel workers Union reported agreement reached today with the National Can Co. on the first day of a strike against three other can manufacturing companies with plants across the nation.

The union struck Continental Can Co., American Can Co., and Crown Cork and Seal Co., at 12:01 a.m., the deadline set earlier by rank and file steelworkers.

Pat Fagan, representative of the steelworkers international office, said the agreement was reached with National Can at a meeting in a Washington Hotel.

He said the agreement provides for a minimum of $1 an hour increase over three years for the lowest paid workers, increases in pensions, cost of living and other benefits.

Fagan said the strike is continuing at the other three companies but that members of the union negotiating committee are ready to meet with company representatives at any time.

Meanwhile the executive offices of American Can, Continental Can and Crown Cork released a statement saying their representatives and representatives of National Can "have been in continuous negotiations with United Steelworkers of America since early January seeking peaceful settlement of contracts with the four companies which expired at midnight on Feb. 14."

School of Ed Proposes All Modular Credit

By DON GLICKSTEIN
MDC Staff

The abolishment of most courses in the School of Education and the institution of a "Completely Modular Curriculum" for the Fall, 1971 semester has been proposed by Dr. Dwight W. Allen, Dean of the School.

If the Completely Modular Curriculum (CMC) is approved, students will attend educational experiences that last anywhere from an hour to a year, and will receive "modular credits" that will be converted at the end of each semester to standard university credit.

To help finance the change to a CMC, Dean Allen announced that he is seeking aid from the Carnegie Foundation in the form of a $30,000 grant for planning, and a $32,000 grant for implementation of the program.

In a memorandum to the governing body of the School of Education, the School Council, Dr. Allen explained the rationale of the proposal:

"One of the most glaring deficiencies of current education is its inflexibility: inflexible administration, inflexible staffing patterns, inflexible curriculum. This rigidity prevents education from responding to the needs of students and to the needs of society...An alternative to inflexible curricular structures is the modular approach."

Among the benefits expected from a CMC, the Dean said, are:

--Time flexibility for faculty who, under the present structure, don't have time for "reflection" because of split duties. Under the CMC, faculty would be encouraged to take three weeks off in the semester as "uninterrupted time for writing or scholarship.

--Increased decision-making role for students, who would be able to individualize their education, choosing only those experiences that would be relevant to their lives.

--Reexamination of course material by faculty. Busywork would be eliminated, because when a subject was covered the module would end.

--Students could sample units winthin courses more easily. For example, to learn about the legal rights of students, a person would not have to take the entire course in school law, but only the module unit he was interested in.

Dr. Allen emphasized that a CMC "would clearly not eliminate the possibility of traditional courses", and that a teacher would be able to create "modular experiences" that met three times a week over sixteen weeks. Allen added, however, that such experiences were contrary to the spirit of the proposal, and he wondered if a maximum percentage of traditional course structures should not be established.

Reaction to the CMC proposal has been divided. Dr. Albert Anthony, in an open letter to the Ed School's Academic Affairs Committee, questioned the value of a CMC. He asked if modularization was really an improvement, and urged that more time be spent trying to improve "what takes place within the various time blocks", rather than with the structure of the blocks. Anthony expressed doubt in the concept of modularization, saying that the School's present Modular Credit Program has not been tested and evaluated "in a way that one would hope professionals would use these terms." As to administration of the CMC, Dr. Anthony pointed to the School's "present performance in administering relatively simple tasks", and wondered if implementation could be effective.

Dean Allen himself agreed that "the logistics of such a program would be absolutely horrendous". He proposed that an extensive School catalog be published at the beginning of each semester to be supplemented by a weekly bulletin. Other problems that would have to be solved, according to Allen, are effective registration and record keeping, responsible advising, and interaction with the rest of the University. Questions have been raised by Administration officials about quality control and evaluation of faculty and offerings, and Dr. Allen is planning a meeting with the University Academic Affairs Committee to discuss this and other implications of the CMC.

In his message to the School Council, which will vote on the CMC proposal on Thursday, February 25, Dean Allen concluded his case by saying that the CMC "is in keeping with our belief that the time for this change is now; that with the year and a half of experience, the basic idea has been tested and evaluated adequately."

An open meeting of the Education Assembly to discuss the proposal is scheduled for Thursday, February 18, from 9:00 AM-11:00 AM in the School of Education Auditorium. All faculty, undergraduates and graduates are urged to attend.

Five College Safaris Filling Up

Numbers of Five College students, staff, and faculty are once again planning summer safaris in Europe. Reservations for the Five College Charter Flights promise to fill up the flights in the coming weeks. To ensure getting a seat on one of them, reservations should be made soon. An information sheet and reservation form can be obtained at the International Programs Office, 229 Whitmore, University of Massachusetts.

The four flights offered this summer will provide more variety than in previous years. For the first time a Five College flight will be to Madrid. Destinations for the other flights include London, Paris, and Milan. Roundtrip fare range from $216.50 to $250.00.

The Five College Charters are only one of a number of charter arrangements available next summer. However, they are the only charters officially authorized by Five Colleges, Incorporated. Fares for the Five College Charters are in some cases higher than other charter flights advertised. This is because the GFive College Charters use only regularly scheduled carriers such as Pan American and T.W.A. The Five College Charters are sure to fly next summer because they will carry not only Five College personnel going to Europe with various independent plans but also students and faculty going on Five College summer study programs in Europe. These include two Smith College Art Seminars to beheld in Amsterdam and Rome on Dutch and Roman Art respectively. Also using the Five College flights will be give summer study programs offered by the University of Massachusetts to be held at Oxford, Madrid, Bologna, Freiburg, and Pau in southwest France. There are still a fesw places in the University of Massachusetts summer study programs. Information on them can also be obtained from the International Programs Office.

The Fine Art Of Owning A Car

Editor's note: The following is an explanation of the legal technicalities of registering an out-of-state car.

Students who operate motor vehicles in Massachusetts bearing out-of-state vehicle registrations or who are themselves licensed out-of-state may be in violation of law It is not enough to simply register with the parking office or the police department as an out-of-state student! I have received the latest regulations from the Registry of Motor Vehicles and will counsel any student who has a question about his status as an owner or operator with out-of-state license or registration.

Afro-Am Week To Feature Two Campus Programs

In recognition of the spirit and substance of pioneer efforts in the development of relevant academic programs on the study of Afro-American history and culture, the W.E.B. Dubois Department of Afro-American Studies will present two programs in observance of Afro-American History Week.

On Tuesday, February 16th in Mahar Audtorium at 8 p.m., Professor Playtheil Benjamin will speak on "The Relevance of Black History to the Contemporary Crisis in American Society." Thursday, February 18th in the Campus Center Auditorium at 8 p.m., the Arthur Hall Dancers from Philadelphia will perform.

The continuing need for a constant re-evaluation will also be stressed in the week's activities.

Dr. Carter G. Woodson, a Black historian, is one of the men whose determined efforts as a teacher and scholar will be celebrated. Among his many works are included The Negro in Our History and African Heroes and Heroines.

The treatment of Afro-Americans in American History has, for the most part, been marked by racist distortions or complete omissions. It is clear that the images of Blacks presented in American historiography from the 19th century through the early decades of the 20th century sought to justify the inhumane, oppressive public policy towards Blacks.

Dr. Woodson was one of the first historians to undertake a thorough revision of this image.

Recognizing the relationship between the denial of the human qualities of the people and the possibility of genocide, he commented, "Any people who do not maintain a written record that commands respect for their culture and traditions become a negligible factor in the eyes of the world, and therefore, stand in danger of extermination."

The consequences of the denial of a respectable place in human history on the psychic development of a people were also recognized by Dr. Woodson. He wrote: "If you can determine what a man shall think, you will not have to worry about what he will do."

Dr. Woodson also founded the Association For the Study of Negro Life and History. He organized the annual Negro History Week during which the contributions of Black people in history were salvaged from previous omissions and racist distortions.

Over the years the work of the Association for the Study of Afro-American Life and History, through its scholarly journals and annual observance of Afro-American History Week has done much to set the historical record straight.

Dr. Woodson, together with scholars such as W.E.B. Dubois, Franklin Frazier, Herbert Aptheker, E. Raford Logan , has supplied a body of basic research which represents an invaluable contribution to the study of Afro-American history and culture.

Senatorial Cents

In a move designed to increase professionalism and competence on the legislative level, the Student Senate voted in bill S-137 to start paying its officers a monthly salary, retroactive to November 1, 1970. We command this action.

The officers in question, the President, Vice-President and Treasurer, are all called upon to devote an inordinate amount of time to their respective duties. Besides functioning in their positions during sessions of the Student Senate, these officers are required, if they are to be at all effective, to attend meetings, conduct research, represent the Senate in discussions with administrative officials and simply to influence people. These are inherent duties of the offices.

Such responsibilities are not only tiring but expensive as well. For any person to fulfill all of these duties, he must be available at all hours and be willing to give up many opportunities for advancement or accomplishment in other areas, areas such as part-time jobs. In other words, a Senator, in some instances would be forced to choose between serving the Student Senate and paying his way through school. We do not feel this situation should be allowed to continue.

If the Student Senate is to attract officers of the highest caliber, then no candidate should be eliminated for reasons financial or other wise. That people of such competence are needed is self-evident.

The attraction of paying Senate officers has its disadvantages as well, however. Questions might arise concerning the competence of those people lured to the Senate by the illusions of an easy buck.

The Senate, however, should at least be capable of seeing through the facade of false devotion and determining the capability of its candidates.

In the end, the controversy inevitably reaches the question of administration - student relations. If the student body is to maintain, or attain, an equal to those of its administrative counterparts. Otherwise, students, already muddled in a maze of concrete, will be totally lost in the struggle for a useful and worthwhile educational experience. The Senate's actions makes these resources available.

An Embargoed Column

WASHINGTON--"We regret that for security reasons an embargo has been imposed on this column today. Are there any questions?"

"Can you give us a reason for the embargo on your column?"

"No, I cannot. As a matter of fact, you are not authorized to reveal that I have placed an embargo on my column. Anyone violating this embargo will lose his newspaper reading privileges for three months."

"Could you at least tell us what the subject matter of the column was going to be?"

"It had to do with the war in Southeast Asia, but you may not say that."

"What is the reason for the embargo?"

"I am trying to protect President Nixon's secret plan to get our boys out of South Vietnam. Anything I could say that might hurt that plan would raise a credibility gap with the American people. But none of you is authorized to say that is the reason I placed an embargo on this column."

"Could we assume that the column, if it had been printed, would have had to do with the South Vietnamese invasion of Laos, which could possibly broaden the war at the time President Nixon is trying to shorten it?"

"You can assume whatever you want to, but you cannot tell anyone that is what I planned to write."

"Would the column that you embargoed have had anything to do with the Ho Chi Minh Trail?"

"You'll have to ask the White House about that. I am not at liberty to discuss the Ho Chi Minh Trail with my readers. That, by the way, is off the record."

"Does anybody in Congress know anything about the column you planned to write?"

"Nobody in Congress knows anything about anything any more. I don't have to consult Congress about what I plan to do concerning the war in Vietnam...and neither, by the way, does the President. What I have just said is not for attribution."

"Has Secretary of State Rogers been informed of the contents of the column?"

"He naturally has been informed about it, but he doesn't make any of the decisions. Henry Kissinger and his staff are now making all policy decisions on a column having to do with Southeast Asia."

"Can we say that?"

"Not as long as the embargo is in effect. You can mention Rogers, but you may not mention Kissinger's name at this time."

"Would the column have had anything to do with the use of U.S.air power as well as close troop support of our loyal South Vietnamese allies?"

"It might have been mentioned. But I cannot tell you, for security reasons, how little or how much the use of American planes would have played in the overall theme of the piece."

"Can you at least give us a hint as to the thrust of the column, and what you hoped to accomplish by it?"

"It is the hope of everyone, including the President of the United States, to get us out of Indochina as quickly as possible. The column would have suggested how we could do that."

"Don't you think the readers have a right to know what your plan is?"

"Not as long as Hanoi has access to American newspapers. It is perfectly clear that any press comment on an operation of this magnitude would only prolong the war. Our political and military leaders know what they're doing or they wouldn't be there."

"Can we say that?"

"Good God. NO."

Outcast And Outclassed

I'm in the "Class of 1973". That means I'm expected to graduate after doing four years here in approximately 2 1/2 years. If I don't graduate then, I'll be labeled a "super senior", and most people, being "class" conscious will look upon me as something of a bad student, who probably spent a lot of time drinking and otherwise flunking courses. In short, I'll be an outcast if President Wood doesn't hand me my sheepskin in June 1973.

Like every other freshman last year, I was immediately branded "73" and 27 1/2 years from now I'll still be "73". As a freshman in the "class of '73", I was expected to follow all the norms of being a freshman. This year I'm expected to have "Sophomore slump". Next year, I'll be called a "Junior" and I won't have qualms about taking a "Junior Senior level only" course. And then the wheels of University society will turn me into a "Senior" and I'll have a "Senior picnic" and be able to get out of a meal ticket.

I realize how necessary it is for me to be programmed through the University in four years. The computer would bust-a-gut if it couldn't print out "Class of '73" on my records. But, I still don't like it.

One night in a place called the Red Garter Room, I was sitting beer in hand, with Jack Littlefield, the guy who makes all the University's mud, and usually mumbles under his breath something about "soft parameters." Anyways, I was telling Jack how pressured I felt by being called both a "Sophomore" and the "Class of '73". How I really didn't feel that a University should impose a sublime pressure to be four year and out student.

Jack stared contemplatively into his glass for a minute. Then his face lit up. "I've got it," he exclaimed proudly. "The 'Jack Littlefield 7-year envelope' is what you need."

My ears perked up as he began to tell of a plan which would allow someone entering the University, the option of entering directly from high school or waiting a year. He continued, the words flowing like the waters of a stream during the Spring thaw, telling how students could opt to take a year off without suffering from malicious peer pressure and how I'd no longer be branded a "FRESHMEN-SOPHOMORE-JUNIOR-SENIOR." I would study as I wanted to without worrying about being on the chopping block come June, 1973. My standing in the University would be according to how many credits I had worked for and not by a notch in a four year belt which got tighter every year. I could be free of the unwritten rule of American higher education which put me into a "four-year" educational institution.

I thanked Jack for the inspirational words he had spake.

As I drained the glass in front of me and stood up to leave, I still had a nagging feeling that, the University would never change. Caught up by a tradition, which was probably inspired by some high school system in Old Boston, I knew that I would never be free of my class designation.

I swore though, that I would see the "Jack Littlefield Seven-year Envelope" become a reality in my life-time. That my kids will look back upon the last vestiges of the four-year institution and recognize how "classist" it really was.

Recruitment Meeting

Why I'm So Sleepy

This is the third time I started to write my column and three times I lucked out. So this is it. If it doesn't come out this time I's going to put in an MDC recruitment ad. So read on.

Surprise! This is an MDC recruitment ad. How would you like to get involved? Now, right away you've probably stopped reading and said, "Why is he giving us the same old line?" And it is a line. Telling someone that working for the MDC gets you involved is a lot of nonsense. Sometimes. Sometimes you actually do get involved in something but only if you want to. Right now the staff consists of about 15 who really involved in the MDC. The other two-thirds of the staff consists of just marginal characters who drift in and out of the office occasionally. The trouble is that we absolutely could not get on without them. So not only do we need more of them but we need more of us; the involved ones.

Now, maybe you think it's a little bit pretentious of me to say that I'm a big deal around SU 407. There are about 5 of us who can be found around the office at any time of the day or night. Some days I'm here so much that I wonder if I'm still sane. But you never despair. There are enough characters and crazy people around here to make missing a food-fight in DC #7 worthwhile.

But we need more staffers to continue. We need writers (the editorial dept is screaming for people) we need people to work on the desk at night to put out the paper. We need photographers, dark-room people, sports writers, reporters, copy-editors, you name it, we probably have a shortage of them. Like the ads say, "We have immediate openings for..." If you are quick and have a good eye for layout you can be one of our night editors within a week. We need three of them. Monday night, Tuesday night and Thursday night are yours for the asking. The possibilities are breath-taking.

Come and find out for yourself if you have nothing earthshaking to do tomorrow night. Or if you just can't wait, drop in the office today and ask someone to tell you what's going on. If you push them hard enough, they'll tell you.

Letters To The Editor

Worth 1,000 Words

To The Editor:

I am incensed about the use of the photo that appeared on the front page of Friday's Collegian. A distinct impression was given that the incident took place in Laos and that it was in some way connected with American combat troops. This is a gross and deliberate misrepresentation of fact in a true yellow press tradition.

The photograph in question was used completely out of context and was printed with absolutely no reference to its proper source. In actuality, the incident pictured took place in Cambodia; the photo was spirited from the February 1, 1971 edition of Time magazine, page 25. The complete caption reads:

"Like most wars, the one in Indochina has bred an almost casual brutality. At Mien, a small town northeast of Phnom-Penh where bitter fighting raged two months ago, West German photographer Dieter Ludwig was present when two Cambodian Patrols returned from forays into chest-high rice fields. The first patrol brought in a North Vietnamese prisoner for interrogation (above (a second photo)); he talked freely; after the second patrol arrived waving some grisly trophies -- the severed heads of other North Vietnamese troops. Some of the Cambodians marked their victory by cutting the livers out of the enemy dead.

No side in the war has a monopoly on such horrors. The Communists have committed more than their share of atrocities. At the My Lai trial in Fort Benning, Ga., Radio Operator Robert van Leer told how the Viet Cong dealt with one captured American soldier. They fitted a bird-cage-like device around his head, said van Leer, then filled it with live rats."

If such deliberate misrepresentative measures on the part of the Collegian editors continue, it will be necessary to remove the word "responsible" from the masthead.

Arthur L. Lupien

EDITOR'S NOTE:

It was not our intention to distort or misrepresent when we used Time Magazine's photo on Friday's front page. It seemed to us that the American public has been duped long enough by the Nixon Administration and that anyone who didn't cry out for the war to be halted in some way contributes to the atrocities of the Vietnam war.

We were not trying to link the picture specifically with the story inside, although the way it turned out one could very easily do so. We were simply trying to shock people, give them second thoughts about something which they may never have thought about before. We wanted people to feel the weight of those two heads and to make them realize just what the picture represents. We feel we were successful.

George Took Drugs?

To The Editor:

I appreciate Barry Rubenstein's comparing me to George Washington. Though it has been recently alleged that George took drugs and padded his expense accounts, most people would agree that he compares favorably with some more recent occupants of the office.

It is true that the Ombudsman only has the power to make recommendations, not to enforce them, and it is inevitable that there will sometimes be honest differences of opinion between the Ombudsman and the authority to whom the recommendations are made. We shall simply have to wait and see how things work out.

If I am confronted with too frequent failure to follow my recommendations, I will of course resign.

I don't think, however, that this will happen. I have confidence in the Chancellor and in the administration generally. It is right, as a general rule, to be skeptical of innovations, especially if great claims are made for them. I make no claims. But try me.

Have A Heart

To The Editor:

We feel that the People have the right to know the truth behind St. Valentine's Day which has been long suppressed by the Fascist pig press. This is not late, by the way. It is early for next year.

We celebrate the holiday to honor the memory of one of the first priests who committed an act of civil disobedience. Valentinus was a priest during the time when the Imperialist Roman empire was flourishing. The emperor of Rome found that his army was dwindling. The young men of Rome refused to fight in his Imperialistic land-grabbing wars. They didn't want Rome to set up their puppet governments all over the world. As a final measure, the tyrannical pig king revealed his true nature by decreeing that no more marriages could take place until his mercenary armies returned victorious.

The people knew that the law was immoral and so they openly disobeyed the king. St. Valentinus married many of the rebellious couples at the risk of great personal danger.

When the pig emperor learned of Valentinus' heroic act he had Valentinus busted. In jail, Valentinus became friends with the jailer's daughter. On the eve of his execution, he sent the little girl a message thanking her for making his last days more pleasant and telling her how much he appreciated her friendship. He signed the note, "From your Valentine."

Thus we celebrate the brave act of the rebel priest Valentine. What has been perverted into a day of bourgeois mush and sentiment by the evil greeting card syndicate was originally the celebration of an act against Imperialism. It is a people's holiday although the Government has tried to suppress that fact. So I wish all my brothers and sisters a Happy Early Valentine's Day.

P.S. - Just think if one of the Berrigan brothers lived in those days, it might be called St. Berrigan's Day. Then you could ask your lover "will you be my Berrigan?"

Love and peace are a state of mind.

Mud Slinging

To The Editor:

I am grateful to you for publishing the letter from Senator Bernstein, which impuned the motives of Senators Olmstead, Waters, and myself, for now your readers have seen the caliber of the oppositions. Bernstein has violated an unwritten law of legislative bodies by publicly slinging mud at his colleagues, thereby forfeiting our respect. He is correct in stating that we supported the amendment to pay all Senators. We were attempting to make the bill so onerous that not even Bernstein could vote for it. I stated on the floor of the Senate that if it passed I would donate my share to my dorm government. Bernstein was either asleep or distorted this issue on purpose.

Senator Bernstein forgets that he was elected to represent the people, not crowned to rule over them. The only justification for democratic government is the will of the people. We are not sulking, as he implies, but are going to the people. The cards are stacked against us, for we have one week to gather four thousand signatures. Senator Bernstein hopes that you will not have the chance to vote, we hope that you will. Power, as they say, to the people.

Robert A. Hall, Senator

What Is Reality?

To The Editor:

Matt Tackeff should spend less of his time trying to be clever and more of it trying to be realistic. Realism might require him to look at the very ugly facts of Vietnam. It might even make him address himself to the basic and overriding considerations of this illegal and immoral war, i.e., the right of a people to determine the quality of their own existence. Sure, Matt, that's why we're there. Only the people over there don't want our Democracy. They would have been very productive and better off under Ho Chi Minh - imagine better Red than red white & blue or dead.

The French learned that the Vietnamese people didn't want them there. We should have learned the same by now.

Why march, Matt?

Only for the hope that the publicity generated by numbers will reflect itself in real policy changes.

The picture on Friday's front page is part of the reality you are making little jokes about. Take a good look at your reality, Matt, I hope you don't like what you see.

Editorial Points

United Press International reported that the South Vietnamese Army in Laos captured 2000 Communist chickens and ducks, presumably infiltrating into South Vietnam for subversive purposes. Did you ever stop to think that the anti-American activities which regularly convene around the campus pond, coincide with the presence of our own fowl. Flying south to Havana maybe?

Queen For A Day

To The Editor:

As the nominee from Pierpont House (Project 10) for Winter Carnival Queen, I experienced a number of interesting encounters worth sharing with the University community. But before I do, I wish to express the reasons why I, a male student, have made myself a serious candidate for this position. Most importantly, I wish to demonstrate to the campus community the nature of sexism on this campus and in our society as it manifests itself in one of our cultural rituals. Second, I wish to show the kind of discrimination which occurs when a sacred and routine cultural institution is threatened. By running for Winter Carni Queen, I hope to prompt people to stop and apply critical thought to a campus institution which is in itself sexist and the sex-role stereotyping which occurs in our society. The institution of Winter Carni Queen decides what qualities are admirable for a campus co-ed, judges and selects from a group of nominees, and then parades that person as an object. This dehumanizes women and perpetuates a system of competitiveness and goal-orientation for their own sake. It stereotypes women into a role in the same way a little girl is handed a doll at age two and socialized to be a "little mommy" to the exclusion of all other possibilities. By socially training women to assume inferior positions and object-oriented roles, society can perpetuate an inequitable and sexist social system.

A brief description of the screening process itself, however, will substantiate some of the assertions I have made. All of the candidates are interviewed twice by a team of three judges. From this large group, ten candidates are chosen and the five finalists are chosen from this group. On both evenings, the judges consisted of two men and one woman. Also, on both occasions, the two male judges were from the athletic department. Candidates were judged on beauty, poise, personality, intelligence, etc., and assigned points on the basis of performance in these areas. During my interviews especially on the second evening, I had to spend most of my time justifying and explaining my reasons for running.

Since I feel I was discriminated against, and considered an interesting, but not serious candidate by the judges because I have threatened a campus "sacred cow" I intend to continue my candidacy in the form of a write-in campaign. I would appreciate the support of those who sympathize with my intentions, by writing in my name once the voting begins. Sex-role stereotyping is as serious a social problem as poverty, racism and imperialism, and I wish to bring to the attention of the University community this modern method of whoring women, and its larger societal implications. Peace and love.

Placement Office

Seniors Urged To Make Appts Now

By JANET PEARLMAN
MDC Staff

(Editor's note: This is the second in a series of articles on the Placement Office, sponsored by the Student Senate Services Committee.)

Job-hunting members of the senior class are urged to fill out forms and/or make interview appointments at the Placement Office for employment recruiters coming to campus in the next few weeks before spring recess.

Recruiters for education majors will be coming to campus after the spring recess.

A weekly flyer called Placement News, distributed to every dormitory, social organization, and academic department, may keep you informed as to who will be on campus and when they will be interviewing. Copies of Placement News may also be picked up at the Placement Office.

Specifically, groups seeking employees are retailing organizations (Zayre, S.S.Kresge, Lord & Taylor, etc.), insurance companies (Continental, Kemper, Mass. Mutual), and miscellaneous other companies searching for students of almost any major with primary interests in retailing, sales work, or management.

For other liberal arts majors there are government agencies including the Social Security Administration, the Farm's Home Administration, and the Bureau of the Census seeking employees.

Those with library science degrees may speak to the representatives from Boston Public Library and the Providence Public Library who are looking for library interns.

Nursing majors will want to speak to recruiters from Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, Yale-New Haven Hospital, the New York University Medical Center, and the New England Medical Center.

The Placement Office is situated in Room 239, Whitmore.

Hampshire Hosts Women's Week

Starting on Valentine's Day, Sunday, Feb. 14, Hampshire College wil celebrate Women's Week.

The idea for Women's Week originated with two Hampshire students who hoped to show films clearly illustrating where women are in this society. From that beginning the idea was expanded to include speakers panels, and seminars.

During December a group of Hampshire Women got together to talk about pressures women face; in society and at Hampshire. The group was formed by members of classes which dealt with human sexuality.

Many women at Hampshire have, since then, become increasingly aware of the need to get together, both with other women and also in mixed groups, to discuss the pressing issue of sex roles. A week devoted to the topic of women was the outcome.

Among the films to be shown during the week, many (such as Dames How to Marry a Millionaire, Make Out, Beach Party, and several others) illustrate how the society views women, and consequently how women have been forced to view themselves.

The events are open to the public.

Home With The Folks

"Arse", "urinal", all of the sexual innuendos and the sarcastic retorts seemed to bring the most laughter from the audience. It was an uncomfortable laughter that sporadically interrupted the actors in The Homecoming at Smith's Theatre 14 over the weekend, a laughter seemingly more induced by the program's observations of "pure, familiar, domestic farce", "comic dilemma", and "comic realism", than by the script and the production.

Tension is created by the union of comedy and tragedy. Frustration is created by too much tension--waiting for a conflict to resolve, waiting for anybody to do anything. There were too many things to laugh at and be disturbed by in The Homecoming: brothers raping their brother's wife, lonely people baiting each other's loneliness, sarcasm at the frailties of individuals. At times, one's mind wandered because of the effort needed to concentrate on this sustained tension, and if there was a weakness in the play it was this.

The characters in the play were too uncomplementary and dichotomous: Sam, a lanky, pitiful Stan Laurel-type, Joey, a bit too much the country dolt, Teddy, the weak, stereotyped doctor of philosophy. The overdone slapstick was just as much the playwright's fault as the director's, but subtler characterizations might have yielded less frustration. All the actors seemed to pick their chair or spot on the stage and stayed there, and while this is natural in real life, in drama, this blocking is stiff and boring, although it does create the desired tension.

The Homecoming was, however, a notch above usual college productions, notably in its use of British dialects, which were consistent and natural. The set, with its long, immense stairway, and active, yet not distracting black and gold walls, was also noteworthy, although at times the large stage made the cast appear miniscule. The Homecoming provided the best and the worst of slapstick and sadism, interest and frustration.

"THE HOMECOMING was, however a notch above usual college productions..."

Playin' Hard To Get

TRASH, a review
By RUSSELL C. MUNDY
MDC Staff

Not even the classroom can do justice to the generation gap this week. Andy Warhol's Trash is in town at the Campus Cinema playing to standing room only crowds of the under thirties but over eighteens.

Whatever the final view of Warhol may be, there is no denying his genius for creating the perfect balance between the profane and the legitimate. What else is his Campbell soup can, his eight hour unmoving, unblinking documentary of the Empire State building, or his recent sexploitation films?

Trash is among other things, a neatly conceived put-on aimed specifically at the suburbanite in Omaha, Ill, Ill everywhere. Is it possible that Warhol conceived and created Trash as a syndicated purgation throughout the home of the brave? Consider Saturday night's theatrics. There's a Girl in my Soup, Trash, and The Owl and the Pussycat. Can it be possible that he visualized Trash caught between the ever-longer lawns of the American movie dilemma? Did he deliberately create a scene Saturday night across America in which an American public screws up its resolution and in a fitful burst of self-revelation at the box-office ejaculates, "I want to see Trash"?

Compared with his earlier works Trash has a conventional beginning, middle, and end. An unmistakable intelligence has ordered the sequences of the film so that the end is quite an enlargement upon an otherwise identical beginning because the action in the middle of the film has provided a good bit of explanation.

Trash is unified by Warhol's latest superstar, the body of Joe Dallasandro. Joe, like Jack Nicholson in Five Easy Pieces has a problem that we are expected to understand even if it is never fully explained. Joe is, of course, into heroin and is the only man in the theatre who can't get it up, but I submit that "Is it possible that Warhol conceived and created "Trash" as a syndicated purgation throughout the home of the brave?"

Warhol is not primarily interested in heroin addiction, although his camera dwells dutifully on the needle, nor in the potential pornography of Joe's inability. Twentieth century impotence, even if less graphic, is certainly nothing new to our literature or cinema.

Warhol utilizes drugs and sex -- the facts of life of his New York demi-monde, much as Antonioni uses them in Blow Up: to build character and by implication to uncover the convoluted sexual-political-economic malaise of our times.

While the title Trash ironically alludes to the potential pornography of the film, it also describes Joe and his ilk as the trash of society. Beyond that, the title suggests that Joe subsists on the leavings, the trash, the garbage that society creates. Our contact in the film with that society is limited to the five sequences that include the Playboy world of the pneumatic dancer, the liberal couple, the wealthy girl, the Westchester kid, and the welfare agent. There is little to be said for them; they outdo one another in hypocracy, banality, acquisitiveness, and superficiality. No wonder Joe can't make it.

The bitter irony of the film is that Joe and his girl are themselves caught in the values of that society even while drowning in its backwaters. She reacts much like any other unliberated soul when she discovers Joe in bed with her sister. Perhaps more to the point is her final refusal to part with her silver shoes -- the ones like Joan Crawford used to wear in Our Dancing Daughters."

Trash offers no prescriptions, no palliatives. It ends as it began with Joe's impotence. A reluctant hero throughout, he is not seduced by the plastic, sexual theatrics of the stripper-dancer, nor by Westchester kinkiness. He remains numbed, inarticulate, unaroused in the world of swill around him.

Despite the X-rating, Trash is a conventionally fashionable work belonging structurally and thematically with Midnight Cowboy, Easy Rider, and Five Easy Pieces. This is not to say however that it approaches any of those films as a film; that is, in the use of the language and power of the film form. No, Trash is conceived as a theatrical piece in which the actors play to the camera. Rather than used the camera to expand our understanding of the action, it is there as a constant source of irritation, limiting the action.

"...an incompletely conceived but cleverly packaged theatrical piece that fails as a film but rouses hell out of its audience"

Warhol's taste for recording reality began with his Empire and Sleep and is traceable through his current penchant for continuous takes. It is paradoxical that his continuous takes aimed at faithfully reproducing reality result in frequent pans from palyer to player, face to face. The pans and constant adjustment of focus in close-up call attention to the camera and undercut the sense of reality. (Unless, the sex not withstanding, Warhol's after Brechtian distance -- I wouldn't want to defend that.) I would rather defend Trash as an incompletely conceived but cleverly packaged theatrical piece that fails as a film, but rouses hell out of its audience.

Trackmen Fall Back Early NU Coasts To Victory

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

BOSTON-Taking a commanding 16-2 lead after the first two events the Northeastern University track team went on to thump the UMass tracksters, 73-31, here on Saturday.

Going into the meet the Redmen were hoping to come out of the two opening events, the shot put and long jump, only down by a couple of points. However, this was not to be as Eddie Arcaro was nipped for second place by only one-quarter of an inch in the shot and Rip Dyer was likewise nipped for second in the long jump.

This turn of events turned a possible 10-8 deficit into a 16-2 deficit for the Redmen and from hereon it was all Northeastern as the Huskies used this opening lead as their motivation for the remainder of the meet.

In this meet not only did the Huskies defeat the Redmen in their weak events as was expected, but they also defeated the Redmen in a few of their strong events with the real clinchers being in the dash and the hurdles, where Northeastern runners were the first to cross the finish line.

Individual winners for the Redmen were Ron Wayne and Ed Shaughnessy. Wayne continued his double-event winning streak as he won both the mile and two mile. In his mile victory he went out in the first quarter in 61 seconds, burning out his opponents and coasting from there on to victory.

Shaughnessy took first in the high jump with a leap of 6'6" equalling his best mark of the season and coming within one-quarter of an inch of the school record. By the end of season with the championship meets coming up he should erase the record.

Other performances of note were turned in by freshman John Maloney, sprinters Tony Pendleton and Ron Harris and hurdlers Jim Graves and Jerry Spellman.

Due to the sickness to 1000 yard specialist Dave Evans, Maloney was called into action in the varsity 1000 and responded with a fine fourth place showing only a second off the winning time against the best group of middle distance runners in New England.

Although defeated in the dash both Pendleton and Harris were timed in the same 5.6 seconds that the winner Steve Hogan was clocked in. These two will get another shot at Hogan, who was the New England high school 100 yard dash champ last year, in the New Englands on February 27.

Graves and Spellman placed second and third in the hurdles behind Carl Sandy, and will also be looking to the New Englands to settle a score with him.

In junior varsity competition, Northeastern also came out on top by the slimest of margins, 48-46.

Top individual performers for the Redmen in this meet were Steve Crimmins, Mike Teasdale, Craig Ferris, Alan Wadsworth, John Osborne, Mark Whalen, and Barry Dwinnell.

Crimmins turned in a yeoman performance placing second in the high jump and high hurdles and running lead off leg for the victorious mile relay team.

Teasdale and Ferris took two-three in the 600, Wadsworth was second in the 1000 and Osborne, Whalen and Dwinnell were one-two-three in the long jump.

The next track competition for the Redmen will be next Saturday when they travel to UConn for the Yankee Conference Championships.

TRACK TALK-A new New England collegiate pole vault record was set during this meet as Northeastern's Jim Carisella vaulted 15'11" to ecliose the old record of 15'8" by Harvard's Steve Schoonover....In another record performance, UMass cross country rival from Springfield set a record of 1.46:01 in the Silver Lake Dodge 30 kilometer race.

YC Selects Mathias

UMass center Ken Mathias was selected as the top frontcourt performer in the Yankee Conference for last week's action. The 6'7 senior co-captain scored 40 points with 24 rebounds as the Redmen defeated Boston College, 85-77, and UConn, 89-67. He hit on 12 of 20 field goals, 16 of 18 free throws and had 11 assists for his weeks play.

Also named as the top backcourt and sophomore players were Brian Peters of New Hampshire and Steve Rowell of Rhode Island.

Peters, a 6'3" senior guard, scored 22 points as UNH edged Vermont, 77-76, in a YanCon game and tallied another 22 more in a 78-74 overtime loss to Dartmouth.

Rowell, a 6'4, has been forced to play center for URI. He responded with 75 points and 40 rebounds in four games and scored 28 in a loss to 12th ranked Duquesne.

Chief's Depth Tops Gymnasts

By MICHAEL CUSACK
MDC Staff

The UMass varsity gymnasts suffered their second loss in their last three outings as they were downed by arch rival Springfield College, 159.30-156.75, Friday night in a meet held in the Cage. The Chiefs, in upping their record to 6-1 dropped the Redman slate to 4-2.

The top three places for each event were fairly well divided among the two teams, but it was Springfield's superior depth which enabled them to come up with the all-important third score for their higher event totals. The Redmen had outstanding performances in every event, but failed to realize their full potential when and where it was most needed.

Top performers for UMass were Rick Riley, Jay Thomsen, Steve Cary, Scott Stover, and Tony Vacca. Riley regained his winning form as he once again took first in the sidehorse event. Thomsen and Cary tied for first in the longhorse event, while Stover won the high bar event with a 9.15, highest score of the meet. Vacca enjoyed one of his better performances of the season as he placed second in both vaulting and high bar, and won the all-around event with a total of 30.65.

Additional outstanding performances for the Redmen were turned in by Jay Aronstein who tied for second on rings, Jack Berner, who took third on floor, and Norm Vexler, who was third on sidehorse, in addition to placing second in the all-around total with a score of 30.05.

On the strength of Datti's first place performance of 9.2 and Thompson's second place score of 9.05, Springfield found itself on top of a 27.05-26.00 score after the first event, floor exercise. The Redmen were paced in this event by Berner's third place score of 8.9.

Sidehorse, which has not proved to be a solid event for the Redmen in the past, held up surprisingly well, as Springfield could gain only 1 of a point. The Redmen were led on this event by Riley's 9.1 and Vexler's 8.85, while high scorer for the Chiefs was Brown, with an 8.95.

Springfield scored 25.85 in the event to 25.75 for UMass, bringing the running score of the meet to 52.90-51.75, in favor of Springfield. At this point, the Redmen were in trouble, but they were still in the meet. It was the next event, still rings, that started the Redmen on their downfall.

Paced by Houston's 9.1 and Harvey's 9.0, Springfield outscored UMass by 1.75 points on rings, 26.90-25.15, widening their lead at intermission to 2.90 points, 79.80-76.90. The sole bright spot for the Redmen in this event was the 9.0 routine of Aronstein, which was good for a second place tie.

The Redmen began the second half determined to make a comeback, which they started to do. With Cary, Thomsen and Vacca, UMass swept the top three positions in vaulting, winning the event total, 27.25-26.55. This cut Springfield's lead by .8 of a point to 106.35-104.15. For a while, UMass fans had high hopes, but they were shattered during the next event, parallel bars.

Springfield, after not placing well in vaulting, swept the first three places on parallel bars, winning the event total by a full point, as they more than regained what they had lost in the previous event. Wiles led all scores with a 9.1, while Cary was high scorer for UMass with an 8.7. The Chiefs picked up 26.90 points in this event, compared to the Redmen's 25.90, which left UMass on the short end of a 133.25-130.05 score.

The final event, high bar, saw the Redmen take the top two places, and win the event total, but the damage had already been done. Behind Stover's 9.15 and Vacca's 8.9, UMass scored 26.70 points in the event to the Chiefs' 26.05, but the Redmen fell short, as the final score read: Springfield 159.30, UMass 156.75.

The meet was closer than the final score indicates. UMass outscored the Chiefs in two events, vaulting and high bar, and lost the event total on sidehorse by a slim .1 of a point. In addition, the Redmen took half of the firsts, half of the seconds, and half of the thirds, as well as taking the top two places in the all-around event. The deciding factor of the meet was the inability of the Redmen to come through with the necessary three scores for a good event total in each event.

This Saturday at 1:30 p.m., the Redmen seek to get back on the winning road, when they will be hosted by Navy. The Redmen return home to host Temple University on Sat., Feb. 27 in their final dual meet of the season.

Surging Fr. Hoopsters Away At Springfield

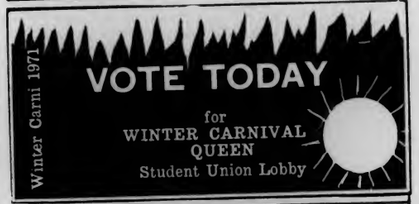
By FRED ROSENTHAL
MDC Staff

Tonight the UMass freshman hoopsters travel to the Springfield College Field House for a game with the Springfield College frosh. The UMass frosh will go into the game boasting a 13-1 record and a six game win streak; Springfield is 7-3. The game, which precedes the UMass-SC varsity game, will begin at 6:00.

Springfield's freshmen are a well balanced team and Coach Pete Broaca expects a tough battle. The Little Chiefs play seven or eight players including four very solid guards in starters, Jim Ziogas and Fran Aniello, and reserves, Chris Goldson and Chris Connelly.

Up front Springfield College will start forwards Peter Koola and Don Pingree, and center Chris Sullivan.

UMass will have a slight height advantage overall. Pete Trow (6'3) and Rick Pitino (6'1) will start for the Little Redmen in the backcourt. Springfield's guards Ziogas and Aniello are 5'11 and 6'2 respectively. The reserves, Goldson and Connelly are both 5'11.



In the frontcourt for UMass Al Skinner (6'3), Art Levine (6'5) and John Olson (6'5) will have a few inches on Springfield's Don Pingree (6'2), Peter Koola (6'4) and Chris Sullivan (6'5).

Individual scoring for SC has been very well balanced and on different nights almost every player mentioned above has led the team in scoring. The Little Redmen have also had very balanced scoring with the five starters still averaging in double figures.

Skinner boosted his season's average to 19 with his 35 point performance against UConn Saturday night. The Freshman forward fell one point short of the frosh scoring record for one game. That record of 36 points in one contest was set by Rich Vogeley two years ago against Rockwood Academy.

UMass guards Pitino and Trow are averaging 16 to 14.5 respectively. Levine is averaging 13 points per game and Olson is scoring at an eleven point clip.

Frosh Outgun UConn For 84-71 Win

By STEVE FERBER
Staff Reporter

Al Skinner, UMass' 6'3 forward had quite a night. His 35 points (and 12 rebounds) led the Little Redmen to victory over the UConn frosh by the score of 84 - 71, Saturday night's contest at the Cage saw Skinner hit an amazing 15 of 17 shots from the floor, as the UMass freshmen conquered UConn for the second time this season.

Again, for the umpteenth time, the Little Redmen outshot their opponents, had more rebounds and committed less personal fouls, but despite their statistical dominance, the game was not had until 4 minutes were left in the contest.

With the home frosh employing a 1-2-2 defense they started quickly with a Rich Pitino basket, followed by a Skinner steal, and subsequent hoop. With less than one minute gone the score was 4-0 Redmen, as this early-game spread was to be the widest margin between the two teams in the next 14 minutes.

Cal Chapman, UConn's outstanding freshman, kept the Huskies moving and his fourth bucket of the night at 11:04 moved the visitors into a 23-19 lead.

Then the Little Redmen caught fire. Art Levine tipped one in, and Skinner popped from the foul line: Tie score. Then Peter Trow collected his only point of the first half with a free throw as the Redmen rolled. Moments later a Pitino to Levine pass moved the Redmen up by three. Another beautiful drive by Skinner, this time off of a pin-point Pitino pass, led to a three point play and a five point lead.

Topping off the 12 point Redman spree was another Skinner dandy. Scoring his 14th and 15th points of the game, Skinner grabbed the rebound, head faked towards the basket, went underneath one of the Huskies outstretched arms, and flung the ball upwards. Only the fantastic amount of spin on the ball could have enabled it to go in, and the Redmen were ahead 31-23.

Despite a huge first half of 23 points by Skinner, the Little Redmen were up by a mere three points, and the 42-39 halftime lead was quickly evaporated.

At 17:25 of the second half the Little Huskies took the lead, and the seesaw began. A Chapman hoop, then a Skinner tip-in, and neither team could pull out to any substantial margin.

Three times the Little Redmen moved out as if they would run away from UConn, but a minute or two later they would be less than four points ahead.

Holding onto their slim lead, the Little Redmen made their own breaks as back to back steals by Skinner and Pitino resulted in four quick points.

The consecutive steals seemed to spark the home ballclub and at 6:32 the Little Redmen made their final move. This time they were not to be caught. With the score 64-61, John Olson, in foul trouble for most of the game, hit on a backwards lay-up; the lead stretched to five. Then Trow, an almost non- existent factor in the scoring column, got hot. Pitino to Trow yielded two more and a Huskie timeout was called.

But the timeout proved futile as an Olson to Trow pass ran it up to 70-61. The final blow came after a UConn violation. It was Skinner to Olson to Trow, and Trow's sixth straight point made it 72-61 UMass.

By that time no comeback was in sight, and the Little Huskies were a mere 5-4 on the season. Their victorious opponents settled to a 84-71 win moments after Trow's 5th straight hoop and three meaningless baskets by Chapman at the game's close partially hid the fact that the Little Redmen had outscored their opponents by a margin of 20-4 in a crucial five minute period down the stretch.

Second Half Spurt Buries UConn

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

Pulling away midway in the second half with a 9-1 burst, the UMass basketball team went on to soundly dispose of the University of Connecticut 89-67, before a packed house of 4200 at Curry Hicks Cage Saturday night. The victory upped the Redman conference mark to 6-0 and their season record to 17-2 with UConn falling to 4-4 in the conference and 10-10 on the season.

This was one of those contests that didn't allow for the Redmen as a whole to display their full talents. UConn's style of play caused the Redmen into their type of play pers, the burst in the second half put the contest in the hands of UMass.

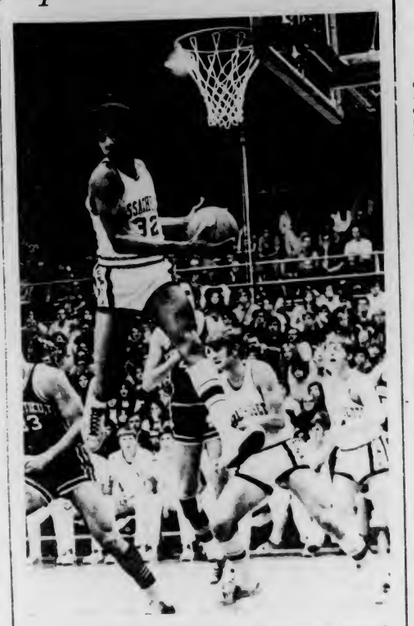
TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1971

The opening minutes were spiced with a see-saw battle with Mike Pagliara running the offense well and the three big men up front controlling the boards on both ends but being unable to take advantage of the situation on the scoreboard.

With the score 19-17 around 12 minutes into the tray, Erving went on a six point spree opening up the UMass lead to 25-17.

From here on in to the half both teams exchanged baskets with the Redmen being able to add one more point to the lead before heading to the locker room on top, 47-28.

As the second half got under way UConn picked up its shooting and within seven minutes had the UMass lead down to 49-46. It was here that the game was decided as in the next two minutes the Redmen went on the 9-1 spree to open up and coast from here on in to victory.



McLaughlin opened the surge with a short jumper. Al Vaughn of UConn answered with a free throw, but this was followed by a Ken Mathias offensive tap-in, a jumper from the corner by John Betancourt, and three free throws from Erving and Mathias.

With the score 59-47, the Redmen had the game well in hand with a last second goal tending charge on UConn making a prophet of the Dunkel system as the Redmen won by the fight score of 89-67.

If three stars were to be named for this contest, the list would read Mathias, Erving and Pagliara. Mathias, recently named the Yankee Conference court player of the week for his performances against B.C. and in this game was immense all evening as he led all scorers with 24 points, grabbed 14 rebounds and assisted on seven other hoops. He went to the hoop the entire game, scoring 19 of his points in the second half and was trouble all evening off the offensive boards for the Huskies.

Erving was his usuable intimidating self on defense and a picture of consistancy on offense. He scored 23 points, pulled down 22 rebounds, blocked four shots and kept the UConn front at bay all evening.

The UMass hockey team also split weekend games with Providence and Northeastern, losing, 8-1, to the Friars and defeating the Huskies in overtime. Details in tomorrow's MDC.

Pagliara played himself a whale of a game contributing 13 points, seven assists and running the offense smoothly the entire game.

One cannot forget the defensive performances turned in by Chris Coffin and John Betancourt and the fine reserve roll turned in by Tom McLaughlin. Coffin had the rough assignment of detending against Bob Staak who scored 33 points in the first meeting of these two clubs. Before fouling out, Coffin kept Staak in raps limiting him to 16 points and forcing him to hit only seven for 20 for the night.

Betancourt likewise had a difficult assignment in guarding Vaughn, who was on a hot streak coming into the game. All Vaugh was able to show for this battle was eleven points and a case of too much Betancourt to cope with.

McLaughlin filled in for both Mathias and Coffin and scored eight points in the process while playing his usual strong game on defense.

For UConn Bob Boyd the talented backcourt man was high scorer with 22 points. He also led the Huskie comeback that pulled them within three points in the second half. Staak and Vaughn were the only other Huskies to hit double figures.

BASELINE BABBLE-Erving became the fifth all-time leading Redman career scorer in this contest and also became the alltime leading rebounder with 904 and he still has over a season left to play...After hitting only 41% in the first half from the floor, UMass picked up its shooting and finished with 46% from the field...UConn was only able to muster 36% of their shotfield goal attempts. For the second game in a row the Redmen were outstanding from the free throw line connecting on 87% of their charity tosses. Syracuse, which playes here on the 22nd rolled past West Virginia, 102-90, on Saturday and now stand 14-5 with eyes on the NIT. Should be some battle. Remember, tickets are still on sale for the UMass-George Washington game on the 27th, at the Boyden ticket office.

Catamount Comeback Stops Skaters, 5-3

By DAN KAMAL
MDC Staff

BURLINGTON, VT.—An exuberant capacity crowd of some 4500 at Gutterson Field House gave out with the familiar "we're number one" chant in the closing seconds of the game, and that told the whole story as the University of Vermont gained a 5-3 win over the UMass hockey team.

Unable to maintain an early lead, the Redmen absorbed their fourth defeat of the season leaving them with an overall record of 9-4-1 and a Division II record of 7-3-1, while the Catamounts of Vermont are now 11-1 in Division II and 13-5 overall.

UMass broke out into a quick 2-0 lead on goals by Pat Keenan, the first coming at 2:49 in a scramble in front of UVM goalie Dave Reece, and the second three minutes later when the sophomore forward was sent in alone by Jack Edwards, faked Reece, and fired a shot that bounced in off the inside of the goal post.

Just before the second UMass tally Vermont had apparently scored, but the goal was nullified when the referee ruled that P.J. Flaherty had covered up the loose puck in front long enough for a face-off. Then 10 seconds later, Vermont scored a power play goal with Donny Lowe in the penalty box when a Brad Cooke slapshot from the blueline ran right along the ice and beat Flaherty who appeared to be screened.

A minute later Keenan was sent off with a ten-minute misconduct when he voiced his opinion too vociferously on another penalty to Donny Lowe.

Vermont tied the score late in the period when Pat Wright walked in alone after going around Lowe and slid his own rebound past sprawled Flaherty.

The second period was scoreless with both goalies coming up with some fine stops in furious action at both ends.

Ned Grant had the first of numerous Vermont opportunities early in the period but fanned on a backhander with Flaherty out of position.

Then at the eight minute mark UMass was on a power play but was not able to penetrate Reece.

On a subsequent UMass penalty the Redman penalty killing unit of Eric Scrafield, Dennis Grabowski, Bob Bartholemew, and Al Nickerson did a particularly good job in not allowing the Catamounts a serious offensive threat.

Late in the period Flaherty preserved the tie with an incredible save on a two-on-one Vermont break.

Any thoughts of an overtime game similar to the first meeting between these two clubs were dispelled at 1:59 when Sam Simmons fed a pass out from behind the UMass net that bounced off Flaherty's skate into the cage.

Less than a minute later Vermont's Rick Burns centered a pass to Ross McDonald who had the whole right side of the net and calmly lifted a wrist shot that gave Vermont a 4-2 lead.

Keenan brought the Redmen to within one goal as he completed his hat-trick with a power play goal in another scramble in front of Reece. Reidy and Lowe assisted.

UMass put on some good pressure as it desperately attempted to tie the game but Reece was equal to the task each time.

Then with less than a minute left coach Jack Cannifl pulled Flaherty from the UMass goal and Fred Hunt drove a shot from center ice into the open net.

ICE CHIPS—Keenan had a chance to tie the game late in the third period as he skated in alone on Reece with UMass short handed, but the all-American Catamount goalie made a crucial kick save.

Hoopsters At Springfield Tonight

As the UMass regular season schedule comes closer to its end and the Redman record continues to improve, each opponent until the end gets its chance to add a prize possession to its record by knocking off the Redmen. Tonight at Springfield College the UMass hoopmen put their record on the line once again as they battle the Chieftains in an 8 p.m. encounter at the Springfield College Field House.

Seeking their seventh win in a row and their 18th in 20 this season, the Redmen will be facing a college which has perenially qualified for the regional small college tournament and appears on its way to another berth this season as the Chiefs sport a 13-7 record to date.

Springfield is a well disciplined club as it runs its offense well and on defense it goes from a press to man-to-man to a zone if needed. Being a small team the Chiefs will probably come out against UMass with the press right off the bat as they did earlier in the season against Holy Cross.

The player who makes Springfield go is Dana Anderson, a 6'1 guard. He's a fine shooter and moves well on the court. In the last seven games he has averaged 28.2 points per game and has been named to the All-East Team of-the-Week four times this season.

Joining Anderson in the backcourt will be Fran Stupakevich who's been averaging nine points per game to date and also is the leading play maker on the club.

Up front Springfield will have Steve Waterman, a 6'2 leaper, and Rich Hundley at the forwards with 6'7 Jud Hunt at center. Waterman and Hundley are second and third in scoring on the club hitting for 14.9 and 11.8 points per game. Hunt is the leading Chieftain rebounder with around ten caroms a contest.

When a call to the bench is needed the top reserve will be Brad Macomber who has seen action in all 20 Springfield games and statistically is the second leading rebounder on the club while averaging seven points in his reserve roll. In recent games he has seen some action as a starter but for tonight it appears he will be on the bench at tap-off time.

For the Redmen, coach Jack Leaman will be probably going with the same team that has played so well in recent games, that being Julius Erving, Ken Mathias and Chris Coffin up front with John Betancourt and Mike Pagliara in the backcourt.

Freshmen-Confusion Is Their Lot

On The Inside:

- Gov't Abolishment Reaction — See page 3
- Benjamin: Black History — See page 3
- Why Is This Man Laughing? — See page 14

This fall 3500 freshman came to UMass to seek an education. 3500 excited, confused and anxious freshman culled from more than 20,000 applicants, each seeking to find a place among all the people and things that are the University.

For most, like countless others before them the start of their college career signaled at once the end of extensive soul-searching and decision-making and the beginning of the effects which those decisions would have upon the future.

The future which would see them make up 35-65 per cent of the enrollment of most introductory courses and .25 per cent of the total enrollment of the College of Arts and Sciences. A future which would see them make an average of at least two changes in major during their career with 10 per cent entering with major undeclared. A future in which they would on the average attain a 2.6 cumulative grade average for the first semester and in which there would be a 15 per cent rate of attrition. All of this set against a background of attempting to cope with and adjust to dorm life and the complexities of the University as a whole.

For the incoming freshman faced with these prospects there is a dominant and immediate need to gain some knowledge of the University and guidance in establishing his place within it. This is why the Summer Counseling Program, the incoming freshman's first real contact with the University is perhaps one of the most important factors in his future success.

If it performs its task well it may help to eliminate many of the problems and frustrations which surround a freshman and often continue on even to his senior year. If it doesn't there may be a serious need to give a critical examination to the possibility of eliminating any sort of formal orientation program on the UMass campus.

Abolished Officers React To Ousting

By ANNE STADNICKI
MDC STAFF

Mixed reactions were expressed among the officers of the respective classes to the Bill passed last week in the Student Senate that abolished class government.

An MDC survey of the officers showed general approval, with a few exceptions.

"I'm glad it's over and it should have happened sooner," declared Jim Bowin, treasurer of the senior class.

Bowin studied the problems of class government for two months last semester, trying to find out how the students felt, he said. He conducted the poll at registration as part of this study.

Results of the poll allowed him to unfreeze the class of '71 budget, but proved to him that there must be another way to utilize the funds provided to the classes, Bowin said.

There has been no legal meeting of the class of '71 in the past 11 months, according to Bowin. He questions the legality of any decisions made without a quorum of the required 50 members on the exec council.

"With seventy thousand dollars in my budget I feel ethically unsound making decisions myself," Bowin said.

Of the interim concert committee established in place of class governments, Bowin said that most students believed organization of concerts to be the only function of class government anyway. He said that at least the money not being used in the present lull of student activity could be utilized by this committee.

"If the people who really are against this action had spent their time to correct instead of find fault with class government, the replacement would have been better," said Bowin.

Juli-Ann Ierardi, president of the class of '72, expressed a strongly negative reaction to the Student Senate action.

"No one knows what class government is, and its function," she said. "Nobody even bothered to try to change it, they just wanted to get rid of it, and that's not right."

Denouncing the rationale behind the abolition, Miss Ierardi said that the whole government system on campus needs revision, not just the class system.

She said she thought the proposal was not very well thought out, that it was thrown together measure.

Of the student tax funds that provide the money the classes work with, she said "The Senate is not going to get our money to go into a concert fund. I'll freeze our (class of '72) funds if it becomes necessary."

Miss Ierardi said that no other body has control over student finances now except the Student Senate, and she feels this is dangerous.

A supporting view on the control of student money was expressed by Cindi Roy, treasurer of the class of '74. She said that the action may be favorable for the students in general, but "we (students) won't see the money that was allotted to the classes." She expressed concern as to the constitutionality of the Senate's power to abolish the system.

David Poisson, president of the class of '73, felt that the new committees would be more effective. He was co-sponsor of the Senate proposal, along with Pat Beharry, vice-president of the Senate.

"Most students think class government does something it doesn't," Poisson said. "Students are taxed for something that doesn't exist."

He explained that he could not see how some officers could insist on going ahead spending money if their classes did not respond. Why spend it?

Rather than continue what he tagged a ludicrous situation Poisson saw the Senate bill as a much needed step.

"One of the main reasons class government had to be abolished at this time was to establish a concerts committee that functions just as a concerts committee," Russell Vieira, treasurer of the junior class, commented.

Vice President Ed Dempsey ('72) said the Senate had no right to abolish class government. He felt a referendum for the student body might make the action valid. It will take a while for RSO to adjust, he added.

Prof. Benjamin Speaks On Black History

By SANDY MITCHENER
MDC Staff

The Afro-American Studies Dept. in commemoration of Afro-American History week, sponsored a lecture last night at Mahar Auditorium by Professor Playthell Benjamin, who spoke on the relevance of Black History to the contemporary crisis in American Society before 35 people. The many factors of the American crisis was described in four particular categories.

Professor Benjamin addressed himself to the problems of the ecological deterioration, unequal distribution of wealth, aggressive foreign policy, and racist attitudes in America.

Speaking of ecology, Prof. Benjamin cited that because little is known, it is quickly becoming a false issue.

The fact that the American population is growing, and the wealth of this nation is channeled into the interest of large lassiez-fairre businesses, he said, poverty still exists in a nation that is the wealthiest in the world.

Within the formations of nations we find that the most important considerations were personal property and personal liberty. Within the boundaries of personal liberties, economists of today find it hard to oppose business interests because, as Prof. Benjamin pointed out, Lassiez-Fairre attitude is so deeply rooted in American ways that little can be done.

Prof. Benjamin cited Historian Frederick Jackson Turner who believed that many of American ideals of democracy stemmed from the frontier American experience and not European political ideals. His concern was for the preservation of environment. Turner, Prof. Benjamin stated, said that the colonist felt his environment was a threat to him, thus the assault in the frontier environment and any or most non-white, non-christian, non-European people. Thus, Turner explains, the destruction of the Indian and the enslavement of Africans. This also justifies how Americans can reason their present revolution in China and the independence of many African nations.

Many historians believe, Prof. Benjamin feels, that Blacks were the explorers. This can be seen in the study of some of the religious beliefs of the Indians. Prof. Benjamin pointed out that "the Europeans were the only people who made a practice of discovery."

Racism has always existed among the European nations; or at least what could be described as a feeling of race superiority. These feelings weren't found in classical Europe.

Describing the Black people as the casualties of the rise of a second Europe, this being anything that was non-white, non-christian and non-European. These people were treated very differently. The rise of non neo-colonialism in the Asian and African nations was climaxed by a successful revolution in China and the independence of many African nations.

One of the exceptions pointed out by Prof. Benjamin was the South African Republic, but he points out that history hasn't been made there yet.

Slavery, was another important issue discussed by Prof. Benjamin, who cited many examples in which History has proven many great Founders of Democratic philosophy such as Lincoln and Jefferson.

Comparing the Abolistionist movement to the civil rights movement of the 1960's, he found that many abolistionists wanted to run the organizations but really wanted very little to associate with the Freed Slave abolitionist.

Prof. Benjamin pointed out his lack of respect for founding father Jefferson, who's editorial "The Declaration", he praises, but because it was, simply a propaganda speech and Jefferson also had slaves, it was not written for the benefit of Indians and blacks.

The civil war, cause of many historical work was also cited as Prof. Benjamin brought to light the fact that Lincoln's major interest in the war was to preserve the nation.

Prof. Benjamin cited a letter Karl Marx wrote to Lincoln telling him that it would be very much to his advantage to sign the Emancipation Proclamation, and prevent European support, to the Southern states in an uprising.

He closed by mentioned the particular groups which are working to better conditions for Blacks in this country. Playthell agreed with much of the policy of the revolutionary groups such as the Panthers and Revolutionary Action Movement (R.A.M.) but felt that an alliance with whites in the struggle as elites could only lead to a downfall.

Communism-Cuba In Blanco Speech

By ROBERT SCHEIER
MDC Staff

Ernesto Blanco, former Director of All Research for the Cuban Revolutionary Government, spoke on Cuban communism in the Student Union ballroom last night before an audience of approximately 100 people in a speech sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Dr. Blanco, a graduate of M.I.T. and a member of the advisory board of the Massachusetts Young Americans For Freedom, confronted an audience almost equally divided between those who came intending to cheer him on or attempt to discredit him.

Speaking on the state of modern Cuba, Mr. Blanco attempted to dispel what he called "popular pro-Communist fallacies" regarding the nation. With the aid of slides and statistics, he said that Batista, the Cuban leader Castro overthrew, was totally indefensible, except in comparison to the present Communist regime. He also quoted statistics attempting to disprove that Cuba is currently more prosperous than before the Communist takeover, that most of the defectors from the island are the aristocrats, that Cubans have the right to self determination, and other pro-Castro allegations.

After citing the above conclusions, Dr. Blanco gave his explanation of how the present situation had come about. He said that a hard-core group of Marxists, anarchists, and Fabian Socialists misled the great majority of uncommitted people, infecting the universities, intellectuals, and newspapers first with their ideas.

In response to questions, he said that he did not see all attempts to change injustices in the country as led by agitators. it was necessary to keep constant vigilance that such movements did not become tools of the agitators. He concluded by saying that "progress without playing into the hands of agitators is the challenge of the future."

During his speech, Mr. Blanco was greeted with sarcastic applause at several points, as when he told of the Cubans' seizure of American properties shortly after the revolution, and when he characterized many of the college professors in this country as Communists.

Organic Food Store To Open

By ELAINE HANDEL
MDC Staff

A new co-op food store will be organized by Free University which will run it until a working capital and enough people are located to take it over. Once it is finally established, the co-op will move into the center of town.

Arthur Cohen, one of the organizers who worked at the Noodle found people to be very interested in organic food. There seems to be an expressed enthusiasm, not only from the university community but the entire area, he said. This is to be a non-student organization, he said. The only reason plans are being worked through Free University is because available people did not show up at the dining commons meeting through lack of publicity, he added.

The store is to be run on the idea of the Berkeley co-op (also called the food conspiracy). Cohen says "We want to go directly to the consumer." The main intention is to sell food as cheaply as possible.

For example brown rice sells at 17¢ a pound. In commercial stores the mark up for expenses and profit makes the selling price 25¢ to 40¢; this extra cost will now be eliminated, he said.

Later an educational center will be set up. Advice will be given on the preparation of organic food, how to incorporate it into the diet and lots more information concerning health foods.

In a university community of 30,000 there should be about 5,000 potential consumers of these inexpensive yet high quality goods, he expressed.

There is a poster in the Free University listing the names of people on campus who are interested. Students may contact them through this board.

In The Nation And The World

CIA Leads Laotian Tribesmen

SAIGON - The Central Intelligence Agency is leading 3000 U.S. trained tribesmen from Laos into the Ho Chi Minh Trail to harass North Vietnamese troops in the area, according to informed military sources.

The report coincided with a US command announcement that at least 12 Americans were killed yesterday in helicopter crashes including a loss of a big cargo chopper over Laos. Military spokesmen also said a US jet fired on a North Vietnamese antiaircraft site for a second consecutive day.

Military sources said Kha and Lao Thung tribesmen were moved into a refion west of the Communist supply junction of Sepune, 27 miles inside Laos from the Pakse area, 110 miles to the south. The guerrillas have been recruited and armed and led by CIA agents, the sources said.

The guerrillas art beng used for attacks against North Vietnamese units preparing to face a South Vietnamese task force pushing west along Highway 9, the sources said.

UPI correspondent Robert E. Sullivan reported from Quang Tri, South Vietnam, meanwhile, that US Military Commander Gen Creighton W. Abrams and Gen Cao Van Vien, South Vietnamese Army Chief of Staff, arrived for secret meetings on the Laotian campaign.

They were met in Quang Tri by Lt. Gen. J.W. Sutherland and Lt Gen Hoang Xuan Lam, joint commanders of the Laotian drive. They left by helicopter for an undisclosed location.

Five GIs were killed and a sixth was missing in the crash of a big CH 47 Chinook cargo helicopter supporting the South Vietnamese drive in Laos. It was the first Chinook lost in the Laotian offensive.

It was the 15th American helicopter reported destroyed in the campaign although American officers have said the number of 'copters shot down but later recovered totals nearer 30.

Seven other Americans were killed yesterday when a UHI Huey helicopter on a medical evacuation mission crashed 12 miles southeast of Hue. The crash occurred outside the area of the Laotian campaign.

Military spokesmen said an F105 Wild Weasel fighter-bomber carried out a "protective reaction" strike against an antiaircraft missile site 21 miles west of the North Vietnamese panhandle city of Dong Hoi yesterday. US military sources said the F105 fired a Shrike missile when the plane's electronic gear indicated the North Vietnamese radar had locked on nearby B52 bombers and was preparing to fire.

The sources said it was not known whether the US missile damaged the communist antiaircraft site. The strike was five miles north of where an F105 carried out a similar attack Sunday.

South Vietnamese troops pushing through the Ho Chi Minh complex yesterday reported a clash that killed eight communists and resulted in four government troops killed and 11 wounded.

The limited campaign in Laos began Feb. 8 with South Vietnamese troops crossing the border in an effort to cut the Ho Chi Minh Trail and destroy communist arms and supplies in bunkers that have escaped six years of American bombing.

Communiques from Phnom Penh said 200 Cambodian villagers formerly under control of the Viet Cong had turned themselves over to Cambodian troops, despite continued communist presence in their area 15 miles east of the capital.

INDOCHINA DEVELOPMENTS--Map indicates where the South Vietnamese advance inside southern Laos has slowed down Monday. At last reports the vanguard of the South Vietnamese force pushing along Highway 9 was about 15 miles inside Laos. The Cambodian high command said government troops fought a brief battle with the enemy on the outskirts of Tonle Bet and also south of Prey Totung.

LAOTIAN FRONTIER--The bodies of wounded and dead South Vietnamese soldiers lie sprawled along Route 9 in Laos. The troops, taking part in the thrust into Laos, were ambushed by the North Vietnamese about 10 miles west of the Vietnamese border.

Five Aircraft Lost; May Raid SAM Sites

SAIGON (AP) - The U.S. Command today announced the loss of five aircraft in South Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia, and an increase in small-unit fighting in South Vietnam. The toll was 22 Americans killed, 22 wounded and one missing, the Command said.

U.S. military officials also warned there may be more American air strikes against surface-to-air missile-SAM-sites inside North Vietnam to protest B52 bombers flying raids against the Ho-Chi Minh trail just inside Laos. The warning came after attacks Sunday and Monday on SAM sites.

Farther south along the trail through the Laotian panhandle, there were indications that the 11,000 South Vietnamese troops trying to cut the network on the ground were bogging down due to stiffening enemy resistance, heavy antiaircraft fire and poor weather limiting U.S. air support.

South Vietnamese headquarters in Saigon said the most advanced column of troops had pushed about 14 miles westward into Laos at last report Monday after eight days. But Lt. Gen. Hoang Xuan Lam, commander of the operation, said some reconnaissance troops were at Chipone, a key North Vietnamese transshipment point 25 miles west of the border. The U.S. aircraft losses announced today included:

-A big CH47 Chinook helicopter and an F4 Phantom fighter-bomber in the Laotian panhandle. The helicopter was shot down with five crewmen killed and a sixth missing. It was supporting the South Vietnamese troops. The Phantom, attacking the enemy supply trail, crashed due to unknown causes, and the two crewmen were recovered in good condition.

-An Army UH1 helicopter shot down in northeastern Cambodia, with one crewman wounded.

-Two other helicopters crashed in South Vietnam with seven Americans killed.

The U.S. Command said 10 other Americans were killed and 21 were wounded in half a dozen enemy attacks, three of them against units of the 9,000 man U.S. force in the northwest corner of South Vietnam acting as a blocking force for the South Vietnamese in Laos.

The U.S. Command said American helicopters have flown 5,600 missions into Laos in the past eight days. These missions include gunship attacks, resupply, medical evacuation, command and control and troop lifts. About 10 South Vietnamese helicopters are flying resupply missions compared to the hundreds of American aircraft.

Heavy cloud cover and rain limited U.S. air support to the South Vietnamese today.

Military sources said the drive had not made as much progress as anticipated.

The South Vietnamese would not disclose how many fire support bases they have set up in Laos, but Associated Press correspondent Michael Putzel reported from the northern front that more than half a dozen are in operation.

South Vietnamese headquarters reported a series of small clashes Monday and today, which indicated stiffening enemy resistance. The increasing attacks on the American forces near Highway 9 on the Vietnamese side also indicated that some North Vietnamese elements were moving in an attempt to cut off the Saigon forces from the rear.

'Go-go Squadron' Cmdr. Sacked On Pot Charges

SAIGON (AP) - A U.S. Air force colonel with 28 years' service who commanded an airlift squadron was found quilty today of seven marijuana charges. He was sentenced to three years' imprisonment and a fine of $15,000 by a general courtmartial of seven colonels and a brigadier general.

Col. Gerald V. Kehrli, was acquitted on one count, that he asked a sergeant to obtain marijuana for him last Sept. 15. He was convicted of asking the same sergeant and other enlisted men in his squadron to procure marijuana for him on other dates, of smoking and possessing marijuana and of giving it to men in his unit.

By not dismissing him from the Air Force, the court left Kehril eligible for pension upon retirement. His length of service makes him eligible to retire now.

The verdict and sentence are subject to automatic review by Gen. Lucius D. Clay Jr., commander of the 7th Air Force, and the Court of Military Review in Washington. Clay ordered the court-martial in Vietnam, Kehrli, 46, was commander of the squadron at the time of the offenses. He could have received 35 years in prison and been dismissed from the service with loss of pay and allowances.

Kehrli showed no emotion as the verdict and later the sentence was read to him in the trial room at Tan Son Nhut air base.

Although he did not testify during the trial, Kehrli took the stand after the verdict was read and asked the board to consider his record in setting his penalty.

"I have dedicated my life to the best of my ability to the Air Force and my country," he said.

Reading calmly and steadily from notes, Kehrli reviewed his school life in Portland, Ore., and his military career. He said he had been a Boy Scout and a member of the 4-H Club.

His family now lives at Wilmar, Minn.

During the five-day trial, five sergeants and an airman who served under Kehrli testified that they had smoked marijuana with him in his quarters or in staff car enroute to a Saigon restaurant.

An Army intelligence officer, 1st Lt. Peter C. Jackson, 27, of Chicago, told the court that Kehrli once told him he thought marijuana was a "good thing" because it helped him close the generation gap with his men. "Smoking grass won't hurt you, but cigarettes will," Jackson said the heavy-set colonel told him.

The defense presented four colonels and two other Air Force officers as character witnesses. Said one of them: "We had the most go-go squadron in the Air Force, and it was guys like Col. Kehrli that gave you that go-go spirit."

Ecologists And Natives Fight Pipeline Route

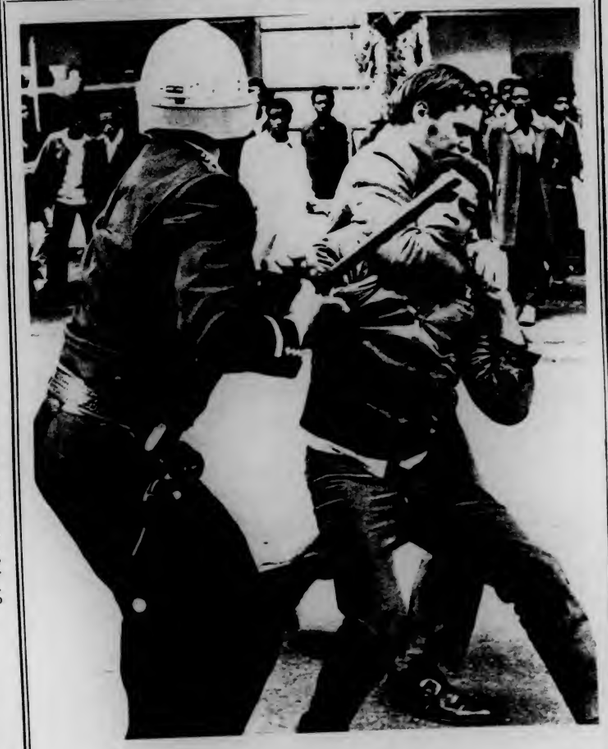
WASHINGTON (AP)-The Federal government is opening hearings on plans for an 800-mile pipeline to tap the rich oilfields on Alaska's North Slope, a project fought by natives and environmentalists.

The Interior Department scheduled hearings today and tomorrow on an application by Alyeska Pipeline Service Co. to construct the 48-inch-diameter tube from the North Slope to the warm-water port of Valdez on the Gulf of Alaska.

A related hearing will be held tomorrow by the Senate Interior Committee on claims by 55,000 Eskimos, Aleuts and Indians to ancestral rights to much of Alaska's land.

Alyeska officials say the native land claims must be settled before construction can start.

The pipeline is blocked by two temporary Federal court injuctions, one obtained by conservationists and the other by an Alaska native village in the pipeline's path.



The conservation group claims the pipeline, across Federal land, would violate the government's environmental protection law. They claim friction of the rushing oil could melt the frozen ground, buckle the pipeline and flood the land with oil.

In addition, the group contends, the proposed pipeline would disrupt migration of Alaskan animals and destroy the native life style, they say.

The injunction granted the native village is tied in with claims before the Interior Committee.

Official subject of the committee hearing is a bill by Chairman Henry M. Jackson (D-Wash.) and other senators, including Ted Stevens (R-Alaska) and Mike Gravel (D-Alaska). The measure passed the Senate but not the House last session.

It calls for Federal payment of $500 million to Alaska natives for land they claim. In addition, the bill would provide up to $500 million in royalties for minerals and oil found on the land and give the natives clear title to 10 million acres of land.

L.A. Homes Condemned In Quake Aftermath

LOS ANGELES (AP)-More than 1,000 dwellings have been condemned because of the earthquake and aftershocks that thundered through the Los Angeles area during the past week.

The aftershocks, four of which were felt Monday, caused only minor damage, authorities said. The latest shocks, from 3.5 to 3.9 magnitude on the Richter scale, were centered in the San Fernando Valley. The quake itself was 6.6 on the scale.

A Monday night tremor knocked out electricity briefly in the Granada Hills suburb. A few residents reported cracked windows and widened fissures in structures but no serious damage.

We had no reports of serious damage but a lot of people called wondering if they should evacuate," a police spokesman said.

"After each shock we get a lot of calls. People are worried and that last one shook us pretty good."

Six emergency Red Cross centers were helping evacuees find shelter after they left their homes or apartments in the valley 10 miles north of downtown Los Angeles.

The Van Norman Dam in the north section of the valley continued to hold. It was badly cracked by the big quake, but the water level was lowered to reduce pressure on the dam.

Fifty city building inspectors surveyed damage Monday from the quake that killed 62 persons, injured more than 1,000 and caused damage estimated as high as $1 billion.

Hugh Gillis, who is in charge o Red Cross shelter operations, sai the shelters were "one-stop servic centers" where families gathe before moving in with friends o receiving money for a week' supply of food and motel and hote bills.

Police warned residents whos homes have yet to be looked over t watch out for persons posing a building inspectors. They sai there were reports of imposter charging $15 to $20 fees. The city' inspectors do not charge for th service.

Most dwellings designated a unsafe will have to be demolished said Harold L. Manley of the cit Department of Building and Publi Safety.

Saigon To Request Peace Talk Shift

SAIGON-South Vietnamese Foreign Minister Tran Van Lam announced in Saigon today that he will suggest in Paris on Thursday at the Vietnam peace talks that the location of the meetings be shifted from the French capital to Southeast Asia.

Lam was quoted by the official Vietnam press agency as warning the French government that if it continued its "unfair activities" South Vietnam might consider severing diplomatic relations with Paris.

The foreign minister, in an interview with the agency was evidently referring to concern expressed by members of the French government following the thrust by South Vietnamese troops into neutral Laos last week.

Lam said the South Vietnamese government was reviewing the question of moving the peace talks to a Southeast Asian nation.

He said the South Vietnamese delegation in Paris would make this announcement Thursday at the talks.

"If the other side agrees to change the venue of the talks, the problem is easy," Lam said. If the Communist side does not agree, the Republic of Vietnam will again review the question."

The foreign minister pointed to an attack by demonstrators on the South Vietnamese consulate general in Paris last week after the Laotian incursion and said this was a good time to propose a change of site for the talks.

South Vietnam had alread carried out several acts of goodwi towards the French governmen but there was never a respons from Paris, he complained.

France and South Vietna maintain diplomatic relations consulate-general level.

There was no indication he which Southeast Asian nation La might have had in mind for t peace talks.

'71 Job Placement, Find Things Difficult

The class of 1971 is finding that looking for a permanent job this year is hard work.

February is a peak recruiting month, and the bulletin boards in college placement offices are plastered with announcements of upcoming interviews by prospective employers.

BUT WIDESPREAD unemployment and a soft economy are having an impact on a bumper crop of college seniors seeking jobs in engineering, teaching, industry, and marketing.

"There is no question but that this year will be the most competitive for the graduates that has been experienced in some time," Robert F. Herrick, executive director of the College Placement Council, said recently.

He went on to note, however, that "many indications now point to a slow but steady improvement in 1971, suggesting that in college placement and in recruitment offices, neither apprehension nor blind optimism are in order."

Nonetheless, a mood of apprehension, if not pessimism, pervades the placement offices of a number of colleges in the Boston area.

"A FEW YEARS AGO, job hunting for a senior was like a perpetual path through a rose garden. We're at a juncture now where it seems like a wasteland out there to them," said Victor R. Lindquist, director of the Office of Career Planning and Placement at Boston University.

"The general feeling here is uh-oh," commented Ronald Dorman, one of a number of young men sporting suits and haircuts who were waiting to be called into interviews at Northeastern University's placement office last week.

Women seniors are saying that they are being forced to consider accepting secretarial positions. And those planning to teach are being advised that there are few openings in metropolitan areas and that they should apply for positions in rural communities.

Gerhard W. Fichtl, a Northeastern senior in chemical engineering, was of the opinion that "a lot of companies are coming to recruit on a good-will basis this year just to keep up face for when there's a good year."

STATISTICS RELEASED by placement officers indicate that some companies, seemingly not concerned about saving face, are not recruiting on campuses at all this year.

The number of companies interviewing at Boston University this year is down by about 25 per cent from two years ago and the number of interviews with company representatives is off about 30 per cent.

George Donaldson, placement director at Boston College, noted that "companies which had dates to interview here have said 'we're sorry but because of the situation we'd like to come in 1972 rather than in 1971."

Northeastern's placement office indicated that for the first four weeks of recruiting this year there were 123 companies, 202 interviews, and 2013 students interviewed. For the comparable period last year, there were 198 companies, 387 interviews, and 3767 students interviewed.

CAUGHT IN A buyer's market already glutted with thousands of unemployed professionals, many seniors are showing a certain resourcefulness and flexibility by choosing unconventional vocations often in remote places.

"We're seeing a greater surge of interest in social service ventures and jobs outside the mainstream of the market-place - in ecology, drafting counseling, small businesses," said Dr. Gardner D. Yenawine, director of vocational counseling and placement at the University of Massachusetts in Boston.

At the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, "the students are much more anxious than they have been," according to Robert K. Weatherall, director of placement.

But, he added, "many are quite light-hearted because there are different things they can think of doing ....Students are willing to think of the next year or two as an apprenticeship in a firm that might well be located in Dubuque, Iowa."

FOR THE SENIOR at Harvard College, the search for jobs is no less difficult. "In fact, it's more difficult for Harvard guys, because, except for those in the sciences, they have not been vocationally trained," explained John B. Fox Jr., director of the Office for Graduate and Career Plans.

"They have had little opportunity to learn about professions," and this, Fox said, contributes to "a terrific sense of despair."

One attractive alternative for seniors shut out of a tight labor market is graduate school. "A larger number of our students are looking for graduate programs. If the job market picture were better, that wouldn't be the case," Yenawine said.

Still, others are rejecting the idea of graduate school. One reason given is that in a time of economic recession, scholarships and stipends for advanced study are less readily available from the schools and from the students' families.

FOX NOTED that the number of Harvard seniors electing to go on to graduate school dropped from 74 per cent in 1966 to 45.7 per cent in 1970. Part of this is because graduate school no longer means an automatic draft deferment. Fear of being "over-intellectualized" by some seniors is also present.

Alvah K. Borman, assistant dean of cooperative education at Northeastern said that this year "the bachelor's degree candidate may have a better chance (for a job) than the advanced degree holder. Industry needs workers; it doesn't need thinkers just now."

Most placement directors concurred that the job prospects are not bleak for all seniors. Would-be accountants and nurses are given the best chances for landing jobs - that will begin in June.

But for a lot of other seniors heading to classes today, the question about future employment is, as Lindquist said, "not where I'm going to start but whether."

'PowerOfTheFuture' DEL Lecture Tonight

Dr. James MacKenzie, research associate with the Massachusetts Audubon Society, particularly concerned with problems of air pollution, nuclear power, population and technology assessment will discuss the topic of "Power and the Future" in Rooms 162-175, Campus Center, tonight at 7:45.

Dr. MacKenzie's talk is the first in the series of Distinguished Ecologists Lectures scheduled for the second semester at the University of Massachusetts under the auspices of the University's Coalition for Environmental Quality and cooperating groups.

Dr. MacKenzie holds a PhD in nuclear physics from the University of Minnesota. He has been a research associate at Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory and spent two years at Argonne National Laboratory working in the field of low energy nuclear physics. Since 1968 he has been an instructor at the Mass. Institute of Technology, and he still maintains an office and the title of visiting scientist at MIT.

He is currently studying power needs and their true environmental costs, preparatory to leading Audubon efforts in educating the public to better understanding the issues and choices confronting them in this area.

"With the ever-increasing population the problems of pollution, growing power needs and finite resources are reaching crisis proportions," says Dr. MacKenzie. He brings welcome expertise to CEQ's effort and the University's to deal with these crises.

Pollution Sources Found By Carver

A bird's eye view of pollution sources in the Connecticut River Valley is the result of a research project by UMass Professor of Civil Engineering Charles E. Carver, Jr.

With the aid of a University Faculty Research Grant, Dr. Carver has completed an aerial survey of various pollutional sources in the Connecticut River Basin from Brattleboro to Springfield. "The Pioneer Valley is one of the most beautiful areas to fly over," said Prof. Carver, "until the discerning eye looks down and begins to pick out with alarming frequency evidences of man's irresponsible rape of the landscape."

More than 150 colored photographs were obtained of burning dumps, belching smokestacks, oil slicks, sewer outfalls, auto graveyards, unsightly gravel pits, and industrial wastes of every description being released to the Connecticut River and its tributaries. A rented Piper Cherokee 180 was used by Professor Carver, a private pilot. Alexander Lyall, an undergraduate student in physical education at UMass and a flight instructor, took the photographs with a Pentax Spotmatic 35mm single lens reflex camera with a 135mm telephoto lens at an altitude of 1500 feet. Kodachrome II film at 1/250 of a second was used.

The slides have been used for educational purposes for environmental engineering students in the civil engineering department, and although they are technically the property of the University of Massachusetts, Dr. Carver has indicated a willingness to show them to any group actively interested in environmental problems in the area.

Student - Legislature Link In Operation

The University and State Communications Council (USCC) has established a new service for the students of UMass and for the Commonwealth. As one of its functions, the Legislative Liaison branch of USCC will provide a communications link between members of the University community who desire it, and the state Legislature.

The purpose of this is to give students who have researched or have interests in specific areas of social interest such as environmental quality, consumer welfare, race and sex discrimination, abortion and birth control, government reform, etc., an opportunity to make their conclusions known to people who can guide them into legislation enactment.

Of this year's Legislative docket are over 7000 bills. It's impossible for members of the General Court to adequately research a significant proportion of these, or even to do in-depth study of petitions relevant to their particular interest. Legislators, therefore, appreciate well-researched studies of specific bills or of general concepts encompassing a large volume of bills. Students who have no research available or in process, but have interests in certain bills can testify at committee hearings or contact the Legislatur from their district and make their feelings known to him.

At this time in the semester many students are searching for term paper themes. If you feel that your research should have some useful effect after its completion, perhaps the topic could be tailored to assist being considered in this Legislative session, or could lead to the filing of original legislation in the next session.

During the next two months, most of the work of the Legislature will be done in committees. There are twenty committees in which bills are presented for the first time in open hearings. Citizens of the Commonwealth have the opportunity to be present at these hearings and have their opinions on bills recorded and their testimony heard.

The committees later meet in closed sessions to determine, on the basis of testimony and their knowledge of the subjects, whether to pass favorably or unfavorably on the bills. The bills then either go to another committee for further consideration or to the General Court for vote.

Some of the bills which may be relevant to members of the University community and which will be heard in committee within the next two weeks are briefly summarized below with the dates of their hearing. During the semester, USCC will have further articles on legislative process in this state with weekly listings of important bills soon to be in committee.

•Commerce and Labor Committee• Legislation to: Regulate security deposits collected from a tenant by a landlord (Feb 18) Further regulate outdoor advertising (Feb 25) Provide that laws prohibiting discrimination because of age be extended to cover persons over age 40 (Feb 23) Prohibit job discrimination because of length of hair or wearing of beard or mustache (Feb 23) Prohibit discrimination on basis of sex in places of public accomodation (Feb 23).

•Education Committee• Legislation to: Revise the formula for state aid to public education (Mar 1) Establish and implement special courses of transitional bilingual education (Mar 2).

•Government Regulations Committee• Legislation to: Lower age requirement for persons allowed to purchase alcoholic beverages (Feb 24).

•Judiciary Committee• Legislation to: Establish a mental health legal advisory board (Feb 24) Repeal the penalties for abortion and fornication (Feb 24) Provide protection for sources of information for those engaged in the profession of journalism (Feb 22) Reduce the penalty for being in the presence of where illegal drugs are found (Feb 24).

FLAMES DESTROY OLD CHURCH–Flames and smoke billow from The Cathedral Church of St Paul, Episcopal at Burlington late yesterday. The fire completely gutted the gothic edifice that dates back to 1850. Parish house adjoining it was also destroyed. No one was injured and there was no estimate of the amount of damage.

Deferred Admissions Gives Class Of 1975 Early Start

One hundred members of the Class of '75 have registered for spring semester at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst under the newly formed "deferred admissions" plan. The program is an attempt to accomodate students who might otherwise not be admitted.

The freshmen class this fall numbered 3,500 students screened from more than 20,000 applications. This new program admits students for second semester when vacancies occur from graduation, entering the service, failures, and getting married. Deferred admittants are able to take advantage of their free fall semester to earn money for school, as well as attend community colleges for preliminary courses.

Although the University does accept a small number of new students each spring semester, this is the first time so large a number have been accepted under the organized plan.

An orientation program for entering mid-year students was provided prior to registration, a practice resumed after more than 15 years. Its goal was to integrate students into the UMass community, and to answer questions on the draft, intramurals, and various other student activities. Student activities. Students had preregistered in December.

New freshmen arrived a few days early in the semester and were assigned to counselors and small discussion groups. The next day students dined at the Top of the Campus and the Campus Center cafeteria, and were joined for dinner by 15 faculty members and administrators, including Vice-Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery and Dean of Students William F. Field.

Earlier in the day, students had an opportunity to talk with various administrators from the Counseling Center, Health Services and the Student Activities Office. Presentations by the Goodell Library staff and a tour of the campus closed the session the day before registration.

Included also in the orientation program were transfer students and 100 Swing Shifters (freshmen who took their first semester in the summer, had the fall semester off, and returned in January).

Participating freshmen will be asked to complete evaluation forms later in the semester. It is hoped that successful programs can also be incorporated in summer counseling.

The Plight Of The Freshman...I

Counseling Format Slated For Revamping

Traditionally Summer Counseling or Orientation has been viewed as an opportunity for freshman to become acquainted with the physical surroundings and to learn some of the basic information which they will need as well as to fulfill the requirements for pre-registration. All of this within two and a half activity and anxiety-filled days.

In past years the program has consisted mainly of a series of testing, advising, informal discussions or question and answer periods led by seemingly uncaring or uninformed counselors. In addition there may have been a residence hall tour or discussion followed by a tour of the campus if one is lucky to have an ambitious and dedicated counselor or a tour and explanation of Goodell Library if one is seriously interested or ambitious enough to view the film presented by the library staff. Aside from these major programs many of which may be optional or unattended there is an excess of free unstructured time.

This all too frequently in the past participants have come away from the program with the feeling of having gained or accomplished nothing more than the required pre-registration and of having wasted a lot of time which they could have used in other ways. What attempts that have been made to provide them with information and insight seemed to them to be highly unsuccessful.

It is for these reasons that Sallie Hamilton recently appointed head of the Summer Counseling Program charged with establishing a new and more efficient program feels the need to devise a new approach to counseling which will hopefully be more effective.

Her present plan calls for greater structuring of the activities within the program. In this way she feels that those who are truly and seriously interested in finding answers to questions they may have when they come to orientation will have the opportunity to do so. It is also her hope that the structuring will help those who are doubtful but confused as to what questions to ask by exposing them to a series of activities which will help them to see more clearly the areas in which they may have doubts or questions.

A major facet of the new program will be less testing and more planned activities both recreational and informative in nature. Testing will be limited to voluntary Advanced Placement tests while activities will range from panel discussions to mini lectures designed to give the freshman an introduction to the large introductory course lectures which they will have to attend throughout a major portion of their first two years in the University. Also included will be such purely recreational events as volley ball or concerts for those who feel the need to acquire friends and meet some of their fellow freshman.

"In this way there will be a variety of activities to meet the needs of a variety of interests." was Miss Hamilton's explanation for this phase of the proposed program.

Counselors will plan an important role under the new program. Because of the closely structured format of the program it is they who will have the most contact and therefore the most influence upon the new freshman. those who intend to attend summer courses will not be chosen as counselors. She feels that this is only right because of the influence which the counselors will have upon the freshman and their attitudes towards the University.

Another change will be an attempt to involve more faculty in the program both in formal and informal activities. The need for this was seen as a result of a questionnaire sent to 100 selected freshman who took part in last summer's program. Of the 23 responses received the majority indicated a greater need for academic advising and course information. It is Miss Hamilton's feeling that if the students are given the opportunity to become more acquainted with faculty members that they will have more of an opportunity to learn about the University and feel that they are a part of it.

The success of more faculty involvement was evidenced by the comments received from some of the 200 freshman who enrolled in the University for the first time this semester. These freshman arrived on campus on January 24 and were given intensive orientation in such aspects of the University as residence hall life and in particular in the procedures for Registration and Course Change. They had all been pre-registered in December.

An important part of their program included dinner at the Top of the Campus where they dined with 15 faculty members and administrators including Vice-Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery and Dean of Students William F. Field. Those who participated in the program stated that the opportunity to meet faculty who were representative of many of the departments on campus was helpful to them. Miss Hamilton also remarked that of those Spring Semester freshman who have come to her seeking advise and help during the past two weeks of the semester only three were students who had come to campus early for the program and who had particiated in the activities.

She also noted that in response to freshmen desire for more course information that the Admissions Office has agreed to send complete course catalogs, descriptions and requirements to all accepted freshman no later than early May. This will hopefully allow the freshman some opportunity to look over the courses and requirements and therefore gain some idea of the courses that they should pre-register for. It may also help to give them an idea of the requirements of the University and the departments and thus solve many of the problems which accompany course selection. In this way it is hoped that the freshman will gain some sense of control over his own future and program and will not feel that he is merely being arbitrarily placed in the biggest and most common courses.

Dean Field in commenting on the Summer Counseling Program as a whole indicated his feeling that there was some need for more parental involvement in the program's activities. He expressed the feeling that an upcoming series of on-campus discussions with interested parents of this year's freshman might prove helpful in determining the needs and problems of parents.

He commented that "Parents don't really have much contact with the University other than the receipt of bills and grades and what little students may tell them when they go home concerning campus activities." He sees a need for parents to become better informed in what the University is doing and the programs and services which it provides so that they can help their sons and daughters with whatever problems may arise. He also feels that in this way parents will become more responsive to the problems of the University and will serve to guide the University administration as to the type of programs and policies which they feel are necessary.

Miss Hamilton also sees the necessity for a continuation of orientation in residence halls and areas after freshman have arrived on campus. "Counseling cannot solve all the problems-it only attempts to give them (the freshmen) some foundation upon which to build."

It is her view that the various Area Coordinators, House Directors and residence hall counselors are better equipped and informed to provide a continuing program of orientation into residence hall living, social life and outside activities. It is these groups which have the most contact with the freshman once they arrive on campus and therefore they are the closest source from which information and advice can be obtained.

She suggested discussion sessions within the dorms sooon after the freshman's arrival on campus as a helpful way of introducing freshman to residence hall living. Although uncertain as yet as to how orientation to other aspects of University life might be continued she did point to such SWAP '70 recommendations as possible establishment of an orientation week early in September or the institution of a non-credit orientation course for the first few weeks of the Fall semester as being possible ideas for ways in which counseling might be continued once the freshman have arrived on campus. In this way she feels that the freshmen will gain some contacts and relationships which will prove useful to him not only in dealing with problems which confront him during his freshman year throughout his University career as well.

It is Miss Hamilton's hope that with these changes and planned changes in rules including establishment of a curfew for freshman and stricter rules for counselors that the Summer Counseling Program will become more effective and serve a more useful purpose in preparing future classes for their careers here at the University.

Learning The Game

The first part of the Collegian's look into the plight of Freshmen, appearing today, points to the need for a more comprehensive program of academic orientation both during the initial Summer program and, more particularly, once the student is actually on campus at Registration and Course change day.

The experience of many freshmen who for the first time discover that four of the five courses they pre-registered for were rejected by the mythical computer, emphasizes the need for better facilities to help the confused student. More often than not, once a student is dropped from the courses he or she wants, there is a flurry of anxiety, followed by the "picking up" of the first course that comes along. Rather than receiving advice and guidance on how to regain the courses the student wants and needs, the freshman will end up with whatever fits the schedule.

The University could do much more for those entering for the first time. Individual professors, most of whom remain anonymous to the freshmen, could provide their services and expertise at beating the system, a skill which most students eventually develop on their own.

What is most important is to recognize that even freshmen have a good knowledge of what they want to study, but simply lack the experience to know where and how to get it from the University.

The TV Blackout

WASHINGTON- A week ago Sunday New York City had a blackout which caused all nine television stations in the area to go out for several hours. This created tremendous crises in families all over the New York area and proved that TV plays a much greater role in people's lives than anyone can imagine.

For example, when the TV went off in the Bufkins' house in Forest Hills, Long Island, panic set in. First Bufkins thought it was his set in the living room, so he rushed into his bedroom and turned on that set. Nothing.

The phone rang and Mrs. Bufkins heard her sister in Manhattan tell her that there was a blackout.

She hung up and said to her husband, "It isn't your set. Something's happened to the top of the Empire State Building."

Bufkins stopped and said, "Who are you?"

"I'm your wife, Edith."

"Oh," Bufkins said. "Then I suppose those kids in there are mine."

"That's right," Mrs. Bufkins said. "If you ever got out of that armchair in front of the TV set, you'd know who we were."

"Boy, they've really grown," Bufkins said, looking at his son and daughter. "How old are they now?"

"Thirteen and 14," Mrs. Bufkins replied.

"I'll be darned. Hi kids."

"Who's he?" Bufkins' son Henry asked.

"It's your father," Mrs. Bufkins said

"I'm pleased to meetcha," Bufkins' daughter Mary said shyly.

There was an embarrassed silence all around.

"Look," said Bufkins finally. "I know I haven't been much of a father, but now that the TV's out I'd like to make it up to you."

"How?" asked Henry.

"Well, let's just talk," Bufkins said. "That's the best way to get to know each other."

"What do you want to talk about?" Mary asked.

"Well, for starters, what school do you go to?"

"We go to Forest Hills High School," Henry said.

"What do you know?" Bufkins said. "You're both in high school."

There was a dead silence.

"What do you do?" Mary asked.

"I'm an accountant," Bufkins said.

"I thought you were a car salesman," Mrs. Bufkins said in surprise.

"That was two years ago. Didn't I tell you I changed jobs?" Bufkins said.

"No, you didn't. You haven't told me anything for two years."

"Yup. I'm doing quite well too," Bufkins said.

"Then why am I working in a department store?" Mrs. Bufkins demanded.

"Oh, are you still working in a department store? If I had known that, I would have told you you could quit last year. You should have mentioned it," Bufkins said.

There was more dead silence.

Finally Henry said, "Hey, you want to hear me play the guitar?"

"I'll be darned. You know how to play the guitar? Say, didn't I have a daughter who played the guitar?"

"That was Susie," Mrs. Bufkins said.

"Where is she?"

"She got married a year ago just about the time you were watching the World Series."

"How about that?" Bufkins said very pleased. "You know, I hope they don't fix the antenna for another couple hours. There's nothing like a blackout for a man to really get to know his family."

So More Will Live

If you read yesterday's Collegian, you probably noticed that the U.S. Army, in its infinite wisdom, is removing 2700 slot machines from its clubs in Vietnam. According to the Army, it is not practical to maintain them in the war zone and also it is alleged that they are related to the widespread corruption in Vietnam.

Whether these things are true or not seems immaterial. What does appear important, however, is the Army's apparent set of priorities. With American forces continually becoming deeper and deeper involved in the Indochina insanity, the Army is worrying about maintaining slot machines. Their reasoning is questionable.

According to the Army, "All too often the firms and individuals who install, service and profit from these machines are not the sort (my emphasis) with which the U.S. government should deal." It is interesting that the upstanding U.S. government should suddenly set standards for its own dealings after all that has happened in Vietnam.

An easier solution to the pressing problem of slot machines seems to have been overlooked by the Army.

The obvious answer would be to pull out American forces in Vietnam, thereby eliminating the problem all together. Indeed, if the U.S. is withdrawing from Indochina as we are continually told, then the entire move seems ludicrous.

Yet with the war supposedly slowing down (if you overlook Laos, Cambodia and Vietnam) then the Army brass needs something to occupy its time. Perhaps crocheting is the answer.

Another thing that everyone is thinking about these days is the monetary situation. This problem has a somewhat special application not only to the University but to the war and students as well.

It appears that many benefactors of the University, and the term is used loosely, are now withholding funds due to the actions of students in recent mo[nths] i.e., the Strike, stuff campus unrest in general. The effects of this are that the students are forced to increase their payments to the University to make up the difference. In reality, it seems they are paying for their actions in a more realistic sense than they had realized.

The logic that the benefactors use in responding to the quest for funds is impeccable. The general response is that they are not willing to contribute to the decadence and immorality that is taking place on the college campuses today. In actuality, most are probably rationalizing their own inability to pay or trying to associate themselves with the nobility of the American way.

In the end, students are being taxed for trying to save lives. If we assume that the students are at all effective in getting their point across and ending the war, then the administration might steal a slogan from another charity organization and tell its benefactors that the more they give, the more will live.

The Other Half Is You

Last Wednesday night the Senate finally accomplished what it has long worked for. It became the sole monetary power on this campus, and it used its powers accordingly. A word about no more class government.

Did you know that the class governments were the only groups on campus with power over their own budgets (the class taxes)? In other words, they set the amount of money that they will need to operate for a year and the approval of the budget by the Senate is nearly automatic. Perhaps you think that the downfall of class government was the fault of the leadership, and I am willing to take half of the blame. But the other half belongs to the student. Class government is YOU. You are the ones who can make it or break it. You lacked the interest.

Maybe you feel like it is no great loss. I guess the answer to that won't be known until next year, but a word of warning. Class government provided a power check on the Senate. Remember the petitions that circulated last year for the referendum on the Senate appropriation for those Buses to Washington? Class government had something to do with that. More than just a check, the Class Governments provide a source of funding other than the Senate. For example, suppose you had a worthwhile project that you needed funding for and you went to the Senate and they turned you down. Before you could turn to the Class Governments, but now you have no recourse, especially if you need a good deal of money.

Maybe there is an even more far reaching effect of their actions. Do you think that the extra money provided for by the abolition of class governments is going to find its way into the area governments? Think about it. The classes levy taxes. If there are no classes, there are no taxes, and there is no extra money. The Senate may maintain the present Activities tax, which includes the class taxes, and thereby maintain the present rate of income. The major difference is that the Senate does not have to distribute that money to the areas.

Alternatives? I see three alternatives to us as students. First, as an individual you can push for a revision of the Student Government system to shift power into the Areas and out of the Senate. Secondly, get a referendum to bring class government to a campus wide vote and, then if it is retained, use your class officers and Executive counsels to push for the changes needed. Finally if all else fails, you can do what I plan to do. That is, to withhold your student Activities tax next September, then, when the Senate is in exactly the same boat as everyone else, namely no money, we can sit down together and shape the governmental system of this University into something for the benefit of us all, something that will bring us up to the times.

If you have read all of this and find some sense in it, let me know and we can get something done.

Letters To The Editor

Homosexuals Don't Always Agree

To "Name Withheld By Request":

I had mixed feelings about your letter to the Editor (Feb. 12) about homosexuality. I was impressed by your obvious sincerity and just as obvious attempt to be open and objective. I cannot agree however with your labeling radical homosexuals as "sick".

What many people may not realize is that there are now two homophile organizations on campus. The Student Homophile League and the Gay Liberation Front.

The SHL, now a Recognized Student Organization, has been in existence since the fall semester. Many MDC readers have probably seen articles and ads sponsored by SHL. Other students may have been in classes or organizations that invited SHL members to rap with them. The League is moving slowly to educate the community and bring about acceptance of homosexuality as a life style.

The GLF was organized about a month ago by a group of SHL members in order to take more public action for gay liberation. I'm sure GLF will reply to your letter, but let me give you a conservative's view. GLF was formed because they (as I see it) were impatient with the rate of speed at which SHL was moving. They were appalled by the fact that most SHL members were not willing to confront the public with their homosexuality.

I feel that SHL and GLF want basically the same things, but differ in the means or tactics to that end. I don't think you understand that what you called "sick" were premeditated confrontation techniques commonly employed by all more political bodies, not just Gay Lib.

Though I personally do not feel liberation of local bars or the Hatch is politically wise, I can well understand the reasoning behind such action. SHL of which I am an active member, is content to "stay in its place" and work quietly for liberation. Which means we don't publicly flaunt our homosexuality. But all of us wish we didn't have to repress spontaneous expression of affection, such as holding hands walking across campus. We wish we could have a beer and dance in Amherst instead of going to Springfield, Boston or New York.

The point is that homosexuals do not always agree, action for change takes many forms and I believe there should be room for all of them in our community.

The next time you meet a "radical" homosexual (as you say they are pretty easy to identify) instead of taking your unease home with you, I suggest you confront them with your feelings. This, after all, is what GLF wants - communication.

They are exposing their homosexuality (a very risky thing to do) in an effort to get feedback, to open minds, to increase understanding. They don't want to get beat up. They don't like verbal abuse. They're not necessarily sick. They just want to talk, to you. Drop into the Gay Lib Center in the Free U sometime.

PEACE TO YOU

Kay M. Raymond

Don't Judge A Book...

To "Name Withheld By Request":

"You try so hard
But you just don't understand
Just what you will say
When you get home
Cause something is happening here
And you don't know what it is
Do you, Mr. Jones?"

Bob Dylan, "Ballad of the thin Man" Highway 61 Revisited

I would like to thank you for your letter and for giving me this opportunity to explain my actions.

You say, "I am writing in regard to those who haven't been able to adjust to society: the Sick Homosexuals." In the society which you feel I should adjust to it is considered feminine to be dependent, yielding, generous, kind, comforting, emotional, irrational, and reversible. It is "masculine" to be independent, unyielding to the death, dominant, solid, unemotional, rational, aggressive and competitive. We have all been raised in this divided environment and have been conditioned to play artificial sex roles, expressing only those qualities that are socially defined for our sex. These sex roles oppress all of us because they are so narrowly defined and limiting.

You mentioned three times in your letter that you were heterosexual ("I go for 'chicks'," etc.), at the same time saying you don't have to go around screaming you are heterosexual. By labeling yourself that way, you are limiting yourself to a rigidly defined role. We of Gay Liberation Front refuse to accept these socially defined roles. We are not "homosexual" (a term developed by society to describe certain behavioral roles), but rather we are gay.

The reason that I sometimes dress in women's clothing is simply that it helps me to bring out my natural feminine qualities which society has forced me to repress for such a long time.

One last comment. You say, "I am not personally guilty of any of this oppression; and I refuse to apologize for being a heterosexual." Well, think about it some more, honey.

Honorable Mentions

To The Editor:

In regard to the recent acceptance of the Central Area Work Week Proposal by the administration, a few "honorable mentions" should be made.

The proposal passed by the "red tape ladder of administrative successions." With the endorsements of the area coordinator, the proposal went directly to the Chancellor, Mr. Campion and Dr. Bromery, and a hearing on the proposal was set up for the following week. Previously proposals have taken months to work through the channels and levels of appeal.

De-centralization may be working when student proposals can gain recognition and support immediately, if shown to be well planned and worked out. Mr. Clay, assistant to the Chancellor, Dr. Bromery, and George Norton, Director of the Physical Plant, gave the Work Week committee a very supportive and gratifying meeting. The proposal was discussed and given the immediate financial support necessary for ordering materials and hiring students. Mr. Clay said he was glad to see proposals such as Work Week coming from the students. This may mean a bright forecast for more student and student/administrative proposals to come.

Our thanks to the administration.

Such A Nice Girl...

To The Editor:

It seems there is an idea milling around that spending four years at one University is perhaps a rather limited experience. Consequently, many students are seeking to do some living and studying overseas for a year. One country that accommodates many students with this desire is Israel.

The largest stumbling block to this sort of adventure is learning a new language and in Israel a foreign student spends months in an Ulpan with intense Hebrew language study. They are months that could be better spent.

It seems to me strange that with all the uncommon languages being taught at UMass and in the five college area, there is absolutely no conversational Hebrew course that one may take to fulfill a language requirement.

Many students would like to correct that peculiarity in the curriculum but lack the sufficient vehicle to do so. The idea and the desire are here on Campus. If you want the course, we can get it...together. Please call me.

The Collegian's Associated Press wire was put out of action yesterday by a detachment of the Chicopee Sanitation department who, with the help of a front-end loader, destroyed the main carrier wire between here and Springfield. What more ignominious defeat for a newspaper exists than to be censored by the Chicopee Sanitation department?

Strangely enough, the issue of Freshmen in Co-Ed dorms, which will be re-considered by the Trustee's Student Life Committee in Boston today, was never an issue at other Universities and Colleges. Nobody ever saw a reason to make the distinction in places like California. In the Co-Ed dorms at Harvard, for reasons mostly traditional, Freshmen from Radcliffe live in the dorms and Freshmen from Harvard don't.

Canvassing, Anyone?

To the editor:

As an art major here at the University of Massachusetts, I have a major gripe along with 90% of the other art majors here. (Perhaps 90% is an underestimate.) Speaking from experience-I am not a senior-I can safely say that the art facilities are not growing with the rest of the University. Each semester I have tried in vain to take certain art courses, finding to my dismay that they were usually filled up, leaving me, an art major, with no art courses to take. The courses that I successfully squeezed myself into were terribly overcrowded. Because of congestion in the classes, the facilities were inadequate. Either one needs to buy his own equipment (a potter's wheel costs a mere $1,500.00), get to the classes hours early, or use aggressive influences. What is a nice, kindly art major to do? I feel terribly sorry for incoming freshmen who hope to specialize in art and consider myself very fortunate to have accumulated enough art credits for my degree. Believe me, It was not easy.

I sincerely hope that the University takes heed and helps remedy this situation. Too many students make for half an education for everyone except for those majoring in mule technology.

Watch Out, It's Catching

To the editor:

With the Student Senate voting themselves retroactive pay raises these days, most students don't know what to expect next. If the "retroactive pay raise fever" catches on, we might see some of the following:

1. The Dorm janitors, deciding that they need a retroactive decrease in the amount of trash they dump, decide to pick up only half of the trash in the trash rooms. To make such a "raise" retroactive, they would merely replace a year's trash back to each person's room. After this initial return, they would only take half of the deposited trash. ECOLOGIST TAKE NOTICE!

2. WMUA-The directors of the station, having decided that they need a pay raise, decide to play music only one half of the time--the other half of the time they'll just talk (and talk and talk and...). To make this plan retroactive (remember: it's no good unless it's retroactive), every disk jockey will play the music portion of his show backwards. The disparity between this and the programming to which we are generally accustomed will be almost totally indiscernible even to the most discriminative listeners.

3. "COLLEGIAN staff votes pay raise-retroactive work decrease." For one year, the COLLEGIAN will print "Little Orphan Annie, Nancy, Dagwood, Winnie Winkle, The Little Prince, and Mr. Magoo". To save time on the paper, more editorials and less news stories will appear. Will anyone notice?

Theatre here on campus has been, well, it's obvious how far you are from Broadway. Some productions have been entertainming, even as much as enjoyable, yet they have been missing a feeling of life. It's a feeling you get maybe some late Saturday night watching an old motor Bikie or Beach Party flick between the Railroad Salvage commercials on Channel 22. No need to fret, though, theater is alive and well and living, yes living, at the Campus Center. The concrete marvel is the closest this campus comes to "living theater" (UT to the contrary).

It is an experience. Ever walk through the Concourse at about two in the afternoon? Here is a production number that even Busby Berkeley would envy; starry-eyed co-eds on the make, your favorite dealer with the best grass this side of Southwest, dirty old men staying at the-"heh-heh" holtel trying to pick up mubile young ladies at the Coffee Shop. All together, this cast-of-thousands drifting down and through these halls make a crowd scene from a Cecil B. Demille film look like your eight o'clock class on Spring Day.

WHAT IS THIS MAN LAUGHING AT? Only Marcel Breuer knows for sure. For thrills and chills that will leave you breathless with awe and speechless with wonder, take a tour of the Campus Center someday soon. You'll like it. (MDC photo by David Bernstein.)

Its moods are many, it can be spectacular, it can be sublime. For instance, picture the Hatch at about six p.m. There you sit, having another dangling conversation with someone you really don't want to talk to but is, well, just there. Or sitting alone at your favorite table watching the Harch lady fumble change into some poor kid's Coke, listening to "Knock Three Times" on the barbled jukebox, and staring at the sorority girl across the way sprawling in her seat while reading "The Sensuous Woman". It's almost a transcendental experience, let me tell you.

The cast is gargantuan and all work well together towards the total effect. There are some individual standout performances. A recent (and well-needed returning cast member) is the Cyd Charisse of Belchertown State. Always dressed in nifty brown and poised in front of the juke box, she occasionally breaks into a frenetic frenzy which would put a chorus at the now lamented Old Howard to shame.

Backing her up on drums is the young man with the drumsticks. His kinetic rhythms and oh-so-cool mannerisms keep the groupies panting for more.

There are also the many groups whose little comic routines add so much to the show. The well meaning religious groups who flaunt themselves on innocent passer-bys with nets woven of biblical sayings and spliced with WASPish ingenuity. Or, if you're young, innocent, and wish you weren't munch on some peanuts at the Top-of-the-Campus while an inebriated young executive falls all over you with a line like "where have you been hiding all my life?"

The sets, designed by Marcel Breuer, are stark and offer no comfort despite the fact their cost is now estimated at about twenty million. He often creates an atmosphere reminiscent of an old Victor Mature biblical spectacular. The costumes, supplied by the cast, exhibit the vast originality of blue denim from Zayre's of South Hadley. Occasionally a flashy number struts by, supplied by Betty's Bargain Boutique of Bayonne, New Jersey.

"Little field's Follies", the show's affectionate title, has been assured a long run. It has been consistently standing room only since its long-delayed and hardly-awaited opening last September, yet there is little enthusiasm from its audience. It seems the audience is made of disappointed backers who are in no position to enjoy the absurdity of the show.

Gary Burton Quartet On Campus Next Week

The UMass Fine Arts Council continues its series of bringing onto campus leading jazz ensembles with the two day visit of the Gary Burton Quartet, February 26 and 27. The group will give two concerts and two seminars.

A key feature of this program is to provide the opportunity for students and other jazz buffs to participate in informal sessions with these noted musicians. Both sessions will be open without charge to those purchasing tickets to either of the Quartet's evening concerts.

Full ticket and program information may be obtained by contacting the Fine Arts Council ticket office, 125 Herter Hall.

Albums

Short Takes

By DON GLICKSTEIN
MDC Staff

Paranoid, Black Sabbath, Warner Brothers WS 1887. Paranoid is to music as Kenneth Johnson is to students, and both of them have lost the 9th floor.

You're Not Alone, Dion, Warner Brothers WS 1872. Dion, singing Dion, Melanie, and Lennon, has arrived with a thoroughly unpretentious album, relaxing and soothing (albeit his voice is grating at times). Somewhat folkie, with a complementary but not overshadowing backup group., You're Not Alone is for those quiet evenings in the corner, sitting by a rustic table with a gas lamp, a cup of hot chocolate, and someone you love very much.

Love, A King of Hate Story, Tim Rose, Capital ST-673. At times, his blues is brilliant, but more often than not, Tim Rose is just another very hoarse singer, not bad enough to be discarded completely, not good enough to listen to again and again. Why is it that so many singers with the potential for achievement type themselves out of the running? One cut on the album, "Sympathy", is notable because one can hear what Tim Rose can do given a subdued, yet very electric accompaniment.

Kingdom Come, Sir Lord Baltimore, Mercury SR 61328. "You are the master heartache", moans Sir Lord Baltimore. I refuse to laud trite lyrics, screaming, and "heavy" groups with not one bit of talent or uniqueness.

Going Back to Colorado, Zephyr, Warner Brothers WS 1897. Something about Zephyr makes it delightful. Maybe its the band which sneaks up on you without startling. Maybe its the varied music of electric blues and acoustic jazz that soothes and melts into different moods. Most likely, it's Candy Givens, the lead singer, who knows when to belt it out like early Joplin, when to haunt like Gracie Slick, and when to be Candy Givens. An excellent album.

Greatest Hits, Kenny Rogers and the First Edition, Reprise 6437. The First Edition sings nice songs with a minimum of feeling and musical innovation. Top 40 all the way.

Holy Magick, Graham Bond, Mercury SR 61327. The fact is, folks, we're living in 20th century America, and we're not going to meditate reality away. Holy Magick tries to, yet cannot escape from the same old riffs, rhythms, and electrums. This is an album that speaks of magick and Tarot cards, yet is unable to pull even a Tibetan hare from its hat.

Woodsmoke and Oranges, Paul Siebel, Elektra EKS-74064.

Jack-knife Gypsy, Paul Siebel, Elektra EKS-74081. The difficulty with country and country-folk is that the lyrics tend to be banal and the music has absolutely no relevance and relationship to the words. Paul Siebel is a better than average country-folk singer, but even he cannot escape from his roots. Like so many writer-singers, Siebel does little justice to his own work, although each of his albums contain songs that I'm looking forward to listening to again. "Chips are Down" on Jack-knife Gypsy shows a direction in which Siebel can go. It is a slow, lazy nihilistic song sung in what can only be called a combination of Sgt. Pepper's Beatles, a Broadway musical, and country steel guitar. Siebel has the potential for excitement.

Paul Hannigan, who recently published a volume of poems entitled LAUGHING, will give a reading of his works this Thursday evening at 8 in Herter 227.

Poetry Like Chicken-Pox

Paul Hannigan, the acclaimed-young poet, will give a reading of his works this Thursday, February 18, at 8 PM in Herter 227. Mr. Hannigan has recently published a book of his poems entitled Laughing.

In this collection Mr. Hannigan reflects the laughter of recognition and acceptance. He has the odd gift of finding the commonplace in the grotesque as well as the nearly universal ability of finding the grotesque in the commonplace. Words are used to delight and reveal truth in a tone that is witty and wry. Yet in a sense his poems are a celebration and he may simply be mocking reason.

Speaking of Laughing, poet James Tate (who will join the UMass faculty next fall) said, "These are the kind of poems that won't go easy. They're like chicken-pox; after you've finished the book you notice the little scars, half of which you feel the better for having, the better for having the half you just stare at and mutter: 'Who does this man Paul Hannigan think he is, anyway?' And then you think you hear him laughing outside your window, Rasputin on one arm, and Emily Dickinson on the other."

Paul Hannigan was born in Cambridge Mass. He has been everything from a gas station attendant to a stockboy in a supermarket to a research assistant to a poet, the last of which he likes the best. He currently resides in Medford.

Music Faculty Member Plans Recital Next Week

Fernande Kaeser, pianist, will present a concert on Wednesday, Feb. 24 at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium at the UMass.

A member of the UMass piano faculty, Miss Kaeser is a graduate of the Conservatoire of Geneva, where she was one of the few pupils of the renowned pianist, Dina Lipatti.

She was the only prize winner for piano at the International Music Competition of Geneva in 1951. Three years later she became the only Swiss pianist ever awarded first prize in the International Music Competition of Munich.

Miss Kaeser has given concerts in most countries of Europe, and has performed with many prominent orchestras including L'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, The London Philharmonic Orchestra, the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, the BBC Symphony Orchestra, and the Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra. Recently she won the Beethoven Prize of the Harriet Cohen International Music Award.

Miss Kaeser's program will consist of Beethoven's "Eleven Bagatelles Op. 119," Bartok's "Suite Op. 14," Bach's "English Suite in G Minor," Mozart's "Sonata in C Major K. 330," Chopin's "Fantaisie-Impromptu Op. 66," and "Ballade in A Flat Op. 47".

This concert, open to the public without charge, is sponsored by the University's Department of Music in its continuing faculty recital series.

A Terminal Case

Authentic off-Broadway theatrical experience of all sorts is being provided on campus all this week as a result of the visit this week by The Open Theatre Ensemble. The ensemble, numbering twelve, interesting young actors is headed by Joseph Chaikin and Roberta Sklar, co-directors. The residency is part of the 1970-71 Fine Arts Council Series and features daily workshops, seminars, lecture-demonstrations and master classes in addition to three evening performances in Bowker Auditorium (Thursday, Friday and Saturday at 8:00 P.M.)

Known internationally as one of this country's most exciting experimental theatre groups, The Open Theatre Ensemble will be remembered by many for its stunning performance of "SERPENT" over the educational television network early this season. The ensemble will perform "TERMINAL" on Thursday and Saturday evenings and will do a new work in progress based on human mutations on Friday evening. The company points out that Friday's performance is actually an open rehearsal of a developing work.

Mktg. Club To Show Recruiting Process

The University of Massachusetts Marketing Club will present a program on the intracacies of the recruiting process, tomorrow night, in room 100/102 SBA at 7:30. The theme for the program is "put your best foot forward" and will not only be of interest to seniors but to underclassmen in preparing and determining their choice of courses in the coming semesters.

Mr. Clark Edwards of the Financial and Placement Office will be the moderator for a team of recruiters representing the major segments of the business world. Mr. Robert Stevens, recruiting representative Carnation Company, E.H. Thomas, Director of employment Jordan Marsh, John Pennington, marketing manager Aetna Casualty and Surety Company, plus a representative of the Proctor and Gamble Corporation will be the four members of the recruiting panel. A question and answer period will follow the company presentations.

This should prove to be an excellent opportunity for those already engaged in the recruiting process to pinpoint mistakes presently being made and to re-evaluate the methods they are presently using in order to put their best foot forward. And for those undergraduates who will begin recruiting in the not too distant future the program will provide a valuable insight into the procedure that will best enable them to secure a desired position with a desired firm. All are cordially invited to attend.

It is hoped that at the first meeting the course's final organization and content will be determined.

Though non-accredited, the course is seen as an active step taken by this organization toward the establishment of a complete Armenian Course of Study within the five college area.

All A.S.A.C. sponsored activities are open to the Five College Community and the public is cordially invited to attend.

This decrepit bureau is but one of many to be repaired during Central Area's Work Week.

Work Week Accepted

The Administration has accepted a $17,700 proposal from the Central Area Work Week Committee to implement plans for the Student work week for spring break which serves the dual purpose of giving jobs to students while renovating the Central Area.

Speaking for the administration were Dr. Randolph W. Bromery, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, David Clay, Special Assistant to the Chancellor, and George Norton, Physical Plant.

The money was guaranteed by Clay with discussions about sources and justification for the money. The justification accepted was the idea that Central Area students' Residential Trust Fund Account money renovated Mills as a dorm which has since become an academic building. The material and labor costs were gone over in detail with Clay, and Norton offered full personnel and planning/coordinating support from his office (Physical Plant).

Logs License Transferred

Selectmen voted to transfer a wine, malt beverages and common victuallers license from Roy Rosenblatt, former part-owner and manager of The Logs on North Pleasant Street, to Thomas C. Currier and Alfred M. Boyajian who would operate the same business as Quick Silver.

Rosenblatt was arrested last fall and charged with selling the "largest amount of marijuana extract ever seized in this state," federal narcotics agents said.

He allegedly sold 143 vials of the extract to a federal undercover agent at a price of $85 a vial totaling more than $12,000.

Nuclear vs. Communal Family

By GILBERT J. SALK
MDC Staff

We are all victims of the myth of the nuclear family. The traditional mother-father-2.5 kids syndrome. We're supposed to get married, buy or rent a house or an apartment, and consume, each in our own little nucleus. There is some obvious ecological waste involved in this process, but that is the subject of another column. Today, I'm more concerned about alternative living arrangements.

The problem with the nuclear family is that it puts a frequently unbearable amount of pressure on its members. Since I happen to be a male, let me discuss it from a male's viewpoint. But please remember that the exact same problems apply to the female.

Suppose I'm married. Society then dictates that I must turn to my wife to satisfy all of my needs. No one person could ever do that, so she is immediately put in an impossible position. She may fill my sexual needs to a reasonable degree, but there are other factors as well. I may be able to relax and unwind after a day's work with her, but she may not share my very strong interest in politics or sports, or engineering, or books or something. So this need is left unfulfilled.

After a while, this unfulfilled need may begin to seem more and more important. Tension grows, augmented by the fact that I am leaving certain of her needs unfulfilled. Fights start, leaving a temporary bitterness which affects our sexual relationship causing fights about money causing fights about the kids in school causing a worsening sexual problem etc., etc. until a divorce becomes a major consideration. She's miserable, the kids are emotionally insecure, my head's a mess.

Change the scenario a bit. I find someone else who shares my interest in whatever-it-is. He/she and I become close friends and want to get to know each other better. Then the frustration becomes one of conflicting time commitments, and the same cycle develops. Other scenarios frequently lead to the same place. There are exceptions, granted, but look around. How many really happy marriages do you know?

Now consider an alternative. A group of ten people get together, roughly half male and half female. They make a commitment to each other similar to the commitment two people make when they get married. Suppose I'm in such a group. Instead of having only my wife to relate to, I have nine other people who can meet my needs and whose needs I can help fulfill. This is a form of the extended family concept. Children are the responsibility of the entire family. Income is shared, as are expenses. Sexuality may be expressed between any consenting partners. Dependency relationships will be diffused enough to allow fuller individual growth.

If one member of the extended family has a need to go outside the family to fill a need, this will not pose as great a threat to the family, for it is only one-tenth, rather than one-half, of the family moving outside of it. It is much less likely that one member of the family will be "stuck" at home with the children, for there is a strong chance that several adults will be home at the same time, able to share the load and provide some form of stimulation other than TV soap operas.

There are, obviously, many problems and unanswered questions involved in this kind of living. As with any "new" approach, it is impossible to give any empirical evidence that such approaches will work. There is a great deal of room for experimentation, and many experiments are being conducted.

I'd like to hear your thoughts on the general subject and get information on attempts being made to live some alternative family structures.

One thing which might be of interest to some of you. A letter I received today: "We are looking for people interested in sharing the expense of a 150-acre farm in Cape Breton (Canada). We are interested in an ecologically sound, subsistence, cooperative lifestyle. It's beautiful, cheap, and it's a mile from the ocean. If interested, contact Chris or Larry at 549-6756 — 163 Triangle St., Amherst.

In the coming weeks CULTERNATIVES will deal with many different aspects of cultural alternatives. If you really hate and want change or if you want Mother Earth News, stop by the Draft Counseling Office in 418E SU 2nd floor. You'll be able to take your chances because draft counseling doesn't cost, but it will be free, and many hearing aids.

St. Francis had a dream...

He dreamed that
He could be an instrument of God's peace
Where there was hatred he could sow love
Where there was injury, pardon
Where there was doubt, faith
Where there was despair, hope
Where there was darkness, light
Where there was sadness, joy.

J.V. Gymnasts Win Seventeenth In Row

By MICHAEL CUSACK
MDC Staff

The UMass junior varsity gymnasts stretched their winning streak to seventeen meets with a pair of wins over the weekend. The Little Redmen, who are undefeated over the past three seasons, are now looking to close out this season with a perfect slate.

On Friday, Coach Jerry Calkin's team edged the Springfield College JV's, 125.40-123.30. They continued their winning ways on Monday when they downed the Army plebes, 117.60-101.10, in a meet that featured freshmen only.

The Little Redmen had a tough time in disposing of Springfield, as their lead at intermission was only .8 of a point. However, Springfield began to falter during the second half, while UMass performed well enough to increase its .8 of a point lead to 2.1 points.

The first event, floor exercise, was won by King of Springfield, who scored an 8.0. However, brothers Bill and Paul Henry took second and third for UMass with respective scores of 7.55 and 6.85.

Springfield also won the top spot in sidehorse with the Smith's 8.2 routine, but UMass again took second and third, with Aubrey's 7.45 routine and Nelson's 6.75 score.

UMass had won the event totals for the first two events, but Springfield won the event total on the next event, still rings. The Little Chiefs took the top two places, while high scorer for UMass was co-captain Phil Aubrey, who had a 7.45, which was good for third place. At intermission the score read: UMass 62.85, Springfield 62.05.

The Little Redmen opened up the second half by capturing the longhorse event, as they won the event total by 1.4 points. Co-captain Bill Henry led all vaulters with an 8.4, while Battista took third for UMass with an 8.2.

Led by Chuck Schwartz and Phil Aubrey, the Little Redmen dominated parallel bars competition, as they won the event total by 1.4 points. Schwartz was first with a 7.05, while Aubrey was second with a 6.4.

The final event, high bar, was won by Springfield, but it was too late to overcome the lead the Little Redmen had built. Battista led all UMass performers in this event with a 7.1, which was good for second place. He also won the all-around event with a score of 40.35, while Aubrey of UMass was second., with a total of 39.10. The final score of the meet was: UMass 125.40, Springfield 123.30.

Using only seven freshmen, the UMass squad routed the Army plebes, 117.60-101.10. UMass took eleven out of the top eighteen places, as well as sweeping the top three positions in the all-around event.

UMass was led by all-around Rich Seikunas, who won the floor exercise and high bar events, placed second on sidehorse, rings, and parallel bars, and tied for third in vaulting, in addition to winning the all-around total with a score of 41.60.

All-around Chuck Schwartz turned in a good performance as he won the parallel bars event, and placed second on high bars as well as placing third in the all-around event. Jay Thomsen, the third UMass all-around had a good day, as he won the long horse event, placed second on floor and was third on parallel bars, as well as taking second place in the all around total. The top UMass scorers were rounded out by Briar Hassig, who led all competitors to win the sidehorse event.

The next meet for the Little Redmen will be tomorrow when they travel to Hanover, N.H. to take on Dartmouth. The UMass squad defeated Dartmouth last year, but a much tougher meet is anticipated this year.

Dartmouth is led by Tom Weigle and Jeff Rogers, who placed first and third respectively in the all-around totals at last year's New England Championships. They also have an excellent ringman freshman Mike Pancoe, who was Illinois State Ring Champ last year.

In previous outings, Dartmouth has scored close to 130 points, which means the Little Redmen will have to put everything together if they hope to keep their undefeated string intact.

The Little Redmen will close out their season on Wed., Feb. 24 when they will be hosted by the UNH Wildcats.

Redman Ski Team Remains Undefeated

By NANCY MARTIN
MDC Staff

The UMass ski team in their exceptionally fine form, made a clean sweep of the races held at Mittersill in N.H. this past weekend. The course was extremely difficult and the weather conditions made the course worse. It was pouring rain, the course was well rutted, and occasional patches of fog made the visability poor.

The two run slalom was hosted by Tufts University and proved to be the most challenging race thus far in the season.

Gordy Speed, skiing in the top position for the team, charged through the course to capture the first place team position and the second place league position.

Co-captain John Gray was seeded in the second racing position for the team, but because of dug up patches in the course and the seemingly endless rainstorm, he had difficulty manipulating the course and wasn't able to finish the race.

The other co-captain, Jim Latimer, was next to fire through the course because of an excellent run, claimed a second for the team and a third in the league.

Skiing in the fourth position, Goober Curran, putting in a tremendous time, clinched the fifth place league standing and a third place for the team. His strong, expert skiing ability led the Redmen on to an easy victory and enabled him to accept the team trophy.

The course by this time was well chewed up and the pelting rain had not decreased to any visable extent. The powerful Redmen had to have four skiers finish the race in order to win. Last to ski and probably the most dependable skier in the league, Chuck Walker flew down the course to secure the win for the team and place fourth for the team and tenth in the league.

This entitled the undefeated UMass team to yet another victory and the honor of having four skiers place in the top ten of the league standings.

Ted Martin, usually right up there with the winners, was not able to compete this weekend because of a bad case of the flu.

Meanwhile, due to the hazardous weather and course conditions, the Giant Slalom Sunday was cancelled and will be held at a later date.

To the other teams, this past weekend seemed like just another race, but to the UMass champions it was a challenge answered with a sure victory.

Matmen Sweep Quintangular Meet

By BOB GANLEY
MDC Staff

The UMass wrestling team, in the course of one afternoon, stretched its one meet winning streak to five, as the Redmen swept a quintangular meet which they hosted last Saturday at Boyden.

UMass won each dual meet decisively as it beat Trenton State 31-10, Western Maryland 34-4, Wesleyan 25-9, and Monmouth 35-5. The Redmen won 32 and tied three of the forty bouts they wrestled in combining for a total victory of 125-28.

Leading the Redmen were senior George Zguris, who won two decisions and two pins, junior Chris Hodson who had two pins, a decision, and won one by forfeit, and junior Sheldon Goldberg, who had three decisions and a forfeit. Junior Dave Amato also was a major contributor with two pins, one decision and a forfeit, while sophomores Ed Carlsson had two decisions, a forfeit and a tie for a 3-0-1 record for the day.

The remainder of the team didn't do badly either as Dave Reynolds won a pin and two decisions, Clay Jester had three decisions, Peter Rock had three decisions, Jim Godkin had a decision and two ties, and Kent Mignocci had two decisions. Tom Young also wrestled one match at 167 and helped the Redmen cause with a 7-3 victory.

The Redmen were in no trouble in any of the dual meets, as Amato, Reynolds, Goldberg, Jester and Rock won 17 out of the first twenty bouts and Coach Barr's talented group of heavyweights, Carlsson, Zguris and Hodson won 11 and tied one out of the twelve matches they wrestled.

The four victories upped the Redmen's seasonal record to 10-3-1, as the team begins to look like the one which was battling for number one New England honors a month ago. Goldberg continues to be the outstanding wrestler with a 12-0-1 record, but he is getting some competition from some others. George Zguris is showing the form which put him in the New England finals for the past two seasons and has upped his record to 8-0. Heavyweight Chris Hodson is 6-0, Dave Amato is 9-1 and Ed Carlsson is 8-2-2. Dave Reynolds returned to the lineup after being out with an injury and upped his season record to 6-1.

Coach Barr's grapplers go on the road again this week, travelling to Hanover, N.H. to face Dartmouth and then across town Saturday to meet Amherst, Tufts and UNH in a quadrangular meet. This one is tentative since Amherst and Tufts may back out. Also, the Redmen are trying to schedule a dual meet with New Hampshire, currently undefeated and ranked number one in New England.

After that it's away to WPI, home for BC and MIT, and then away to Central Conn. before the New England tourney at Lowell Tech the first weekend in March.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Virgo can confuse and cause consternation. Many claim they cannot live without Virgo and cannot live with a native of this sign. Virgo has much in common with Gemini. Virgo can be restless, temperamental and irritating. But Virgo can also be indispensable and very few can equal that claim.
